The interlinkage of the European Union and the WEU is vital and will assist in the development of a clear British goal—to ensure that common foreign and security policies in the European Union are credible. I welcome the fact that those are on an intergovernmental pillar, because I cannot see any other way in which countries can work together and, at the same time, guard their national interests. However, working together will lead to a much greater common appreciation of those common interests and there will be a much more instinctive preparedness to act and to ensure that the action is common. That has been held together with great difficultly over the former Yugoslavia but, thankfully, it has been done with great effectiveness.

The European Union has not diverged: it has held a common line. I admit that at times that has not been easy, but the important matter is that Western European countries have not fallen out with each other over events in the Balkans. Historically, that is worthy of note because the Balkans have often triggered strong antagonisms between the great western European powers.

[Mr. Taylor]

All that leads me to the conclusion that the Western European Union is about to enter a new and very important phase. As I said earlier, the Council of Europe plays an important role in bringing countries together to exchange ideas on how to reinforce democracy. The WEU can provide an important plank for Europe to gain great influence on enforcing security and making some credible effort to provide a collective security arrangement for those principal central European countries that will inevitably begin to join it. It will not be an immediate effort, because any country which joins the WEU and NATO would have to accept the article 5 obligation on collective security. That matter should be subject to careful consideration.

Meanwhile, there is co-operative security and a general commitment to look closely at the need to respond if any member of the partnership for peace or the North Atlantic Co-operation Council feels that its own security is threatened. Response is not automatic, but we can consider whether the threat is capable of being treated seriously. As a result of the Brussels summit, the WEU will have a serious and credible operational ability to respond.

In all those areas, we are moving in the right direction. I welcome the debate, and I hope that for the years to come we are signalling the direction of a Europe that is united politically and capable of looking after its own defence.

10.56 am

Mrs. Marion Roe (Broxbourne): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander), first, on having the good fortune to come top of the ballot for private Members' motions and, secondly, on having the good sense to choose a motion on the Council of Europe and the Western European Union. Little is said and known about both and the debate will help to inform people at Westminster and throughout the country about the significant contribution of WEU and the Council to freedom and democracy throughout Europe and beyond.

I served as a member of the United Kingdom delegation to both bodies for two and a half years and felt privileged to be part of a worthy all-party team. As a former member, I take this opportunity to pay tribute to members of both Houses of Parliament who take on senior roles in the Council of Europe and the Western European Union. The list of United Kingdom members in the information bulletin which has just been published shows the extensive commitment to the business of those organisations by our representatives. Their roles include chairmanships, vice-chairmanships and rapporteurs.

I join other hon. Members in giving particular recognition to my noble Friend Lord Finsberg, who is the leader of our delegation. He enjoys considerable status, not only in our delegation, but in the delegations of other countries because he is a previous president and vice-president of the assemblies of the Council of Europe and the Western European Union.

During my time with the team, I was deeply impressed by my noble Friend's abilities, his dedication to duty and the impressive way in which he presented to our continental colleagues the rather British method of doing things and for which he has gained enormous respect. For example, when he was in the chair for an Assembly meeting it started on time. I can remember the first assembly meeting that he chaired, when he informed members that they were to be given only seven minutes each in which to make their case, thus giving every member on the long list of those wishing to speak an opportunity to gain the attention of the assembly and to put his or her case.

The first speaker began—one of our very good continental friends—and he was totally amazed when Lord Finsberg, or Sir Geoffrey as he was known then, stopped him in mid-flow after exactly seven minutes, switched off the microphone and informed everyone that he was moving on to the next speaker. By the time the fourth or fifth speaker had been called, everyone had certainly got the message. To the delight of all the speakers on the chairman's list, including me, we were all called to make our contribution to the debate that morning. When Sir Geoffrey brought the business to a close, there was a loud cheer from everyone in the assembly on the way in which he had handled the meeting.

In the corridor shortly afterwards, on my way back to the United Kingdom delegation office, I bumped into one of our French colleagues who was notorious for making very long, boring and repetitive speeches. He was full of enthusiasm for Sir Geoffrey's chamber discipline, much to the relief of all his colleagues. The very British way of fairness and an even-handed approach to procedure was applauded by all.

Another colleague who has also taken a senior role in WEU is my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) and I pay tribute to him for the very important work that he is doing and congratulate him on his role as President.

Many important points have been made already by hon. Members on both sides of the House and I shall not repeat them. There are two areas in the work of the Council of Europe on which I would like to focus. The first involves the role of the COE in connection with the demise of communism in central and eastern European countries and the important support that the Council of Europe is giving to those emerging democracies.

The collapse of the old Soviet empire was the most liberating moment in European history this century. I think that few of us will forget the joy and enthusiasm which accompanied the fall of the Berlin wall and the spread of freedom to central Europe. Old nation states have reappeared after being submerged for half a century. The Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland and Slovakia—the Visegrad Four—have regained control of their destinies. They are enthusiastically embracing democracy and are looking to the west for assistance. However, they have seen the Soviet Union break into a patchwork of states, some with civil war, with rising tensions between Russia and the Ukraine. I am sure that we all appreciate why the Visegrad Four feel vulnerable. That is why I am delighted that they have joined the Council of Europe, along with a number of other former communist countries.

The Council of Europe offers a broad area of political debate, funds programmes of co-operation and assistance, participates in cultural and educational projects and, perhaps most important of all, as my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Sir D. Thompson) has acknowledged, is a stepping stone towards involvement in other major European institutions. Any serious applicant to the European Union is expected to ratify the Council's European convention on human rights. The other countries joining the Council of Europe include Bulgaria, Romania, Slovenia and, among the Baltic states, Estonia and Lithuania.

At the same time, the Western European Union has established a forum for security consultation to bring together WEU members and the states of eastern Europe. These are likely to lead to a new affiliate WEU status consistent with NATO'S partnership for peace. It is clear that, step by step, the states of central Europe are being welcomed into our western European institutions. There is no doubt that the Council of Europe is playing a key role in helping to give them the appropriate support for stability and cohesion—two priceless assets for which they yearn.

I raise a second point on a totally different topic: the European Pharmacopoeia. As chairman of the Select Committee on Health, I was most interested to read in the March edition of the Council of Europe magazine Forum about the important work of this body. The magazine's special section draws attention to the fact that in 1964 eight countries agreed that harmonising their drugs legislation was in everyone's interest. Today, more than 20 states are involved in preparing and enforcing a whole series of common standards—one way of guaranteeing the quality of medicines currently on sale in Europe. The European Pharmacopoeia is also one of the European drugs industry's main weapons in its fight against American and Japanese competition.

From a legal point of view, the European Pharmacopoeia is unique in that it is the only one of its kind to be supranational in scope, which means that it has the force of law in all the countries that have signed the convention. In fact, its influence extends considerably further—it serves as a reference for many countries with cultural or historical links to one or other of the signatories. The Council of Europe is thus making its contribution to the safety of medicines which, in turn, means greater protection for the European citizen, coupled with support for the European pharmaceutical industry. I am sure that the House wishes to join me in registering pleasure that the convention on the elaboration of a European Pharmacopoeia is celebrating its 30th anniversary this year.

Finally, I place on record my admiration for the good cross-party working relationship that exists in the COE and WEU United Kingdom team. I am aware that there is a problem at the moment involving attendance at meetings and that the lack of pairing arrangements has curbed Members' trips across the channel to undertake their duties. I am sad that the British delegation is not making its very considerable contribution to the deliberations of those organisations at the moment. I know that our many continental friends are missing their wisdom and co-operation and I hope that the problem can be resolved as soon as possible so that the United Kingdom group can take its rightful place at the centre of debate and discussion and exert its considerable influence on decision making.

11.8 am

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): I, too, congratulate the hon. Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on choosing this subject for debate and on winning the ballot. It is, after all, a raffle which we should all like to win. I think that he was very astute in choosing to debate this subject.

It is somewhat regrettable that the Government do not find time to have a regular debate on the work of the Council of Europe and the Western European Union. All Members of Parliament—whether from the Opposition or the Government side of the House—are appointed as members of the British delegation with a letter from the Prime Minister's office. Since we represent the British Parliament in those parliamentary assemblies abroad, I think that it is incumbent on the Government to find time for us to report to the House about what we do. We should not have to rely on the astuteness and wisdom of the hon. Member for Newark.

I thoroughly enjoy my membership of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe and I wear the 12-star button in my lapel. It is usually incorrectly identified as the flag of the European Union. On 5 May, we shall celebrate the anniversary of the signing of the statute of the Council of Europe in 1949. Perhaps the Minister, the hon. Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Mr. Lennox-Boyd), can spare a moment from his important deliberations to listen to what I am saying—[Interruption.]

I am deeply grateful to the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) for drawing the Minister's attention to the fact that I am trying to address him through you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It would be helpful and appreciated if, on 5 May, the flag of the Council of Europe—the 12-star flag that is often wrongly identified as the flag of the European Union—could be flown in the capital city on the anniversary of the Council's foundation. Of course, 5 May is also local election day, so no doubt the Minister will have things to mourn, but there could be a cause to celebrate and to unite both sides of the House.

I find working on Council of Europe committees an excellent antidote to the introspection and parochialism of this place. It is amazing that just a short journey takes one, almost literally, into a different world. Matters that concern us so much in the House seem to have no reverberations outside it, certainly not beyond our shores. One can be in Strasbourg during the parliamentary assembly and have to struggle hard to find out what is happening in this place. One can consider problems on a broader canvas in the wider world. That is intellectually refreshing for those of us fortunate enough to be members of the Council of Europe and parliamentary assembly.

The hon. Member for Broxbourne mentioned the fact that few people outside—and not many inside—this place know much about the Council of Europe. It is not my function to go through the handbook of its institutions, but it is worth reminding colleagues on both sides of the House of the way in which we go about securing delegations. The Opposition elect their delegation via the regional groupings, while I understand that the Conservatives make direct appointments—no doubt appointments of the Prime Minister, closely advised by the Whips. So be it.

When I was first elected and arrived in our delegation offices in Strasbourg I was greeted by the then Conservative Member for Streatham, who said, "What are you doing here? This is a place for people who are finished." I found that remark acutely depressing; when I looked around I realised that he was speaking more than a germ of truth—[Laughter.] Let me develop my argument. I do not think that it is incumbent on Conservative Members, particularly members of the delegation, to laugh at what was said by a member of the Conservative party. I mean no disrespect to anyone on the delegation. The former Member for Streatham revealed an element of truth.

[Mr. Tony Banks]

Being a member of the delegation seems to be regarded by Conservatives as a reward for past services—so be it. Everyone is entitled to a reward, but in this case the reward is for past services. Opposition Members have to choose. The rules of the parliamentary Labour party do not allow anyone to be a member of the delegation to the Council of Europe and be a member of the Front-Bench team.

I was placed in the invidious position recently of having to make a choice between remaining in the delegation to the Council of Europe parliamentary assembly or coming off the Front Bench. I chose to come off the Front Bench, not because I am totally devoid of party political ambition —although some might think that my occasional suicidal forays would suggest that I am—but because I find the work of the Council of Europe so interesting. It enables me to see problems in the round, gives me a greater perspective on the country's political problems and allows me to appreciate more keenly the problems and possibilities of Europe as a whole. I made that choice, but I do not think that I should have been forced into the position of having to make that choice.

Other member countries seem to regard their delegations more seriously than we do. Many of my hon. Friends, and perhaps Conservative Members as well, think that one becomes a member of the Council of Europe because it is a junket or a boondoggle, as the Americans say. They seem to think that the only reason why we are members is that we like tripping and clocking up air miles —a little advantage that I understand the Government have recently been shutting off. It is not like that, but it is because we are never given the opportunity to debate in the House what we do as a delegation on behalf of this place that some of the misconceptions arise.

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): If the hon. Gentleman thinks that the organisation is so important—as I believe we all do—what steps is he taking to put pressure on the Opposition to ensure that co-operation is re-established so that the delegations can continue to go to Europe?

Mr. Banks: The hon. Gentleman asks a good question. I cannot reveal—indeed, I do not want to reveal in the presence of the Opposition deputy Chief Whip—what is going on. I assure the hon. Gentleman that the leader of the Labour delegation, my hon. Friend the Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy), who is present on the Front Bench, has made a series of representations. We recognise that considerations in this place must be taken into account, but there are also wider considerations and our European relationships are being affected.

Our colleagues on the other side of the channel do not understand what is going on, and a few people here do not understand either. I shall not say what is going on—the Opposition deputy Chief Whip is a wise old bird who understands exactly what is going on. I hope that, eventually, the Conservative Government will recognise the validity of our case and concede the various arguments that we are making so that we can restore normal relations as soon as possible.

To return to the way in which national Parliaments treat their delegations to the Council of Europe, there is far more of a procession between the national delegations of other countries and ministerial office than there is on all sides of our British delegation. Mr. Pangalos—a Greek socialist —is now the Foreign Minister of Greece. When the Foreign Ministers meet, he chairs the Council. There have been examples of people having gone from their national delegations to high office in their own Governments. We do not seem to do that, which shows that this place gives membership of the Council of Europe low priority. That is wrong, and not simply because I happen to be a member of it. It is wrong in terms of the work that the Council of Europe carries out and the role that it plays in building a wider Europe—the sort of subjects that have been discussed by hon. Members on both sides of the House this morning.

The hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) mentioned political groupings. He said that, although we go as a British delegation, we fall into our respective party groups, which is self-evidently true. But it is also true that, within our national groups and delegations, we manage to achieve a much wider consensus in Strasbourg than in Westminster. That is partly because we have to operate with other national delegations and political groups, and the need to find a consensus is always present. But here there is no need to find a consensus.

Our system is not about finding a consensus, but about winning a vote. As long as there are enough votes to achieve victory, it does not matter whether consensus is achieved, and that damages this place in many respects. We are unable to proceed on the basis of mutual agreement on broad issues. It is a confrontational place. The positioning of the parties places us in face-to-face confrontation. Rather like spectators at a football match, the pitch is below us and we are up in the Kop. We cheer our own team even if they play badly. As a result, we lose something. I do not find the word "consensus" weak, although some of my colleagues do.

When I was a trade union official, consensus meant achieving, through negotiation, an agreement that maximised the achievement of what both sides wanted. Consensus, to my mind, is not a weak word in that sense. It is a way of living. Life is a consensus, for God's sake. We try to achieve what we want, but we have to make concessions from time to time. However, in the House it is "take no prisoners." Although that might be good fun from a party-political point of view, I wonder at times how much it advances the national interest—and I mean genuinely the national interest, rather than narrow party interests.

The last point that I shall make about consensus is that I am pleasantly surprised from time to time by the amount of agreement that we can achieve. I see former Conservative Ministers, Tory Members, signing up to things that I imagine they would never be prepared to support if the matter came back to the House. The fact that so much that we do in the Council of Europe is never rehearsed here might be what enables them, as it were, to lead a double life. I do not know.

Mrs. Roe: When the hon. Gentleman speaks about consensus, does he agree that there is a forum in the House where we try to get consensus, and that is the Select Committee system? There Members of all parties work together on a specific inquiry and try to reach a conclusion where there is consensus—general agreement.

Mr. Banks: I agree with the hon. Lady and I pay tribute to her work as Chair of the Health Select Committee. It is an interesting point because, when we have to produce something that is broadly in conformity with the views of the whole Committee, we are able to achieve consensus. It is obviously not working in the Home Affairs Select Committee with regard to the financing of political parties, so it will not work in every instance, but it tends to work broadly if we want it to work.

Perhaps that is why the Select Committees receive far more public respect outside the House than do proceedings on the Floor of the House of Commons. There are lessons to learn there. Perhaps we fall into traditional roles when we get into the Chamber. One listens to an argument of a Member on the other side and thinks, "That is not a bad argument", and vice versa, but one does not translate that into one's voting pattern. It is not a debating Chamber in that sense. We do not walk in to listen to the ebb and flow of debate and think, "That is very good", and then defy our party Whips and walk into a different Lobby. One would not survive very long, and nor would the party system, in this place if that were to happen.

The stark contrast between the work on the Council of Europe parliamentary assembly and the work that we do here always comes home to me. I trust that I am not considered a weak-minded individual. I do not find consensus a frightening concept. I like the constructive nature of the debates that we have in the Council of Europe and the way in which we can strip away so much of the party rhetoric that goes on here which, frankly, is intellectually demeaning and does not advance the cause of either side very much.

That is all by way of a digression actually, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I allowed myself to be enticed by Conservative Members. Wait until the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) reads my speech—because he will, I can assure you.

The role of the Council of Europe received an enormous boost with the developments in eastern Europe in the mid-1980s and has gathered considerable pace since as country after country seeks to democratise its political institutions. That provides an enormous challenge for Europe and an enormous and exciting challenge for the Council of Europe. The countries of eastern Europe need all the economic and political help that we can give them.

It is interesting to note that the end of the cold war has led to an upsurge in a number of exceedingly dangerous regional conflicts, but the battleground in Europe has shifted from the military to the political and the economic. Although Conservative and Opposition Members have identified real dangers, especially in respect of the possible break-up of Russia and the problems in the Ukraine, it is not for us simply to stand on the sidelines wringing our hands. They will be real difficulties for us, not just for them. In those circumstances, far more positive action is necessary from the western democracies to give assistance to the emerging eastern democracies—economic and political action, but especially economic at the moment, to ensure that those newly emerging democracies in eastern Europe do not disintegrate socially and politically.

That provides the opportunity for the Council of Europe to fulfil its role as the democratic training ground of Europe. That is how I regard the Council of Europe—as a democratic training ground, especially for eastern Europe in terms of political democracy and human rights. It is true that, of the 32 countries that are now members of the Council of Europe, those new entrants to the democratic family of nations regard the Council of Europe as an essential stepping stone to the European Union. The first thing that they do is line up to join the Council of Europe.

That is one of the arguments that I use when members of the Labour party ask, "What is the point of the thing?" I can tell them that the eastern European countries see the point of it. That is why they immediately line up to join the Council of Europe: because they regard it as the essential stepping stone to the wider Europe as we expand the European Union. Of course, it is inconceivable that any country should or could join the European Union now without first having been and proven itself a good member of the Council of Europe.

I shall develop two points that have been mentioned before. Should we expect applicant countries to be fully democratic before they join the Council of Europe? That argument has gone on regularly in the parliamentary assembly and in the political affairs committee. We set, rightly, high standards of membership for the Council of Europe. That is what makes it so strong. However, there is also an argument that says: should not we throw our democratic embrace around the newly emerging democracies to reinforce the democratic elements in those societies? Or do we stand by and say, "Only when you can match up to the mature democratic standards of western Europe will you be allowed to be a full participating member of the Council of Europe parliamentary assembly"?

That is a dilemma for us. We do not want to diminish the democratic standards of the Council of Europe, but we do not want the flickering flames of democracy in eastern Europe to disappear under the reaction that could take place as people's great expectations at the overthrow of totalitarianism are frustrated and thwarted by what they see coming afterwards.

Sir Russell Johnston: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it does not help if Britain gets itself into the position of arguing against a direct right of appeal for the individual to the European Court of Human Rights?

Mr. Banks: Yes. That is another discussion that is going on in the Council of Europe. It illustrates the fact that our western democracies are by no means perfect, in terms of either democratic institutions or human rights. The fact that the British Government have taken the position that they have does not look good. It sends the wrong message. All right, so perhaps we feel—I will take the position of the British Government for a few minutes in this new consensual feeling that has overwhelmed me—that British citizens have adequate and other protections in our parliamentary or legal systems. That might be the Conservatives' argument, but it could be used by less democratic Governments in other parts of Europe to say, "Here is a mature British democracy doing it, so it cannot be wrong, can it?" It can be wrong and it is wrong. That is why it is essential for the British Government to rethink the position. If not, we shall send out the wrong messages.

Sir Donald Thompson: The hon. Gentleman has had a distinguished career in the Council of Europe with new European nations, and he will know that those new nations are sitting down in committees in their own capitals and making up the constitution. They are saying, "Let us try this bit", "Let us try that bit", and "Let us try the other bit", in a way that one would have thought impossible five years ago. They are sitting there and doing it. Surely, then, while they are doing that they are saying, "We need to get into the Council of Europe. Let us write that bit in." So we must be as resolute as possible on the Council of Europe to ensure that those bits, which protect citizens at all levels, are put in.

Mr. Banks: I agree with the hon. Gentleman. It is interesting that the new nations are all producing written constitutions. We still do not have one in Britain. Perhaps we could examine our credentials to see whether we qualify as a truly democratic nation. We are requiring a number of things from those eastern European countries that we do not even have in this country, such as a Bill of Rights and a written constitution.

Mr. Duncan: No way.

Mr. Banks: The hon. Gentleman says "No way". That might be the case now, but a great movement going on outside this place will eventually influence us and lead us to having a written constitution and a Bill of Rights. But that is an argument for another day.

It is intriguing to see what is happening in those countries. Only when I went to Lithuania and sat in on several such discussions did I realise how much assistance they need. Simple matters such as organising political parties or registers of electors had never before occurred in the sense that we know it. Those countries need some basic know-how, which we can give them, and it seems right to do so through the Council of Europe.

My second point was raised by the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber—where does Europe end on the map? It must end somewhere. The argument has been going on in the Council's political affairs committee. The Asian republics of the former Soviet Union cannot be classified as European, or we would be left with the narrows of the Baring straits in Alaska and we would move down Canada and into the United States. We all know that the world is round—at least Opposition Members know it, although there may be a few flat-earthists left on the Government Benches—but we must draw a line, or the Council of Europe will end up encompassing the world. That is an interesting concept, but a line must be drawn.

The fact that Israel has been granted observer status sometimes make me feel that we have stepped over a line that we should not have stepped over. I understand the reasons for that in the past, but it sends out confusing messages to those who wish to join the Council of Europe, particularly when we are discussing the need for a line that defines Europe on the map, with membership not being available to countries on the wrong side of that line. However, those countries should be able to take up observer status.

The Council of Europe could take on board two further functions. Because of its support for human rights, it could easily act as the United Nations regional representative in that vital area of concern. If we are to have a UN commission for human rights, the duplication of those responsibilities through different institutions would cost an enormous amount and would not necessarily be efficient. The UN could build on the Council of Europe's role in Europe as the upholder, preserver and guardian of human rights in our part of the globe.

The second function that the Council of Europe could usefully perform is to act as a co-ordinator of election monitoring. For example, every national institution and Parliament in Europe was asked to send observers to Russia's elections. It can get confusing. The Council of Europe is the obvious umbrella organisation to co-ordinate those observers of elections in eastern Europe and elsewhere.

May I say to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber that it is interesting to see how the new eastern European democracies are sending delegations to the Council of Europe. I am not particularly alarmed at the thought of Vladimir Zhirinovsky turning up at the Council of Europe. He is a complete nutter, but it may be a sign of an emerging and healthy democracy that they can afford to elect a semi-lunatic. After all, we do it here fairly regularly. In those circumstances, we should not be too concerned that that individual may turn up. Perhaps we could teach him something; if not, we could organise a fairly good multinational fight around him.

I have been very privileged—it is an overused word in politics, but I feel genuinely privileged—to have been a member of the Council of Europe and Western European Union parliamentary assemblies for a few years now. I have been particularly privileged to listen to some distinguished heads of government and state from around Europe addressing the parliamentary assemblies. It was great to be able to ask Helmut Kohl a question and to corner Mrs. Brundtland from Norway about Norway's irresponsible attitude towards whaling. She went totally nuclear, but Conservative and Labour Members thoroughly enjoyed it. Geoffrey Finsberg, my hon. Friend the Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) and I felt that we were exercising democracy. Mrs. Gro Harlem Brundtland did not share our enthusiasm and enjoyment, but it was a privilege to be able to do it.

The greatest moment of my membership of the Council of Europe was in May 1989 when I heard Mikhail Gorbachev, then President of the Soviet Union, speak to the parliamentary assembly. He chose to address us rather than the European Union. He talked about a Europe that stretches from the Atlantic to the Urals and about the common European home. He created, as he and a number of others can, a vision of a united Europe. Although we have our difficulties, it was exciting to hear him talking in those terms. He was the leader of what many people in this country saw as the enemy, addressing us and discussing our common ideals, common purposes and common European home. That was a high spot for me. The Council of Europe represents the basis for that common European home and it is built on the firmest foundations.

The Council of Europe deserves our full support and enthusiastic participation. I congratulate the hon. Member for Newark on choosing this subject for debate. I only hope that, in future, the Government will debate it regularly in Government time.

Mr. Peter Luff (Worcester): On the last occasion that I spoke at length in this place on a European matter I was wearing a tie similar to that worn today by the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston)—the tie of the Council of Europe. On that occasion, the tie got more comment than my speech, so I decided to wear a more politically neutral tie today.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) who introduced the debate. He rightly referred to the Labour party's attitude to non co-operation in this place at present, which is frustrating hon. Members' contribution to the Council of Europe and Western European Union. The Opposition's activity sits ill with their claim to be a good European party. A Labour Front-Bench Member recently advocated that we should pass into British law a measure that he knew was contrary to a treaty that we had signed, on the ground that it would take a long time for the treaty to catch up with us and for the courts to hear the complaint that would flow from passing that measure into law.

It is all very well for the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) to lambast the Government for not having a regular debate on this subject. The groaning Opposition Benches hardly pay testimony to his call for such a debate. I should have much more sympathy for that call if the Labour party at least allowed the institutions to run effectively. I noticed that the Labour Deputy Chief Whip carefully took on board his remarks on that subject and I hope that he will bear them in mind.

The hon. Member for Newham, North-West disingenuously suggested that a list of demands were being made by the Leader of the Opposition. From this side, it looks rather like the classic mistake of the trade union negotiator who gets into a dispute and does not know how to get out of it. I had more sympathy for much of the rest of his speech and agreed with the general thrust of what he said. I understand his concern about consensus and was interested in what he said about the Council of Europe in that respect. Here we tend to work towards the same aim, but use a different process of reconciliation—a more robust word which would command more respect on these Benches—in an attempt to reconcile conflicting points of view rather than work towards some arbitrary consensus.

The main purpose of my remarks is to discuss the context of the institutions that are the subject of the motion and to examine whether the institutional structures of the Council of Europe, the Western European Union and the European Union itself—I hope that that will be a subject for a later debate in which I would also wish to take part—are appropriate for the Europe of the future.

It is important to pause and examine the state of modern Europe. Obviously, the whole world rejoiced when communism collapsed in Europe, and rightly so. It was—as I think is agreed on both sides of the House—a repulsive creed which doomed millions of our fellow citizens of Europe to live in repression and fear. The creed lives on in some parts of the world—noticeably in China—but in Europe and in most of the rest of the world, it is firmly finished.

For the countries of eastern Europe, and indeed for the whole world, that is obviously a cause for great rejoicing, but it has an effect on the drive towards peace in many other regions. For example, in the middle east the collapse of the Soviet Union has played a major part in pushing Syria towards considering the previously unconsiderable—the prospect of peace with Israel. In a world with only one super-power, Syria cannot afford to be an enemy of that super-power. The imperative for peace around the world grows as a direct result of the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe.

Sir Donald Thompson: May I take my hon. Friend back—he cannot possibly remember—to the end of the war, when the Council of Europe began under the instigation of Winston Churchill? He went to Strasbourg and asked where the Germans were. The other countries said that the war had just finished. Churchill said that peace had just begun and that we could not have a Council of Europe without the Germans. Now, we cannot have a Council of Europe without those countries that were formerly communist.

Mr. Luff: I associate myself entirely with the wise remarks of my hon. Friend. He rightly draws attention to the constantly far-sighted attitude of the former distinguished leader of our party, Mr. Churchill, in making those remarks at that time.

Having expressed some optimism about the effects of the collapse of the Soviet Union on places such as the middle east, I know that it is acknowledged generally that that same collapse has made local conflicts in Europe and elsewhere more likely. Civil wars may increase in number, but global conflict, at least, seems less likely. For Britain, the United States and the rest of Europe, the collapse of communism is producing a whole set of problems which we did not foresee when the Berlin wall came tumbling down.

As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said to the Royal College of Defence Studies in London on 8 December:

> "Across history, the defeat of empires has led to elation—often followed by confusion among the victors. Victories which change the old truths are disquieting. It is tempting to portray our old enemies as the source of all our insecurity. But life is not so simple.
> The collapse of the Soviet Empire, unlike the collapse of most previous Empires, did not need a decisive battle. It was an implosion rather an explosion. But the disappearance of one of the most implacable enemies the countries of Europe have ever faced has presented us with a new set of challenges."

Those challenges are real and are more wide ranging than is often realised.

In a funny way, the Soviet Union gave western Europe its own identity. It gave us an identity by defining the opposite of liberal western democracy. There is now consensus that the end of communism in mainland Europe has had one important consequence. The way in which the Germans chose to re-unify has thrown the rest of the European economy into turmoil. I am glad to say that that is a turmoil from which Britain seems to be emerging; indeed, already has emerged. However, that factor was damaging.

Much more fundamental—where the institutions of the Council of Europe and the WEU have an important role to play—is the loss of the moral comparison for western liberal democratic capitalism. In the west, we have always been able to judge our success and our freedom relative to our communist neighbours. Communism was the common enemy by which we measured the health of our society. Its demise has robbed us of that powerful weapon. We are now forced to argue the details of how we run our affairs in Britain and in the rest of Europe without that overwhelming argument, based on the evils of the old, totalitarian alternative. The major failures of western liberal democracies, such as high unemployment, will be much harder for us to explain away when we cannot remind people of the unpalatable consequences of the only real alternative.

The implications of that change are huge. I believe that the Council of Europe and the WEU have a major role to play in addressing them. I am not for a minute regretting the end of communism in Europe. I have always been a firm believer that Marks and Spencer is better than Marx and Engels. However, there is a difficult consequence for political debate in western Europe as a direct result of the collapse of the Berlin wall. That factor lies in large part behind the collapse of confidence among the electors of many European and other countries in the way in which we run our political society. They have lost sight of the alternative.

As Winston Churchill remarked in the House in November 1947:

"No one pretends that democracy is perfect or all-wise. Indeed, it has been said that democracy is the worst form of Government except all those other forms that have been tried from time to time;"—[Official Report, 11 November 1947; Vol. 444, c. 206.]

He was right. That cautionary advice now lacks so much power, because the alternative to democracy has disappeared.

We are very fortunate that the institutions of Europe have developed in a happy and fortuitous way in which to help us to address that problem. It is an accidental tripod of institutions. The Council of Europe, the WEU and the European Union—or the European Community as I still prefer to call it—exist to address the problems facing Europe.

Post-communist Europe has four basic organisational needs. First, the European Community, serves the needs of free trade, co-operation in other areas of strong mutual advantage, the underpinning of democracy in countries which only recently were far from democratic—Spain, Greece, Portugal—and most importantly, the reduction in the likelihood of war between those countries, especially between France and Germany.

Another need has emerged more recently since the end of the cold war: to provide an effective defence structure to maintain the security of our continent and to provide the European pillar for the Atlantic alliance.

Thirdly, a point of which the hon. Member for Newham, North-West made a great deal, with which I agree, there is the need for a forum for debate and involvement of the wider Europe, not only eastern Europe, but some of the countries such as Turkey on the fringe of Europe whose aspiration is to be part of the EU in due course. Those countries may involve themselves in that democratic debate and in that democratic training ground of which the hon. Gentleman spoke so accurately.

There is a fourth need. It is a mechanism for Europe —the cradle of western civilisation—to ensure that the values of civilisation, especially with regard to human rights, are respected across the whole continent of Europe. That is an important function.

My hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) outlined many of the agreements, organisations and structures that exist, particularly in the defence field. However, the basic structure that has emerged is a simple one: the European Union, the Western European Union and—to couple the third and fourth needs: a democratic training ground and the protection of human rights—the Council of Europe, together with its related activity in the European Commission of Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights. That three-legged structure—we are always told that three-legged structures are the most stable—has happened almost by accident. One of those legs, the Western European Union, could so easily have been knocked away, yet it was not.

I shall look first at the Council of Europe. The Council, about which I shall not add much to what many hon. Members have already said, seems to have secured for itself a firm future. Its large membership of 32 full members, nine countries with the rather charming status of special guests of the Council of Europe and one observer, Israel, has a proven track record. There is now general consensus that its role is invaluable.

The aspect of its work that is noted in the motion moved by my hon. Friend the Member for Newark—to protect minorities and human rights—has possibly attracted the most interest. It is in that respect that the Council of Europe often gets itself into hot water in this country. Sometimes, the United Kingdom and our voters feel that we have a poor record at the European Court of Human Rights.

It is true that many of the applications to the Court have come from the United Kingdom, but the vast majority of those applications have been judged to be inadmissible. One reason why a large number of United Kingdom cases go to the Court is that the convention has not been incorporated in United Kingdom domestic law. I heard what the hon. Member for Newham, North-West said on the subject of Bills of rights. That is as it may be—I am no great enthusiast for written constitutions.

Many complaints are taken to the European Court of Human Rights simply because there are no domestic remedies. Since 1981, only 20 cases that have come before the European Court of Human Rights relating to the United Kingdom Government have been judged to be violations of human rights. That is against the background in the United Kingdom over the past three years of an average of 939 cases a year being referred to the European Commission of Human Rights. It is interesting that France has a higher average figure of 1,464.

The European Court of Human Rights has a valuable and important role to play in the structure of Europe. Sometimes, when Tory Members complain about the interfering nature of the Court, as I have heard them do, they do not understand that simply because a case is referred to the Court does not mean that the Court will have any sympathy for it. Britain's record is much better than that.

In the most recent year for which I have figures a total of 48 judgments were made by the Court; in 27 cases the Court reached the conclusion that there had been at least one violation of human rights. The United Kingdom had three judgments made by the Court, and in only one was there found a violation. Therefore, we should have some confidence that the European Court is not the monster that it sometimes seems to be; indeed, it is a valuable protection of human rights throughout the whole of the European house.

Having had some reservations about other aspects of the work of the Council of Europe, I must admit that perhaps I was guilty to some extent of the sin referred to by several hon. Members as regarding the Council as a "boondoggle" —I think that was the word used by the hon. Member for Newham, North-West. Much of what I have heard today has at least partly reassured me. My hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) talked about the European Pharmacopoeia. That seems to be a valuable and practical example of the work that such an institution can perform.

It is also worth noting that the Council of Europe is not a particularly expensive institution. The United Kingdom's contribution to the work of the Council of Europe came to some £15 million in the most recent year for which figures are available. That does not mean to say that we can be entirely relaxed about the way in which the Council handles those funds. Hon. Members will be intrigued by a report in the Financial Times of 11 December 1993. I quote:

"European fund for refugees criticised in report. A fund owned by 21 European governments to help refugees evolved into a substantial investor in international money markets and provided lavish rewards for its staff . . . The report by accountants Castel Jacquet Ernst and Young into the activities of the Council of Europe's Social Fund says it exercised insufficient care in monitoring how its loans, which totalled Ecu6.7bn (£5.1bn) at the end of 1992, were used.

A loan from the fund had, for example, been used to finance the building of a Sheraton hotel in Milan, according to Mrs. Paule Dufour, president of the fund's governing body, who has been trying to reform the institutions.

The Ernst report also discloses that cheap mortgages for employees were used for property speculation and executives were allowed to make large withdrawals from a pension fund while retaining their jobs."

That shows how important it is for the British delegation to get back to the Council of Europe and do their job of scrutinising the work of the Council. I hope that that will be possible soon.

I turn to the work of the Western European Union. Against the background of the collapse of communism, the question that we must ask ourselves is to what extent Russia is a threat to European security. It is a fact that the Russian federation is the only state which has the military potential to commit an act of aggression on any massive scale against our country and is not firmly aligned with the United Kingdom. Similarly, it is the only state which has the potential to commit massive aggression against any NATO member. The Russian federation is unique in Europe in that it possesses both nuclear weapons and the ability to arm and equip peacetime armed forces which, even when current reductions have worked through, are likely to number more than 1 million men.

The question for British policy planners is whether there is a residual threat from the Russian federation—the old threat from the Russian bear which has haunted British foreign policy down the decades. That gives rise to dilemmas in Britain. Should NATO's mutual security commitments be extended to any state in eastern Europe, including the Baltic republics?

I am optimistic about the Russian federation. The fact that the buffer states of the old Warsaw pact are no longer there—or, at least, are now in a different guise—reduces substantially the threat that we face from the Russian federation. Russia is substantially smaller, but it remains a great power.

Kenneth Waltz, in an article on the emerging structure of international politics in the International Security Review last year wrote:

"The ability of Russia to play a military role beyond its borders is low, yet nuclear weapons ensure that no state can challenge it. Short of disintegration, Russia will remain a great power—indeed a great defensive power, as the Russian and Soviet states were through most of their history."

Inevitably, the ghost of Vladimir Zhirinovsky haunts the debate. However, I agree with Neil Malcolm, who wrote in World Today earlier this year:

"The possibility cannot be excluded that sections of disenfranchised industrialists will seek to form an alliance with extremist politicians such as Zhirinovsky and their numerous supporters in the military. However, this is a concern for the future, and it is important not to allow alarm at the aggressive non-imperialist rhetoric of the extreme right to colour our interpretation of the increased assertiveness which has been evident for at least the last 12 months. What we have seen so far is most likely not the "evil empire" getting ready to strike back, but rather Russia feeling its way towards the role of a "normal" regional power."

It seems that Neil Malcolm endorses the view of the hon. Member for Newham, North-West that electing lunatics is a sign of good health in a democracy.

It is inevitable that eastern Europe will feel insecure. Most of the countries there have experienced more than 40 years of Soviet military occupation or domination. It is more likely that the challenges that those countries face will be more like those faced by the old Yugoslavia. There will be regional and local conflicts, and not the kind of threat that used to be posed from the existence of a strong Warsaw pact.

The WEU has a crucial role to play in this area. It is a fascinating thought that the WEU itself was nearly thrown away. It was founded in 1948 by the United Kingdom, France and the three Benelux countries, who committed themselves to collective security. Indeed, I am informed that the commitments to collective security in the treaty are stronger than the commitments contained in the North Atlantic treaty.

The WEU was a demonstration of the willingness of those five countries to co-operate in European security, and it played an important part in drawing the United States into the defence of Europe and in the formation of NATO itself in 1949. The WEU could have been wound up, but it was not, and that was to become a welcome oversight.

I should like to take credit for this metaphor myself, but it properly lies with the author of the House of Commons Library background paper No.278, which was published in 1991 and said:

"the WEU has appeared as the jack-in-the-box of post-war european security, constantly appearing on the diplomatic agenda in a new guise."

First, in 1954, it helped draw Germany and Italy into NATO. In the late 1970s and 1980s, it became apparent that the WEU could be used to strengthen the European contribution to NATO, leading to the formal reactivation of the WEU in 1984. Subsequently, it has helped to permit the involvement of France in military activity in relation to both the Iran-Iraq and Gulf wars. The WEU now provides the perfect vehicle for a European defence identity outside the European Union, and for a European pillar of the North Atlantic treaty. I welcome that whole-heartedly. I would have had severe reservations about giving the European Commission and the European Union a significant defence role. The jack-in-the-box popped up to serve its useful purpose again. The WEU's importance cannot be underestimated.

One question in my mind is whether we have the right jack for the box. I do not mean to undermine the important role played by the WEU's current Secretary-General, Willem van Eekelen, but if that post is to fall vacant in the near future, there is a good British candidate to fill it. I hope that Lord Owen's role as a peace mediator in the former Yugoslavia is drawing to a satisfactory conclusion. What a fine candidate he would make for that office, which would emphasise its importance to the collective security of not only Europe but of NATO.

The Council of Europe, Western European Union and European Union have a diversity of purpose, overlapping membership and complementary roles. I welcome that happy tripod of accidents—that threefold structure—that separates the different roles of Governments. Their two primary roles are the defence of the people and the raising of taxes. Provided that the defence of our people is kept separate from economic policy in the European Union and by national Governments, we can rest more easily in our beds at night, knowing that there is no prospect of the development of a true European Government. I welcome that.

12.1 pm

Mr. Alan Duncan (Rutland and Melton): The speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) proves, if anything does, that those who had behind-the-scenes experience in Government before entering the House bring to it a great fund of wisdom. His work and his comments today are born of the experience that he brought to the House after being elected two years ago.

The hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) has proved an entertaining and lively advertisement for the Council of Europe, and that is true of any cause that he chooses to embrace. Many appreciate his hard work in the Council of Europe.

One interesting aspect of any debate on the Council of Europe and the WEU is that most people who study the body politic are largely unaware of the advantages that those institutions bring to relationships between Governments internationally. People may be familiar with the European Commission and perhaps with the European Court of Human Rights, and certainly with the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament—but the value of the Council of Europe and the WEU is largely lost on them. We are doing a great service by debating their value today.

Perhaps that proves one adage of government—that the usefulness of an organisation is often in direct inverse proportion to the noise that it makes. Those institutions are quiet and hard working, but they are of great value. Many right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the House have great experience of them. My near neighbour, my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander), who raised the issue today, and my hon. Friends the Members for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson) and for Esher (Mr. Taylor) have much greater experience than I, and one big advantage of the structure of the Council of Europe and the WEU is that that experience can continue to be brought to the House. In other parts of Europe, there is an unfortunate separation and that experience is lost to the national Parliaments. That experience is something which we should value and preserve.

One of the Council of Europe's great merits is the width of its membership and the links that it forges between a number of diverse countries in a cauldron of international change. Its list of members includes all the EC countries and many others besides. Albania, Belarus, Bosnia, Croatia, Latvia, the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia, Moldova, Russia and Ukraine enjoy special guest status, and Israel enjoys observer status. I cannot think of a more purposeful grouping of countries, which brings those countries together in such a productive way, than the Council of Europe. They embrace the fringe described by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester and the co-operation engendered by that grouping is of enormous value in a changing world from which new risks emerge daily.

I wish to refer particularly to the way in which the European Court of Human Rights works. The nub of the issue currently being debated is whether the right of direct petition to the court for citizens in the United Kingdom should be abolished. My hon. Friend the Member for Newark said that it should not be abolished, but I disagree.

A very large number of petitions have been made to the European Court of Human Rights. For example, 70,154 applications have been received by the Court since 1955; 22,651 have been registered and 1,392 were finally declared admissible. Last autumn, the Commission's backlog stood at 2,780 registered applications, of which 1,624 were waiting for more detailed scrutiny. I contend that that is an enormous number and that it is almost impossible for the Court to discern properly which applications have the highest priority if the applications have not been through an initial weeding-out process.

In that regard, we should draw a parallel with the redress that many of our constituents seek by wishing to have cases referred to the ombudsman. That must be done through the Member of Parliament, who probably has experience of the case concerned and of the kind of case that may or may not contain an important legal point that merits further recognition; from personal experience, the Member has the qualities to weed out the frivolous cases and those that would risk over-burdening the Court in the way that it has become over-burdened.

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): As a member of the Select Committee that oversees the work of the parliamentary ombudsman, who also acts as the health service ombudsman, I welcome what my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) is saying. He is probably aware that, in a sense, the parliamentary ombudsman is an under-used asset in this country. In any particular year, quite a few hon. Members do not refer any cases to him and many others probably do not refer enough potential cases to him. Will my hon. Friend develop that line? In particular, will he develop the point that making appeals to the European Court of Human Rights can set aside deliberate policy decisions taken by this House or by our Government whom we support here, but who have then been overruled by the Court abroad?

Mr. Duncan: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. He has helped me to develop my argument in a most valuable way. It would be detrimental to the interests of the European Court of Human Rights and its fundamental purpose if cases admitted to it were reduced to the level of a lobbying stunt. If a citizen is free to apply directly to the Court in that way, there is a risk that the purpose of the Court may be devalued by the manner in which citizens use it for ulterior purposes.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) about the ombudsman. The ombudsman has kept his value and reputation in the minds of citizens and Members of Parliament because applications have to undergo a selection process through Members of Parliament. If my hon. Friend can lend his agile mind to devising a parallel system for the European Court of Human Rights, he would do us a great service and would enhance the reputation of that important institution.

The Council of Europe is helping other countries to set up institutions that will bring them from tyrannical communist centralisation towards free-trading democracy. For instance, the Council of Europe can advise on legal co-operation in matters such as extradition, data protection and computer crime, as well as on social affairs, culture, education, sport and environmental matters. The environmental backwardness of the former communist countries is very damaging, but those countries can be brought forward if they are allowed to benefit rapidly from the expertise that we have gleaned in the west. The Council can also advise on communications matters, health, youth, local government and all areas of public administration, so it is absolutely invaluable.

The hon. Member for Newham, North-West suggested that all those countries should have a written constitution and, indeed, that we should. He may have a point when he argues that when, from the ravages of unsatisfactory government, those countries are effectively having to start again, they will need some written guidelines from which to take the first steps towards forming their own traditions and conventions. However, I warn against putting them in the straitjacket of a written constitution to which they must always adhere in every letter.

Considering a constitution is, to me, like looking at all the qualities of a favoured friend. If one understands that friend's subtleties of behaviour and quality, of rage or whatever, and if one then tries to write all that down, one can never translate into script as great an understanding of that person as the simple fact of knowing that person as a friend. It is exactly the same with a constitution. As soon as it is written down, it is devalued and trivialised and merely provides an opportunity for bickering. We should limit the advice that we give in terms of emerging countries having to write everything down in a written constitution.

My hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) hit on the most important point when she said that the Council of Europe could help those countries to emerge from communist oppression. We have encouraged them to do so and it would be absolutely unforgivable if, in their hour of need and in these nascent years, we were suddenly to desert them. The Council of Europe is helping us to feed to them the wisdom that we have accumulated in our own democracy to help them build theirs.

My hon. Friends the Members for Esher and for Worcester and other hon. Friends have raised the question of Mr. Zhirinovsky in Russia. I am rather more optimistic than they have been. They have suggested that there is a severe threat to the future of Russia from the fact that most of the army recently voted for him. However, that is to misinterpret what happened. It was not actually a military phenomenon. The army was really a welfare system in uniform. The army system has largely collapsed. Thousands of soldiers now live in tents and are selling their uniforms for ready cash. They are thoroughly dependent and economically deprived. What we saw in the vote for Zhirinovsky was an economic phenomenon, whereby those facing severe poverty felt that there was an appeal in Zhirinovsky's rather brazen nationalism. It is through the endeavours of the Council of Europe that we can help such matters to be better understood and ensure that the system of democracy is not considered in such simplistic terms in the likes of Russia.

The Western European Union has had a valuable influence on the peace and security of the western world. In the post-war settlement on the mainland of Europe, NATO, was critical for post-war peace. It was so critical largely because it linked the United States with Europe. There was, and still is, complete and utter confidence in NATO's internal commitment to the belief that an attack on one NATO member would be considered as an attack on all. NATO, however, is not a perfect being. For instance, France is not a fully fledged member of NATO, yet it is one of the most important countries on the European mainland.

Europe is in a state of change, where old enemies are becoming friends. In considering that argument, we should remember the important point that regimes, and not the people, were always the enemy. Communism has been defeated, but we should not regard it—and nor should they—as a defeat of the Russian people or of any other people in the erstwhile Soviet Union. Our disagreement was with the regime, of which we disapproved and of which ultimately the Soviet people vehemently disapproved. Given the uncertainty that still colours everything about Europe and beyond, because the European order has changed fundamentally, it would not be appropriate for Russia to join NATO. That is where WEU is invaluable.

The discussion on enlargement of WEU is the most productive means of deciding how to embrace the emerging democracies in security matters. Democracy and free trade are the greatest guarantees of peace anywhere at any time. We should use the various pillars of the European Community, including WEU and the Council of Europe, to share democracy and free trade with those emerging nations and other nations in Europe, where events will otherwise provoke concern about the peace and security of the continent.

The other important argument that I should like to advance is that both the Council of Europe and WEU demonstrate the virtue of allowing such institutions to evolve as opposed to imposing them according to a theoretical framework. The value of sending Members of this House to such institutions is that they benefit from their experience there.

The pattern of the various institutions in Europe is like a patchwork—it is confusing as they overlap and interlock. Ironically, the Council of Europe and WEU are less obvious in the framework of overlapping institutions, but their work is more purposeful and more respected. The value of the Council of Europe and WEU is that they teach us to be wary of institutions that are shaped by theories and ideals and to appreciate those that have emerged because of their proven practical value. I commend those two institutions' work and their value and importance.

Mr. Peter Hardy (Wentworth): The hon. Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) is blessed, first, by the fact that he was fortunate enough to secure the debate, secondly, by the commendation of hon. Members, who have congratulated him on the choice of his subject, and, thirdly, by the approbation for the grace of his speech, which was both wise and informative. He was kind enough to explain to the House why some hon. Members on both sides of the House would have liked to be here—some perhaps should have been here—but could not be. It is a bad time of the year, and they have to attend annual meetings of their parties and constituency events.

The hon. Member for Newark commented on the current disputation between the parties. I also recall the comments of the hon. Member for Calder Valley (Sir D. Thompson), whose most interesting letter about that dispute was published in The Times the other day. Conservative Members who deplore the impasse did not, however, remind the House of its reason, which is that Her Majesty's Government have sought to ride roughshod over

[Mr. Peter Hardy]

Parliament by forcing Bills through the House. They are also pursuing policies that some of us find particularly distasteful.

I find it extremely inconvenient, as leader of the Labour party delegation in Europe, that the Opposition are unable to play our proper part in certain debates. The hon. Member for Newark will understand my anger at the privatisation of the coal industry and my detestation of the Government's disregard for mine safety, which lies at the heart of my political commitments and those of other hon. Friends. The Government cannot, by the insolence of their office and the arrogance of their policies, expect Opposition Members to sit tamely by.

Mr. Don Dixon (Jarrow): Hear, hear.

Mr. Hardy: My hon. Friend may not agree with my next comment, because we must consider the contributions that must be made in Europe by the United Kingdom. I hope that the Government will make it clear to the Opposition that they will not continue to conduct themselves as they have in recent months, because that will assist my right hon. Friends to return to the path of virtue.

Sir Jim Spicer: I wonder whether the hon. Gentleman would elaborate on the point about disagreeing with Government policy, which has led the Opposition to take action. If that is the case, surely we can say goodbye to any co-operation on any subject for all time, in the life not only of this Parliament but of every other Parliament, because, inevitably, an Opposition will object to Government policies.

Mr. Hardy: The hon. Member has reminded me that politics is not a science, but an art. A Government must understand which issues are sensitive and go to the heart of people's beliefs and commitments. Perhaps the Government do not understand the mentality and values of the coalfield areas; otherwise they would not have done what they have done in recent months.

This is not the occasion on which to debate the plight of the coalfields, but privatising the mining industry contemporaneously with the demolition of mine safety, the achievement of which was one of the main aims and purposes of the Labour movement from the 19th century, reveals that the Government are ignorant of the reality that a modern and intelligent Government would consider. I do not think that it is right to labour that now, although I know that the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) has heard me do so on a number of occasions in recent weeks in the Standing Committee that considered the coal Bill. The fact remains that the arrogant insensitivity of the Government persuaded my right hon. Friends to adopt their policy of non-co-operation. To respond to the hon. Member for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer), let me say that I hope that the practice of that policy will not be unending.

It would not be fair on the hon. Member for Newark if I did not return to the subject under debate, which is important. He has done the House a considerable service, because the debate has not merely given the House the opportunity to be acquainted with the work of the Council of Europe and WEU—an evident need—but to conduct a little stocktaking and assess the work of those organisations. If hon. Members read the Official Report for today, they will be greatly enlightened by the comments made in the debate.

It is obvious that there is a true appreciation in the House of the fact that the Council of Europe parliamentary assembly is a consultative body. Although it does not have legislative powers, it occasionally acts with searching inquiry. It has been innovative and, since its foundation, it has launched a number of initiatives, as a result of its recommendations, for the benefit of Europe. Although the assembly does not operate by direct enactment, it has influenced and will continue to influence the quality of life in Europe through the instrument of convention. I shall refer to some later.

I have been involved in Europe for a long time. I have been leader of my party's delegation for more than a decade, and over those years I have developed a number of opinions and views on the organisation, some of which are highly complimentary while others are a little critical. The assembly could be more effective. We in the House have many faults, but the assembly could invigilate and question Ministers rather more effectively if it adopted the Westminster model rather than being so consistently courteous and rather supine when Ministers inflict their opinions on the assembly.

One of the problems that need to be tackled—and it relates to a subject that I addressed in a speech to the assembly not long ago—is that members diligently seek to be rapporteurs. Every two or three years, each committee produces vast numbers of reports on which people work extremely hard. It would be helpful if committees and the assembly itself devoted as much time to following up the reports as they do on their preparation. Too often, members congratulate the rapporteur on a job well done, but no one returns to the subject to see whether the recommendations that have been so enthusiastically endorsed have been implemented.

The committees have an extremely important purpose and hon. Members from all parties have made an enormous contribution. My hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) was the principal rapporteur on the subject of the accession of Lithuania. The work carried out by members in examining the applications of new member states to ensure that they are assimilated effectively and purposefully is extremely important, but is often overlooked. I doubt whether most of my hon. Friends are aware of the work carried out by my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West, and similar tasks have been undertaken by Conservative Members, not least by the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson), who has been chairman of the committee on non-member states, a job in which he has had to work extremely hard.

The Government get a little uneasy about the Council of Europe and, in that context, the Minister will guess what I am about to refer to. It is that most people in Britain have not heard of the Council. One reason for that is that the budget for press and public relations, which would allow the British people to recognise the existence and value of the organisation, is pathetically small. I am not an especially competent mathematician, but I should think that it is certainly less than 1p per head per year, and it might be a small fraction of that.

I understand why the Government are a little reluctant about the Council of Europe, and it relates to the matter mentioned in the speech of the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan). It is that, from time to time, the Government find themselves arraigned before the Court and sometimes convicted. They do not welcome the fact that a body in Strasbourg should be able to find Her Majesty's Government guilty of human rights offences. In my view, our democracy should be sufficiently robust that if the Government are convicted of an offence they should not wish to hide behind a mean and miserly approach in order to escape public opprobrium. I think that that must be the reason that they seek to do so, because there are no other reasons of any great significance. I know that the Treasury breathes very heavily on Departments, perhaps as a consequence of the severe economic decline that Britain has experienced for the last decade and a half, but they should be able to find a few more coppers to make people aware of this very important institution.

Partly because of that fact, very little attention is paid to the Council of Europe. I was reminded of that a few years ago when some malevolent person from his constituency gave the story to the national press that a Conservative Member of Parliament had disappeared. The Member was a very active member of our delegation, which was then meeting in Strasbourg. There descended upon Strasbourg a horde of representatives of the tabloid media. They knocked on people's hotel doors and, indeed, in some cases I think they actually burst into people's hotel rooms, such was the eagerness with which they searched for that hon. Gentleman.

The media representatives were all around Strasbourg, no doubt with quite substantial expense accounts. The one place in which they did not look for him was in the assembly the Palais de l'Europe; he was there making speeches. They did not report any of the debates that were taking place while they were engaged in their expensive search for the hon. Gentleman because, presumably, they shared the Government's view that debates did not really matter. They did not see whether there were any juicy cases before the Court of Human Rights, so busy were they in pursuit of an hon. Gentleman who was not missing at all.

I have a great deal of sympathy with the early-day motion about a recent personal tragedy tabled earlier this week by the hon. Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack). Another tragedy was the disregard for Gorbachev's speech—perhaps the most important speech heard in Europe, before or since that time. [Interruption.] My hon. Friend said that he enjoyed hearing it, as did I.

I also enjoyed watching Conservative Members, who did not join in the standing ovation for Mr. Gorbachev as he entered the assembly before the speech was made, joining in the ovation when he had finished. It was a great pity that the British media's reporting of that seminal contribution was negligible. That may have been partly due to the fact that the Foreign Office had issued a statement offering comment on Gorbachev's statement and, since he had arrived three quarters of an hour late, I think that the statement was issued before the speech was made.

We sometimes feel a little cynical about the fact that matters of enormous importance can be considered in Strasbourg and completely ignored in Britain. Perhaps we are accustomed to the fact that if we do say something wise or make a contribution of value, inevitably in the national press it will be attributed to the European Parliament or the Commission in Brussels when those bodies may have made no contribution in that direction.

Because that is wrong, and because in the end it is foolish and of no service to the nation, it is time that Her Majesty's Government looked at that matter again, even to the point of standing up a little more resolutely to the demands of the Chief Secretary to the Treasury.

Another aspect of this matter goes to the day that Mr. Gorbachev addressed the assembly. Members of our delegation will recall that we had just accepted the then Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Hungary as guest members. On the evening of the Gorbachev meeting, I, as chairman of a major committee, instructed the clerk of my committee to invite representatives from the four new member states to serve on the committee. I said that members from those four countries would and should serve on my environment committee, and we sent out the invitations fairly rapidly. Sir Geoffrey Finsberg—about whom I shall say more shortly—endorsed my request. At that time, I had invited members of my committee to visit the United Kingdom. The hon. Member for Calder Valley may well appreciate it when I say that the committee members were not going to spend their time in London. They had received invitations from Rotherham, Doncaster and York local authorities, as well as from Sheffield university. I said that they would meet in Yorkshire, but could gather in London and so proceed to Yorkshire with minimum delay.

We needed the invitation to be confirmed by the Government. The Secretary of State for the Environment grudgingly said that he would have to confirm the invitation, but the Government would provide only one meeting room for one meeting. I thought that that was somewhat mean and perhaps churlish. I said that I did not want rooms for more than one meeting and that we would gather on King's Cross station and proceed north by way of an Intercity train—trusting that the train would not be late—before embarking on our deliberations.

We managed to obtain a little more because Lord Finsberg, as he is now, endorsed my request and the Government ultimately paid the cost of hiring simultaneous interpretation facilities. I do not know whether the system has changed, but it should have done. The Government did not then have, outside the Welsh Office, their own facilities for simultaneous interpretation, which made it difficult when international forums came here. The Government are so eager to privatise everything in sight that they do not—or did not—own mechanisms and equipment to guarantee the provision of simultaneous interpretation services.

In the end, we made a splendid visit to Yorkshire. We were assisted by Lord Newall in his capacity as chairman of the British Greyhound Racing Board. A greyhound from my constituency managed to win the Council of Europe trophy—[HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] I do not think that his Member of Parliament gained anything from that triumph, but it was a pleasant occasion.

It was sad that her Majesty's Government displayed churlishness, and it would be appropriate to recognise now that we have not encountered such churlishness in the past 10 years among those who represent Britain and Her Majesty's Government in Strasbourg. Reference has already been made by the hon. Member for Newark to the contribution and kindness of Noel Marshall and his successor, Mr. Beetham. We could extend that tribute to the predecessor of Noel Marshall, Mr. Colin McLean, who certainly established an excellent record.

Sir Donald Thompson: Will the hon. Gentleman give a nod, as he passes, to our ambassador in Paris, who always entertains us most royally?

Mr. Hardy: I am most grateful to the hon. Gentleman. It would be completely inappropriate not to recognise the ambassador, whose name I should know as I worked closely with him when I was a parliamentary private secretary at the Foreign Office in the 1970s. I trust that in the banking career that he has begun to pursue—[Interruption.] I trust that Sir Ewen Fergusson will do extremely well.

We have been greatly assisted, not only by the hospitality of the Government's representatives but by their endeavour to ensure that when major events happen in Britain we are pretty well informed. On one occasion, they were extremely helpful when a critical situation had developed.

The assembly has played an important role, in which the Labour party has been heavily involved over the years. It is only right to say that a road behind the Palais de l'Europe is named after Ernest Bevin. Immediately across from the Palais de l'Europe there is a road named Boulevard President Edwards. Those names are obvious. Bevin was Foreign Secretary at the time of the foundation of the Council of Europe. President Edwards was a Labour Member of Parliament—a west Yorkshire Member—who died as President of the Assembly after a distinguished contribution to its work, and that very important road in Strasbourg is named after him.

I do not believe that any roads are named after Conservative Members, although pictures of Winston Churchill abound in the Palais de l'Europe and in Strasbourg. It is interesting that the Labour Government, in their magnanimity at that time, afforded the opportunity to Churchill, as Leader of the Opposition, to play a starring role. That magnanimity was obviously due to the service that Winston Churchill gave in the second world war, but it illustrated that people such as Attlee and Bevin were determined to ensure that a new Europe was forged after the second world war, which would guarantee the peace and provide structures to secure human rights. Those were, and remain, the principal purposes of the organisation. Therefore, the churlishness and grudging approach to which I have referred are regrettable.

I mentioned that the Council of Europe operated by convention. I am worried that the assembly does not take a positive approach to those matters. Reference has already been made to the need to examine the new member states, to find out whether they fulfil the requirements of freedom and human rights. We should ensure that we do not act patronisingly in the way in which we adopt that approach by suggesting to states that their house must be completely in order, or they will not be allowed to join, when one or two established member states do not invariably properly maintain their own commitments.

Turkey has been mentioned. There was a marked difference of view between the Labour delegation and our Conservative colleagues when, under the previous leader of the Conservative delegation, there was excessive enthusiasm to restore Turkey's membership before democracy had been restored. Indeed, relations in the delegation were not satisfactory at that time because we did not attend certain social functions that were blessed by the presence of the then leader of the Conservative delegation, who seemed to us to be excessively eager to bring the Turks back. I think that he would have had them back even if they had not had a parliament. Things are not as they should be in Turkey and it would be perfectly reasonable for some of the eastern European countries to ask, "Why does Turkey's membership go unquestioned when you are taking a severe view of ours?"

Perhaps the British Government are slightly uneasy. They are over-sensitive. They may think that the presence of unelected members in the other place may come into question because the statutes provide that our delegations should be composed of elected parliamentarians. I do not want them to go along that route—I dare not, because Lord Kirkhill, a member of our delegation, has played such a distinguished role as chairman of the legal committee in the past few years that I would hate his services to be dispensed with. The hon. Members for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) and for Calder Valley will have in mind their colleagues from the other place who make distinguished contributions to our deliberations.

We seem to act with a slightly patronising style if we subject the new members to a critical analysis when that same analysis, if applied to existing member states, might cause eyebrows to be raised or even more serious issues to be discussed.

Mr. Duncan: Has not the hon. Gentleman just made the best possible argument for not endorsing the call by the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) for a written constitution, either for us or for those who wish to join the WEU or the Council of Europe?

Mr. Hardy: I share the views of my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West on the matter. If Governments are to trample on people as many of our people have been trampled on in the past few years, the call for a written constitution will gather force. The hon. Gentleman should not adopt a superior approach, which is scarcely justified by the political record. He tempts me to go down a route of partisan politics which I am trying to avoid.

The assembly must become a little tougher in its approach and a little more demanding in its attitude towards Ministers. I have been chairman of the sub-committee on the natural environment for a long time. Our work led to the Berne convention, which is a recognition of the fact that wildlife cannot survive if its habitat is not maintained. Most member states have signed, ratified and, through legislation, implemented their commitment to it. Unfortunately, some member states, particularly Greece, have behaved extremely badly. When hon. Members can start to attend the environment committee again, they may soon have to deal with that subject, because Greece has deliberately flouted its obligation in terms of endangered species in the Mediterranean. I understand that the Greek Government have sold land that is essential for the survival of the turtle.

If Governments sign conventions and Ministers bask in righteousness and receive the plaudits of the international community and conservation organisations, but then completely ignore those obligations, the international forums must challenge them if their national parliaments will not do so. Before much longer, the Council of Europe will need to become much tougher on these matters.

That may be particularly relevant to the new convention on civil liability for environmental damage, which both Ministers and mandarins recognise is a major issue. It is the first international agreement that recognises that the environment can be damaged and must be given priority consideration. That liability has been accepted within the new convention. If Governments then decide that they have exhausted all the credit that they can get from that development and let it rust, there will be profound disappointment.

I was slightly involved in the matter because of the Braer disaster—the tanker that was abandoned and wrecked in the far north of Scotland. Britain was extremely fortunate because a storm continued to rage and the oil was a light Norwegian crude. Had that not been the case, the shipwreck's disastrous effects would have been appalling. Liability was limited to £50 million. If those thousands of tonnes of oil had wreaked the havoc that was feared, £50 million would have compensated neither the north of Scotland nor the rest of the British Isles.

That incident justifies the need for that convention, to which I referred in my report. We need to ensure that such instruments are meaningful.

Sir Donald Thompson: I heard the hon. Gentleman's good speech in the local government and environmental committee of the Council of Europe on that very matter. Is not the obverse of the coin also true? If this country thinks either that it cannot agree with all the terms of a convention or that other countries will sign it without agreeing with all the terms, we should not sign at all.

Mr. Hardy: The hon. Member for Calder Valley takes me to my final point on the Council of Europe. I strongly supported the initiatives in the 1980s which led to the charter on local and regional government. I recall attending the annual meeting of the executives of the local government organisations in Ireland with my Council of Europe environment committee and Ministers. I was joint chairman of the meeting with the Irish Secretary of State for the Environment and we discussed what should be the first item on the agenda. With the Conservative Members of the local government associations present, we decided that it should be the charter. I asked the Irish Minister whether he would invite a representative of each Government to respond and to state their Government's position on the charter. Naturally, the United Kingdom was at the end of the list of Governments.

All the Ministers present said that they supported the charter and that most of their countries had signed it. However, the British Minister present made the point that the hon. Member for Calder Valley has just reiterated. Obviously, one has a great deal of sympathy with the Minister's view. He said that Britain only signed charters which it could implement, but it would have been inappropriate for the United Kingdom to endorse that charter because it was about regional government, and we had no form of regional government and administration in Britain at all.

I said to the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer), who is Secretary of State for the Environment, that it was a jolly good job that there were no Scots, northern Irish or Welsh parliamentarians present at that gathering, because they would have been able to point out that in Northern Ireland to some extent and, certainly, in Wales and Scotland there is some devolution of power and administration. That in itself could have justified a rather more sympathetic approach to the charter than the Government exhibited. However, we may well find that that especial problem will be overcome because the Opposition are rather more sensitive to the case for regional government than are Conservative Members.

Before I sit down, I shall refer to a number of aspects of significance that have been raised with regard to the WEU. The WEU was described as the Jack-in-the-box of Europe. A few years ago, it was described as a sleeping giant which was about to awake. I remember pointing out that I did not know whether it was a giant, but that it had certainly been sleeping. The WEU is enormously important and I feel some anxiety about the view that the whole of our defence and security responsibilities should be passed to the Community. I do not feel that the Community can or should be excluded from consideration of security matters, but if defence and security are to be seen solely as matters for the member states of the EC, we would be acting in an irresponsible manner. The security of Europe is, and must be, wider than that.

There has been a considerable change in the WEU. When I first took part in the debates I used to be infuriated. We had three and a half days twice a year for debate and a profusion of Ministers would arrive—I see the hon. Member for Broxbourne smiling because she has heard me raise points of order on these matters on numerous occasions—in Paris to address the assembly. In three and a half days, we sometimes heard seven or eight Ministers and it was quite impossible to have any meaningful debate that was not interrupted by some Minister making a speech that may not have been at all interesting and, often, had remarkably little relevance to the consideration of European security. A number of British Members supported the complaints that I continued to make about the absurd frequency with which Ministers inflicted their presence on us. Without being too flattering—I have criticised the Government in many things—British Ministers of all persuasions have usually made more meaningful contributions, so their journeys may well have been more valuable than those of most of their colleagues.

The fact remains that the WEU existed, and appeared to be seen to exist, merely as an accommodation for France while it was outside the alliance structures. Of course, the situation is different now. The end of the cold war has meant that the WEU has a new role—it is a new role which most politicians in Europe have not fully perceived or recognised. During the previous assembly of the WEU —one or two hon. Members were present—we were visited by a number of politicians from eastern European countries who were demanding security guarantees. I went to the standing committee of the WEU with my hon. Friend the Member for Wansbeck (Mr. Thompson), who is away today with the President of the WEU, to whom tribute has been paid. The hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) was also present, obviously, as President of the organisation there.

We heard the pleas from the eastern European countries for security guarantees. However, it had to be said that the search for the peace dividend, to which the hon. Member for Dorset, West referred, has meant that Europe is not capable of affording a security guarantee to the eastern European countries at present. By all means, we should give the opportunity—the WEU provides the vehicle for it —for those countries to maintain a dialogue which, in itself, may allay some of their anxieties.

While the WEU exists, at least it means that the frontier of NATO is not taken so far to the east that it borders the boundary of Russia. Therein lies a great deal of risk and balance and the Russian extremists whom we may have to meet and welcome with some grace in Strasbourg may well find themselves fortified.

I remind the House that some odd individuals have come to the WEU and the Council of Europe in the past. One of Mr. Le Pen's closest friends came, did not conquer, and went at remarkable speed. I recall a German Green arriving one day at a WEU meeting dressed in a woollen smock and wearing a large bronze bauble around his neck. Unfortunately, his only contribution was to complain about the waste of paper and the world's resources as a result of everyone travelling to the committee. I pointed out that he had arrived five minutes before the end and therefore had used as much energy in arriving at the meeting as those of us who had been there from the start. We did not see that gentleman again, and I think that that will be the same experience with the gentleman from the Soviet Union when we reach Strasbourg.

The WEU has an important role to play and not simply for the purposes that both sides recognise and have already mentioned in the debate. That role seems obvious to those Labour Members who are certainly internationalists, of whom there are many, and who are not prepared to see the structure of Europe merely making us little Europeans rather than little Englanders. That means that if the WEU is to play a proper part in the future, it must be the organisation which can provide the organised support and structured co-operation that will be necessary if international authority is to continue to be exercised, and is to be more effectively exercised in response to danger, instability and conflict within near continents or, indeed, anywhere else. The United Nations itself cannot at this stage operate as effectively as it might in response to international crises. The Western European Union, without any extravagant structures and without causing long negotiations to establish new committees and chains of command, could make a continuing contribution in that regard.

The success of the Armilla patrol in the Gulf a few years ago was one demonstration of that capacity. More recently, there was the superb but unsung operation by the naval forces of western Europe in the Adriatic to ensure that the embargo on armaments entering the former Yugoslavia was effectively operated. One rather regrets that the embargo was less satisfactorily operated at other points of entry into that troubled area.

Given the experience in the Gulf and in the Mediterranean without lavish expenditure on structures and committees, the WEU has demonstrated the value of its existence. The fact that it is there and is capable of having a sensible dialogue with the emerging east means that it would be wrong for anyone to suggest that the evolution of the Community should be of such a character as would take that role away and remove the WEU's responsibilities by transferring them on a premature and over-rapid time scale towards Brussels.

I repeat that the House is indebted to the hon. Member for Newark. He has done us a great service by introducing the motion. I trust that right hon. and hon. Members will read his speech and the others in the debate, which has been extremely useful.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander). I listened with the greatest possible interest to the debate, and I found be interesting and informative. It is most important to bring together the Council of Europe and the Western European Union and to draw them to the attention of the House. Certainly it has been too long since there was a debate on the bodies, but I can assure my hon. Friend that both receive considerable attention from Ministers. In particular, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, take a close interest in the work of the organisations. Indeed, the latter met a number of delegation members as recently as 18 January, as I am sure that my hon. Friend knows.

We have been fortunate also to have had two substantial speeches—from the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy), who has given many years of distinguished service to the Council of Europe as leader of his group, and from the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston), who, likewise, has served on the Council for a number of years as leader of his group.

I will deal first with the Council of Europe, which forms the substantive part of the debate. The United Kingdom was one of the 10 founder members and has therefore been a member since 1949. Our support for the organisation has not wavered since that time. It is a unique body, dedicated to the establishment and preservation of the rule of law, democracy and human rights throughout Europe.

That role has never been more important than it is today. The break-up of the Soviet Union and the democratisation of central and eastern Europe has resulted in an increase in membership of the Council of Europe from 22 members in 1988 to 32 at the end of last year. Others could join during the next 12 to 18 months, making the organisation truly pan-European. The United Kingdom delegation's information bulletin notes that 1993 was a busy year for the Council of Europe. The UK held the chairmanship of the Committee of Ministers for six months until May last year, before handing over the reins to Austria. During our period as chairman, the political affairs committee visited London for the first time in many years and was addressed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones), then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office. My right hon. Friend also addressed the parliamentary assembly on 12 May, when he presented the statutory report from the Committee of Ministers and answered questions from delegates. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State chaired the Committee of Ministers meeting on 14 May which ended our chairmanship. As hon. Members emphasised, our chairmanship was recognised as successful and did much to enhance British prestige in the Council of Europe.

The first-ever Council of Europe summit was held last October, in Vienna, when the United Kingdom delegation was led with distinction by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor. That summit laid down the future direction of the Council's work. It noted that the end of the division of Europe offered an historic opportunity for peace and stability on the continent and that the Council was the pre-eminent European political institution capable of welcoming on an equal footing and in permanent structures the democracies of Europe free from communist oppression.

Emphasis was placed on the Council of Europe's role in developing and consolidating democratic and constitutional structures, human rights and the rule of law in the new democracies of central and eastern Europe. That role is one that the Government whole-heartedly endorse and it entirely reflects the views expressed in my hon. Friend's motion.

The Council of Europe has a number of programmes of assistance to eastern and central Europe. Lode is geared towards local democracy. Demosthenes, the largest programme, covers such matters as human rights, social questions, education, culture and sport, youth and legal co-operation. Activities such as workshops, study visits, training assistance, missions and seminars are organised under that programme. Another programme, Themis, concentrates on legal training. Expenditure on co-operation with the countries of eastern and central Europe in 1994 will amount to 41.4 million French francs, which is about £4.8 million.

The assembly plays an increasing part in Council of Europe affairs, and the information bulletin provides a wealth of evidence of that. Hon. Members would neither expect nor appreciate a blow-by-blow account of everything reported in the bulletin, but there is a wide range of activities and I am pleased at the contribution made by British parliamentarians. Thanks to their efforts and those of the permanent delegation, the United Kingdom's reputation in Strasbourg is higher than ever. Moreover, our former colleague in this House, my noble Friend Lord Finsberg, has played a truly remarkable and successful role at the Council of Europe.

I also acknowledge one of the assembly's lesser known roles as parliamentary interlocutor for organisations as diverse as the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the European Free Trade Association and the European Transport Committee. That role may be little known, but it is not unappreciated.

My hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Sir D. Thompson) and the hon. Members for Wentworth and for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) commented on the difficulties encountered by right hon. and hon. Members in attending and performing their duties at Council of Europe committees as a result of the arrangements in the House, and I have some sympathy for them. I hope that their cross-party opinions will be made known to Opposition Members responsible for the current situation as the need for right hon. and hon. Members to attend their committees and the assembly has been clearly demonstrated. They have demonstrated the need for our members to attend the assembly and the committees whenever possible.

If I may say so, the hon. Member for Newham, North-West spoke with characteristic feeling and frankness. He demonstrated very well for my benefit, as did my hon. Friends, the value that our members contribute to the British reputation and standing in that institution.

My hon. Friends the Members for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), for Worcester (Mr. Luff) and for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) gave interesting analyses of the challenges that are arising as a result of post-communist Europe. My hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton mentioned the evolution of institutions and I want to comment on that.

The motion invites us to note

"the role of the Council of Europe in bringing the parliamentary process to the Parliaments and people of Eastern and Central European countries".

I am glad to do that. The parliamentary assembly plays a full and important part in that, not least by extending special guest status to countries before they are full members of the Council of Europe and in its examinations of applications for Council membership.

From the comments of hon. Members whom I have mentioned and of others whom I have not mentioned by name, I have been enormously struck by the fact that the Council of Europe is a remarkable example of an institution that was invented in different times for different purposes, which has suddenly acquired an enormously enhanced new role and purpose in a post-communist European world. It must be very exciting for members of the Council of Europe to play their part in bringing those countries and their representatives into the fold of the world that we occupy and which we wish to see universal and global.

As I have said, the motion specifically notes

"the role of the Council of Europe in bringing the parliamentary process to the Parliaments and peoples of Central and Eastern Europe".

It is a sine qua non of entry to the Council that a state must be a functioning, pluralist, parliamentary democracy. On that basis alone, the Council fulfils the role mentioned. However, as the hon. Member for Newham, North-West said, there is a dilemma. When people are not completely perfect in their institutions, we must give them comfort and welcome to encourage them to do better.

That is precisely the role of guest status. It is in that first step, in which the assembly plays a leading role in the form of the granting of special guest status in the assembly, that the hon. Gentleman's dilemma is answered.

Anecdotal evidence suggests that the first encounter with that robust body by parliamentarians of some of the former communist states left some in a state of shock. Further evidence suggests that, once they become used to saying freely what they like and think, they quite like the idea and take it home with them. I am only sorry that my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley has been unable to explain to them the full depth of importance of the whipping system that we enjoy in this country. As hon. Members have explained, we sometimes despair of that system when it lets down delegates who wish to attend debates in the Council.

I agree with the hon. Member for Newham, North-West about Mr. Zhirinovsky. It is important to expose him to debate and ridicule where that is possible. I sometimes think that it would be a great thing if we could get Mr. Zhirinovsky into this place. I am sure that the hon. Member for Newham, North-West and my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley would reduce him to size in no time at all.

The assembly provides further assistance under its co-operation programme including colloquies, the training of young parliamentarians and parliamentary staff and legislative assistance to the Parliaments of central and eastern Europe. In addition, information offices run by the Council have been established in Bratislava, Budapest, Prague, Warsaw and Moscow which should soon be supplemented by others in Ljubljana, Sofia, Vilnius, and possibly Bucharest. All that can only strengthen the ideals of parliamentary democracy and bring them to the attention of the wider population in those countries.

[Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd]

At present, there are nine countries with applications outstanding to join the organisation, including Russia, Belarus, Moldova, Ukraine and Latvia; others will join the queue. As I mentioned, the assembly will examine new applications with care. It is clear that membership is seen as a prize and as a badge of honour for countries that attain the standards set by the Council. We would not wish it to be otherwise. We should also encourage continuing dialogue with the applicant states to ensure that they are always fully apprised of what they must do to qualify for membership. That is especially true of Russia.

We and our European Union partners are on record as looking forward to Russian membership of the Council of Europe at the earliest possible date. We appreciate that there are procedures to be followed and benchmarks against which applicant states must be examined. There must be no lowering of standards and the system cannot be short-circuited. However, if the Russians are to be encouraged to develop their relationship with organisations such as the Council of Europe, it is essential that they feel that they have a fair wind behind them, as the hon. Member for Newham, North-West said, and that they have assistance and advice to meet the standards required.

We therefore especially welcome the introduction of the unique Council of Europe-Russia joint programme which envisages, among other things, regular political contacts and dialogue with the assembly and its committees, with Ministers and local government, legal advice on the compatibility of Russian law with European standards, full participation in various Councils, Council programmes, institutions and bodies, expert appraisal, colloquies, seminars, conferences, training courses, study programmes and, finally, the establishment of a Council information office in Moscow.

We hope that both Russia and the Council will seize the opportunities offered by the programme to promote mutual understanding. I understand that a successful seminar on federalism was held in Moscow last month. I have no doubt that the very wise counsel of my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson), who has been mentioned today and who is one of the assembly rapporteurs, will be a key factor in the handling of this issue.

My hon. Friends the Members for Newark and for Esher (Mr. Taylor) spoke about Russian troop withdrawals. Obviously, Russian troop withdrawals are an important issue which the Council needs to consider. We welcome the agreement this week between Russia and Latvia to withdraw Russian troops by 31 August. We hope that a similar agreement can be reached with Estonia so that troop withdrawals there can also be completed by 31 August. I believe—of course this is a matter for debate in the Council—that it would be impossible to consider full Russian membership when Russian troops remain in other countries against the will of those countries.

The flagship of the Council is the European convention on human rights. I shall give hon. Members some background on recent moves. The work load of the European Commission of Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights, the machinery of the convention, has grown rapidly as more countries join the Council and as public awareness of the recourse that the system offers has increased. The growth in the number of cases lodged has been such that it can now take up to four and a half years for a case to be decided in Strasbourg, which is an unacceptable delay.

Consequently, all member states of the Council have agreed that reform of the machinery is urgently needed to enable it to cope with the increasing work load and to deal with cases expeditiously. Devising an effective reform has been one of the key tasks that the Council has faced in recent years. Together with a number of member states, principally the Netherlands, Italy and Sweden, the United Kingdom originally argued for reform based on retention of the existing two-tier system of Commission and Court. Other countries favoured a merger of the two bodies into a single Court.

As hon. Members on the Council will know, support for the merger option grew and at the meeting last May, we decided to accede to that view. Ministers agreed on a mandate for the drawing up of a draft protocol on reform which, based on a single Court, included some key elements that we and other member states regarded as crucial to the success of the reform.

The work on the draft protocol is now substantially complete. Some minor tidying of the text remains to be done, but we are confident that the protocol will be ready for adoption by the Committee of Ministers at its next meeting in May. As an amending protocol to the convention, it will come into effect when it has been signed by all member states.

Several hon. Members, including my hon. Friends the Members for Newark and for Rutland and Melton and the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber mentioned the right of individual petition to the European Court of Human Rights. There is a misunderstanding in some people's minds on the issue. Every citizen in the United Kingdom has the right of petition to that court. The issue under discussion is whether that right should be enshrined as a permanent right or should remain renewable at regular intervals, as has happened in this country. At present, it is optional whether member states recognise the right of their citizens to apply to the court. Like most other member states, the UK has recognised that right since 1966, but it has done so on a renewable basis. Successive Governments have renewed their recognition every five years.

At a relatively late stage in the reform negotiations, it was proposed that recognition of the right of individual petition should be made mandatory for member states. The UK has reserved its view on the issue and is considering its position. Negotiations are continuing and it would not be appropriate for me to say more on the subject today.

I should like to comment on the incorporation into UK law of the European convention on human rights. We fully accept the principles set out in the convention. Successive Governments have taken the view that the rights set out in it are generally secured by the provisions in existing common and statute law. If the European Court finds Britain to be in violation of the convention, action is taken —usually through specific legislation—to remedy the breach.

The Government believe that incorporation would undermine the sovereignty of Parliament by giving the courts a direct role in determining the compatibility of domestic law with the convention. That would propel judges into the political arena, which we have always tried to avoid in Britain, and thus, to an extent, to undermine their independence. Individual rights of that sort should be determined in Parliament, not in the courts.

In opening the debate, my hon. Friend the Member for Newark commented on the rights of national minorities. The problem with the Russian criticism that Estonia's proposed citizenship legislation discriminates against ethnic Russians is—so I am informed—that that legislation never became law. There is no evidence that there is discrimination. Many international missions, such as the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, and those from the United Nations and the Council of Europe, have visited Estonia and found no evidence that it discriminates against or abuses the human rights of its Russian minority.

One of the key decisions made at the Vienna summit was to take action on the protection of national minorities. We recognise the urgent need to deal with the tensions that have arisen as a result of the the position of national minorities in post-communist eastern Europe. The most grievious example of those problems is found, all too tragically, in the former Yugoslavia.

In the run-up to the Vienna summit, member states sought to draw up an additional protocol to the European convention on human rights, which would have set out rights for persons belonging to national minorities and would have made those rights justiciable under the convention. In the event, the efforts to draft a protocol foundered because of differing views among the member states on whether rights should be conferred on the group or on the individual; and, if the latter, on how to identify whether the individual belonged to a national minority.

Some member states saw the term "national minority" as referring only to indigenous or long-established groups, while others wanted to cover all ethnic minority groups, including those of recent immigrant origin. Our own view was, and is, that to define national minorities as comprising certain groups but not others would be to create more discrimination, not less, and thus undermine the whole purpose.

Immediately before the summit, a draft protocol was proposed under which individuals would have gained the right not to have a name or surname imposed upon them —in other words, the right to choose and use their own names—the right to have their cultural identity protected and the right to use their own language for private purposes. Modest though those proposals were, those additional rights would have represented a huge step forward for some national minorities in central and eastern Europe. We were very much in favour of that protocol, but unfortunately opposition elsewhere was sufficient to block it. Instead the summit instructed the Committee of Ministers to draft a framework convention specifying the principles to be observed by states to ensure the protection of national minorities and to prepare a draft protocol complementing the European convention on human rights in the cultural sphere by provisions guaranteeing individual rights, particularly for persons belonging to national minorities.

The Committee of Ministers has set deadlines of 30 June this year for the completion of the framework convention and 31 December for the additional protocol. Work on the two instruments is proceeding in parallel. The United Kingdom is contributing fully to that work. A progress report is to be submitted to the Committee of Ministers next month. We see the roles of the Council of Europe and the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to be complementary on this issue.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester mentioned the social development fund. We are glad of recent decisions designed to make it more open and accountable and acknowledge the role of the parliamentary assembly in bringing its deficiencies into the open. I am afraid, however, that the United Kingdom is unlikely to join the fund. Our initial investment today would be about £26 million, added to which would be running costs of about £275,000 per year. That would entail a considerable diversion of resources from bilateral and other multilateral programmes in our aid budget. Neither we nor the other countries concerned in those programmes would favour the resulting reduction.

My hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley spoke about the Standing Conference of Local and Regional Authorities. The summit decision to create a consultative organ representing local and regional authorities has seen the changing of the standing conference of those authorities into the new bicameral congress with separate chambers for local and regional authorities. Britain played a leading role in implementing its resolution and charter. The first meeting of the new congress will take place on 31 May.

My hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne mentioned the European Pharmacopoeia, which was also mentioned by other hon. Members. I am not sure whether I have pronounced it correctly—[HON. MEMBERS: "No"]. It seems that I have not. It plays a leading role in setting international standards in medicines and the British Government are a firm supporter of it. I understand that China has been invited to send an observer delegation, which is must be welcome as it will extend the European Pharmacopoeia's interest and remit even wider.

The hon. Member for Newham, North-West said that he wanted the flag raised on 5 May. We are all for flags in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, but the hon. Member must remember that the flag is also that of the European Union, although first of the Council of Europe. I wonder whether anything could be achieved other than total confusion.

Mr. Tony Banks: This is a genuine inquiry. Could the Minister throw some light on it? When did that happen? I have been involved in some arguments with members of the European Parliament, insisting that this is the flag of the Council of Europe. When did the European Union decide to take it away from the Council?

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I will, of course, investigate the matter extensively and fully and write the hon. Gentleman a comprehensive letter.

Mr. Hardy: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I shall do so briefly, but I cannot give way again.

Mr. Hardy: Perhaps I can assist the Minister and my hon. Friend. The Council of Europe decided to allow the European Community to borrow the flag and to make use of it in fairly recent years. I imagine that the flag still remains the intellectual property of the assembly, and my hon. Friend's question is a correct one.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The funding of the Council of Europe could be enhanced by charging the European Union an appropriate fee for the use of the flag.

The hon. Member for Newham, North-West also asked about the Council of Europe acting as regional representative for the United Nations on human rights. That is an interesting point, but it would be much better to raise it in Strasbourg. The Council of Europe and the United Nations would certainly do well to co-operate in this area. The hon. Gentleman also spoke about co-ordination by the Council of Europe of election monitors. The Council plays an acknowledged part in election monitoring. We encourage co-operation between European organisations. There may be times when the Council of Europe is best placed to act as co-ordinator and times when others, such as the CSCE, might be better. The point is certainly good and interesting.

I should now like to comment on the Council of Europe's budget. As is quite clear from my speech so far, the Government fully support the work of the Council, but, for some years, it has been Government policy not to support by vote increased expenditure that would take the overall budget of an institution such as this beyond zero real growth. My hon. Friend the Member for Newark, who was the first to raise this matter in the debate, knew that that would be my reply.

It is important to put on the record some figures on the Council's budget over the years. The budget has increased in 1994 over 1993 by 4.6 per cent. That is against an inflation rate in France of about 2 per cent., so it is significantly more in real terms. The assembly's budget has done even better. It has been increased by 7.7 per cent. Since 1989, the Council's budget has increased by some 80 per cent. in nominal terms and by about 27 per cent. in real terms. That is over five years.

United Kingdom contributions to the Council this year will be about £15 million. We continue to urge the secretariat to prioritise its expenditure plans in accordance with the policies laid down at the summit. We are beginning to see some results, but it is a hard slog. We can only encourage the assembly to do the same by deciding its priorities. On any fair analysis, the Council of Europe has had helpful increases in its budget over the years.

Before I conclude, I should like to speak about the Western European Union.

Mr. Hardy: The Minister says that expenditure has increased by 27 per cent. over five years. The membership has increased by 65 per cent. Would the Minister care to compare that and write to the delegation on the matter?

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I take the hon. Gentleman's point and I will make sure that a considered reply is given to the leaders of the delegation groups.

I welcome the fact that in the debate attention has been given to the WEU. It may not always capture the attention of the media, and in the public consciousness it does not enjoy the same profile as our principal security alliance in NATO. However, I am happy to join the hon. Gentleman in welcoming the fact that the Maastricht treaty set out the future of the WEU as both the European pillar of NATO and the defence component of the European Union. I am also mindful of the importance of the WEU assembly and of the central role played by the United Kingdom delegation in ensuring that the assembly remains vibrant and relevant in the changing security environment in which we now find ourselves.

I, too, send my warm congratulations to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) on his success thus far as President of the assembly.

A central and important issue was raised by several hon. Members—including my hon. Friend the Member for Newark, who introduced the debate, and the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber—concerning the future of the WEU after 1996. The WEU will not come to an end in 1996—that is absolutely clear. In that year, it will carry out a review of its functions as part of the intergovernmental conference which it is expected will occur then. No decision about its future will be made until then. It is an autonomous, intergovernmental organisation and the decision about its future will be made by WEU Ministers, in the WEU and in the European Union. The modified Brussels treaty will not come to an end in 1998, so the future is still up for grabs. If that institution plays a role which is seen to be appropriate at that time, it will continue.

At the end of the cold war, the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation adapted itself to enable the alliance to undertake operations going beyond purely territorial defence. We are seeing the first fruits of that adaptation in the former Yugoslavia. The NATO summit in January endorsed further steps in this direction and it makes abundant sense for the WEU to follow suit.

In Petersburg in January 1992, WEU Ministers set out the sorts of operational activities that the WEU could undertake. These included humanitarian and rescue tasks, peacekeeping, and the tasks of combat forces in crisis management, including peacemaking. The only limitation on these tasks laid down at Petersburg was that they should be fully compatible with the military dispositions necessary to ensure the collective defence of all NATO allies. It follows that if the forces have NATO liabilities there would clearly have to be consultation with NATO before the forces were used for a WEU operational task. That is an important point.

If such a policy as I have touched on is to work, we need an effective co-ordination system and up-to-date knowledge of the effectiveness and availability of WEU forces in times of crisis. For that reason, all WEU member states have designated military units and headquarters that they are willing to make available to the WEU for such tasks. The WEU military planning cell, which was established in October 1992, has the task of keeping updated lists of units and combinations of units that might be allocated to the WEU for specific operations.

As to WEU relations with NATO and the European Union, it is stated in the Maastricht declaration that the WEU will be developed as

"the defence component of the European Union and as a means to strengthen the European pillar of the alliance."

The WEU is an autonomous treaty based on defence organisation and it occupies a unique position in European security architecture. It is thus important that I should talk about the WEU's relations with both NATO and the European Union.

It is agreed by all WEU member states that a strong transatlantic partnership is fundamentally important to European security and stability. In turn, however, the development of a European security and defence identity is an essential component of a renewed and strengthened transatlantic partnership. The WEU is not in competition with NATO; it is a means to strengthen the European pillar of the alliance. The implementation of the Maastricht treaty has led to greater cohesion within the European pillar and hence a more effective and visible contribution to the alliance.

Relations between NATO and the WEU are based on the fundamental principles of transparency and complementarity. NATO is kept fully informed of what is happening inside the WEU, and vice versa, and there is no duplication of effort between them. Full transparency is possible because all full members of the WEU are members of NATO. European allies that are not members of the European Union can, as agreed at Maastricht, become associated members of the WEU, sharing as fully as possible in its activities. It is open to European Union members that do not wish to become full members of the Western European Union to take observer status.

As was stated at Maastricht, the common foreign and security policy includes all aspects of security, including the eventual development of a common defence policy that might eventually develop into common defence. As stated in the treaty, it is for the WEU to elaborate on and implement decisions and actions of the union that have defence implications. Among the Twelve, defence matters remain at intergovernmental level—reserved at this stage to the WEU, which forms the bridge between NATO and the European Union and ensures that everything that the Union does in the security sector must be compatible with the views and activities in NATO. The WEU has a key co-ordinating role to play.

The WEU has made considerable efforts to help spread stability beyond the frontiers of its member states. We are extremely keen that the WEU should strengthen its links with the countries in central and eastern Europe. I know that the assembly has been active in considering the security problems of those countries. The current link between the WEU and the countries of central and eastern Europe is maintained through the WEU forum of consultation—a purely consultative mechanism that meets once a year at ministerial level and more frequently at working levels.

The WEU Council of Ministers meeting of 22 November 1993 commissioned a study of concrete steps to enhance the relationship between the WEU and the forum of consultation countries. We are now taking that proposal forward with our partners as a matter of urgency and we believe that at this stage the focus should be on strengthening the WEU's existing arrangements for political consultation.

I have mentioned my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington. I pay tribute to the hard work and high level of participation of all members of the British delegation. Some right hon. and hon. Members may not be aware of the institutional importance of the assembly, as has been mentioned today. It occupies a unique position in European security architecture as the only elected European parliamentary organisation with a mandate to discuss defence matters. It provides an important forum for participation by parliamentarians from all parties from all WEU member states and, increasingly, by parliamentarians from central and eastern Europe. The reports produced under the auspices of the assembly are undoubtedly a valuable addition to the European security debate. We place great value on that and I know that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary hopes to address the plenary session of the assembly in June this year.

I hope that I have been able to make some comments of benefit to hon. Members about what they have said, and to give an indication of the Government's policy on those important organisations. I do not often have the opportunity to address the House on European matters. It is not a subject of my responsibility in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and falls to my right hon. Friend the Minister responsible for European matters, but I am glad to have been able to speak on the subject today.

Our relationships with other European countries are central to our security and prosperity. That is why the Government attach such importance to the effective operation of the European institutions that we have been discussing.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House supports the important roles of the Council of Europe and Western European Union; takes note of the work of the Parliamentary Assemblies of both bodies and, in particular, of the work and efforts of the United Kingdom's delegation; notes the role of the Council of Europe in bringing the parliamentary process to the Parliaments and people of Eastern and Central European countries which have joined it in recent years; recognises the special role of the Council of Europe as an institution specialising in the protection of minorities and human rights in those countries; and welcomes the fact that under the Maastricht Treaty the Western European Union is to be the future European Defence entity and the European pillar of the new-role NATO.

Chief of Defence Staff

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I wonder whether you have received a request from the Secretary of State for Defence to make a statement to the House. I say that because the forward notices for the defence study group say that Marshal of the RAF Sir Peter Harding, Chief of the Defence Staff, will address Members of both Houses on 29 March in Room 3 at 6 pm. I wondered whether that was a mistake in the forward notices or whether there had been a development about which the House should be informed. If it is the latter case, would it be in order for the defence study group to invite Lady Bienvenida Buck along so that the House can hear both sides of the story?

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): I have had no such request.

Europe

1.46 pm

Sir Jim Spicer (Dorset, West): I beg to move,

That this House notes the importance of all European organisations, including the Council of Europe; and further believes that the long term future peace and prosperity of the continent depends upon the evolution of the European Union into an organisation deserving of the whole-hearted confidence, respect and support of the peoples of the Member States and also the rest of the world.

As I look around the Chamber of the House of Commons, even on a Tuesday and a Thursday, I find that very few people are left in the House who have been staunch Europeans for as long as I have. The reason is obvious. I was born in 1925. In 1940 and 1941, from the age of 14, I served as an air raid messenger in London during the Blitz. I joined the Army at the age of 16 in 1942. I fought through France, Germany, Holland and Belgium in 1944 and 1945, and I have vivid memories of those days and of the horrors of that war.

However, the horrors of that war were surpassed, in my mind, by the immediate aftermath of that war in Europe. I watched concentration camps being opened up. I saw millions of displaced persons moving about our continent, starving, lost, having nowhere to go, and above all—I am ashamed now at the fact that our Governments knew no better and we knew no better on the ground—we played our part in rounding up those displaced persons who were nominally described as citizens of the then Soviet empire and shipping them back, often at the point of the gun, to a country where they would inevitably land up either in a death camp or in a gulag camp where they would serve 20 or 25 years for no other reason than that they had been in Germany and had seen another world which others in the Soviet Union had not experienced.

So in the 1940s and 1950s I and my generation and the generation before us said, "Never again", and out of that will and determination came the firm idea that we would bring the nation states of Europe closer together and create a prosperous and more peaceful Europe. I supported that concept from the beginning.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes), who has joined us in the Chamber, will know that I founded the Conservative group for Europe with the late Lord Beamish, who was a great figure in this House before he went to another place. I also served for eight years in the European Parliament and was Chief Whip of our group for five years, when I had occasional brushes with my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East—usually pleasant ones.

How far have we gone in achieving what we all set out to do in the 1940s and 1950s? If we are to have a prosperous, peaceful and influential Europe, it is essential that the Community enjoys the whole-hearted support, confidence and respect of the peoples of our Community. Let me list some of my worries. I have accepted—we have all had to accept—the changeover from our being a European Community to a European Union, but I do not like it. The Maastricht treaty may say that that changeover must take place, but European "Community" has a good feel to it. It implies a community of individuals working together for the good of that community. I do not like the idea of a "Union" because it implies not only a trade union, which can sometimes be a difficult organisation to work with, but forcing people into a union of which they do not want to be part.

May I illustrate the difference between the Community as the Euro-enthusiasts see it and the reality of the Community on the ground? I imagine that a chairman of a major company in this country would sit down at a board meeting knowing that all the directors on the board have one aim in mind—to work whole-heartedly and single-mindedly to ensure that the company improves and grows more prosperous and profitable for the shareholders.

Let us contrast that with the average meeting of the European Union. Whoever holds the presidency of the European Union knows that when he attends a Council of Ministers or Heads of Government meeting, individuals round the table are not single minded in their support for the Union, but are serving two masters. They are serving the Union, but they are also looking over their shoulder at their other master, which is their national interests and their individual interests within their nation state.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): My hon. Friend kindly referred to me in the context of the Conservative group for Europe. I think that I succeeded my hon. Friend as chairman of that group. I agree with some of what he has said, but the Union is at an early stage and will evolve gradually. We are only at the beginning of implementing the treaty. Does he agree that part of the problem is the excessive nationalism that still resides among individual member states? I mean not patriotism but nationalism. The best way to overcome those difficulties of separation or dislike from a historical standpoint is for both the European Parliament and individual national Parliaments to work together to promote the Union.

Sir Spicer: My hon. Friend is right. It is a problem and in my view it is insoluble. I shall tell my hon. Friend exactly why. In the past two years, the Danes have held a referendum. It was clear that the Danish Prime Minister looked over his shoulder and was given a clear message by the people of Denmark. There was a French referendum through which the President was almost given the same message by the people of France. We are now in 1994. Is my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East is saying that Chancellor Köhl in Germany is not thinking far more about the elections in November than he is about what is happening on the European scene? Everything that he does while sitting around the European table is absolutely dedicated to creating the right atmosphere for his party and for his individual stance back at home, which is perfectly human.

Next year there are presidential elections in France. Is my hon. Friend saying that a French President or a French Prime Minister is not already embarking on a campaign of fighting France's corner up to the line and to the exclusion of all other interests? That is the reality. Perhaps we wish that it was not, but I am sad to say that it is and will remain so because of the question of serving two masters.

If we are to have a prosperous Europe with low unemployment, it cannot be achieved in isolation from the rest of the world. We cannot construct a cocoon in which we in Europe have our social chapter, with ever-rising standards for our people, with low unemployment, increased productivity and all the good things coming through, while the rest of the world is in a position of, year after year, competing with us much more favourably.

Last September, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister wrote an excellent article in The Economist which drew attention to that particular point. He said that European labour costs had risen by 4 per cent. during the 1980s and that elsewhere they had not risen at all. He highlighted the fact that expenditure on social services and health in the Community was more than double that of the rest of the industrial world and said that that gap was increasingly widening.

It is impossible for us to compete with the rest of the world. I wonder how many hon. Members saw a programme on BBC 2 on Saturday night about China called "The Giant Awakes". It illustrated the sort of competition that we can expect in the years ahead. The BBC hand-out about the programme said:

"In the centre of the Pearl River, the People's Liberation Army has joined the rush for wealth—their new factory, manned by 7,000 teenage peasant girls and dubbed Virgin Island, churns out millions of cheap pairs of shoes monthly and is already rocking the world's shoe industry. The teenage girls work 10-hour shifts, six days a week, for £20 a month. 'We run the factory through discipline and love,' announced the general in charge. That means drill sessions, marching to the canteen, pep talks . . . and dancing at the factory disco."

It was a frightening programme. However, it illustrates exactly what we are up against. It becomes even more frightening when one realises that they are so pragmatic about the way in which that factory is run and that the main person involved comes from Taiwan, is in charge of all production and has invested a great deal of money on mainland China.

I wonder whether that lesson is wasted on Opposition Members? I suspect that it is, because liberals and socialists are enthusiastic about signing up to a social contract, which will raise expectations of ever-better working conditions and higher wages, regardless of our competitors in the world. That is totally irresponsible and will do this country and our people no service in the future.

More generally, may I quote two words used by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade when he spoke about Europe the other day? He said that we were facing "European sclerosis". That is true. Time and again, one sees examples of how Europe is not going the down the road which those of us who are staunch supporters of a European identity would wish it to travel. There are ever more costly regulations and in many cases they are not being implemented by all the nation states that signed the directive involved. An article in The Economist clearly says:

"Unfortunately, most governments find it easier to pass laws than to respect their letter or spirit. Every year the commission gets roughly a thousand complaints against governments for restraining trade. The commission's usual response is to start 'infringement proceedings', which may, after a couple of years, end up in the European Court."

What happens during those two years while the Court is dealing with an infringement? Does the nation state continue totally to ignore the directive and its substance, which it signed up to? I sincerely hope not.

I can illustrate that much better by talking about the water directives. The United Kingdom is the only country in the Community that implements the water directives in full. In that context, if not only the water directives but all the directives are to be implemented, it is essential that we have better and proper policing which is not left to the national state but is dealt with by the Community as a whole.

The future in terms of the advance of joint foreign policy and defence is a major problem, especially when there is no longer any external threat. There is an increasing likelihood that nation states will go their own way and follow their own national interests. I do not want to go into the details of how we got into the appalling situation in Yugoslavia. However, there are certainly some member states of the European Union—as I must call it now—that bear a heavy responsibility for the situation that exists today.

When we are talking about defence, the average person in the Community can see little relevance in the establishment of a German-French joint brigade. What purpose can that brigade perform outside the Community? If there is a need for troops to operate outside the Community for any purposes in Yugoslavia or anywhere else in the future, the German component of the brigade would have to draw stumps and say that the French can go but the Germans cannot, and all the integration that has been built into the brigade would fall apart overnight. The concept of a brigade is idealistic and does not have any bearing on where we are and where we should be going.

I shall say what we should be addressing if we wish to create a Community that will command whole-hearted support. I refer first to the Bruges speech by Baroness Thatcher when she was the leader of the Tory party. At the core of that speech was this question:

"How are we to reform European institutions so that they provide for the diversity of post Communist Europe and are truly democratic?"

That question remains unanswered today and it is one which all of us must address.

I shall conclude by quoting the response given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in an article on 23 September 1993. He said:

"It is for nations to build Europe, not for Europe to attempt to supersede nations. I want to see the Community become a wide union, embracing the whole of democratic Europe, in a single market and with common security arrangements firmly linked to NATO. I want to see a competitive and confident Europe, generating jobs for its citizens and choices for its consumers. A community which ceases to nibble at national freedoms, and so commands the enthusiasm of its Member Nations (and peoples).

Such a community would be a more genuine and lasting European union than anything we have now. It offers peace. It promotes security. It widens free trade. It preserves and enhances infant democracies. It marches with the instincts of free people in free nations. It is an ambition for the new century that dwarfs the dreams of the founders of the Community. The Treaty of Rome is not a creed. It is an instument. We must tune it to the times."

That statement unites every Conservative Member, and I know that it would strike a chord with many Opposition Members if they were allowed to express an independent opinion. They would not do that at this time for fear of offending their Whips. The views are in line with French and Danish opinion, and now—most notably in my view—with the views being expressed by the possible future German leader, Mr. Schauble. He has made it clear that he believes in a Community of nation states, not a Community that is dominated by Brussels.

That is not the view of the Opposition. As we move towards the European elections in June, I hope that the distinction between the views of the Government and those of the Opposition will become clear to the people of this country, and that they will vote accordingly.

2.6 pm

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): I start by congratulating my hon. Friends the Members for Newark (Mr. Alexander) and for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer) on achieving the two debates. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, West on the sentiments that he has just expressed. My hon. Friends had two advantages over me—they scored above me in the ballot for motions and, as you may recall, Madam Deputy Speaker, their names were legible to Madam Speaker, whereas she had some difficulty reading mine. I have taken Madam Speaker's warnings to heart.

In a few weeks, in this country and across western Europe we shall commemorate the 50th anniversary of D-day. Unlike my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, West, I was born a couple of months after D-day. I do not want to enter into the debate as to whether the Germans should be present at that commemoration. If they were, it would mark emphatically that the commemoration was a way of celebrating the present peace, unity and strength. We would be looking forward, instead of looking back. It is right to look back, but there is a case for celebrating the present.

After the war in 1918, there were less happy developments which led inevitably to a further European conflagration. After 1945, the victorious powers were much wiser. There was the generous and imaginative gesture of Marshall aid, following the speech by General Marshall at Harvard in June 1947. There was the imaginative speech from Winston Churchill about a European union at Zurich in September 1946.

I have been involved and interested in those developments through my work before entering the House of editing the diaries and letters of Leopold Amery, the father of the noble Lord Amery of Lustleigh. I read in the diaries how, as early as November 1945, Amery wrote to Churchill:

"There is only one way of limiting Russian demands and that is . . . for the future, build up some sort of European Union or Commonwealth"—

Amery used the vital word commonwealth, which has much a more attractive resonance to us in this country than the term union—

"that can hold its own against Russia . . . So long as Europe remains Balkanised, European countries will be tempted to look to outside patrons in every quarrel, while the outside patrons will consciously or unconsciously tend to foment their quarrels. In the end it will come to a final struggle between the patrons. A European Commonwealth is something that can hold its own with Russia and figure, much more genuinely than China or France alone, as one of the real world powers."

Amery was a great British Commonwealth man but in the last years of his life—he died in 1955—he worked with Churchill on early attempts to develop a European commonwealth.

Earlier, we debated institutions that predate the treaty of Rome and the European Community as we know it now. Amery welcomed Churchill's speech at Zurich a year later, commenting that although Churchill may not have been altogether wise in putting the Franco-German partnership in the forefront,

"he is absolutely right about it, and the idea will presently sink in."

We may reflect on whether, if Britain had been fully involved from the start in developing European institutions, it might have avoided some of the rigidity of the treaty of Rome which developed in the way that we know. Britain was not involved in the Community during the 1950s. It twice attempted to become involved during the 1960s, but failed to enter the Community until 1973. By then, the bus had moved on and the EC had developed some of the rigid structures that have definitely caused this country certain difficulties.

I shall examine four aspects of the European Union. As to defence, perhaps I may commend my own motion on the Order Paper, which will not be debated but which contains various references to the fact that Britain still spends above average for NATO European countries because of our particular involvement in Europe and outside it. My motion also emphasises—I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, West supports this—the need for equipment to aid the mobility of our forces together with those of our allies. My motion refers in particular to helicopters and the Westland Apache. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill), who is in his place, also supports that.

Finally, on defence, the Government—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. The hon. Gentleman must not seek to make the remarks that he would have made if the third motion had been debated. He must relate them to the motion before the House.

Mr. Nicholson: I merely wanted to comment that in Bosnia, in which European Union states are much involved, we have the balance right—taking into account our interests, the need to establish a civilised community in Yugoslavia and public opinion. One extreme holds that Britain should provide more troops to fight in Bosnia, which I believe would be entirely wrong. The other extreme holds that we should wash our hands of the matter and have no involvement. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence have taken the right course, as recent developments bear out.

Our debates on Maastricht and current debates on local government reorganisation bring home to the public how many actual and potential tiers of government exist at European, national, regional—which Labour and the Liberal Democrats would like to develop, but which we would probably oppose—and local government level. I support the Government's attempts prudently to reduce bureaucracy and regulation in Europe as well as nationally. However, we should have regard to the sentiments, expressed in recent months in respect of over-regulation and over-administration from those various and sometimes conflicting tiers of government. I believe that counties are an effective means of communicating the needs of those communities to the European Union and that we would pursue a sorry path if we moved towards a regional tier which is the view of the Labour party. However, that is a matter for debate.

I intervened on my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) in relation to the European Court of Human Rights. I am concerned about the overriding of laws that we have deliberately passed in this House by reference to European institutions and, in particular, the European Court of Human Rights. Such overriding has occurred not when we have made accidental lapses, but when we have passed purposeful measures.

I received a letter this week from a constituent in the construction industry, drawing my attention to a report on the front page of the Daily Mail which stated that the Law Lords' judgment which brought Britain into line with the European Union on rights for part-time workers triggers the threat of redundancy pay demands back-dated up to 16 years. He said that that was a nightmare and the consequences of the development of such a nightmare have been described today.

Following that development, the Government had to concede to European pressure to boost maternity pay entitlements in line with a European Union directive. My constituent wrote:

"This is the European social chapter in by the back door. It will undoubtedly damage prospects for women in employment."

I commend to the Government the need to stand up against that. I am glad that my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) is present in the Chamber because he has a silent interest in employment matters. He will note carefully what I am saying.

Enlargement is at the centre of the present debate about qualified majority voting and the matters that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is pursuing most skilfully in Brussels. Enormous damage would be done to the United Kingdom if we were seen to be placing obstacles or delays in the way of the entry of Norway, Sweden, Finland and Austria into the European Community. Those countries have much in common with us and the way in which they approach matters will be more in tune with how Britain approaches matters than some of the Mediterranean countries. Those countries have much in common with us for historical reasons: Norway is an ally in NATO and Sweden and Finland open up the Baltic and relations with the Baltic states. We would welcome a speedy resolution of that difficulty.

I do not want to comment further on that dispute, which was debated yesterday. If our partners were to be particularly stubborn and hostile in respect of some of the matters that lie between us, that would jeopardise Britain's ability to co-operate willingly in a positive and constructive way.

Having said that, there are people in this country—I hope that they are not on the Conservative Benches although it is up to my hon. Friends on the Euro-sceptic wing of the party to speak for themselves—in the press and elsewhere, and the article in The Times yesterday by Lord Rees-Mogg is an example of such thinking—who argue that it would be worth risking a few years of Government under the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) if, as a result, the Conservative party in opposition were not only to move to the right, which is what many of those people want, but to become hostile to recent developments in the European Community.

I firmly believe that that would so badly damage and divide this party that it would thrust us out of office, perhaps for a decade. We have lessons to learn from what has happened to the Labour party since 1979. After 1979, the Labour party was overtaken by extraordinary insanity and extremism which have kept it from office for 15 years. I hope that people in the press who have been flogging the European issue so mercilessly over the past year—I believe that this is the main motive for so many elements of the press being so extraordinarily hostile to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister—will consider carefully how they represent these matters as the sort of thinking that I have described is extremely dangerous.

My hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, West mentioned the European elections. If the country elects many Labour and Liberal Democrat candidates to the European Parliament, that will be greatly detrimental to the interests that my hon. Friend has set out, and which I have tried to pursue, of developing a European Community with which British people can be at ease—a European Community with low regulation and in which the various tiers of government can co-operate. Whatever happens in the elections, I am sure that any successes for the Labour and Liberal Democrat parties will be extremely damaging to our national interest and to the longer-term interests of our people.

2.20 pm

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): I am grateful for catching your eye, Madam Deputy Speaker, especially at such an early time of day. I previously spoke on a European matter at about 2 am. I did not speak for long then and I guarantee that I will not speak for long this afternoon.

We have heard many splendid contributions to this debate and the previous debate. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer) on initiating this debate today. It could not be more appropriate given that our Foreign Secretary is currently discussing the enlargement of the European Union. We have had today an excellent debate on Western European Union and the Council of Europe, two important institutions of Europe. As was said time and again by my hon. Friends in that debate, becoming a member of the Council of Europe is almost a stepping stone to applying to become a full member of the European Union.

At the moment, we are considering the question of four countries joining the European Union, but in future—perhaps the near future—we shall consider even more applications from countries to become full members of the European Union. The current debate on Norway, Austria, Sweden and Finland is vital to the future of other countries that may seek to join the European Union.

We have talked about the emerging democracies of the former Soviet Union becoming members of the Council of Europe. A Council of Europe report shows that nine countries have outstanding applications for membership: Latvia, Moldova, Russia, Ukraine, Albania, Andorra, Belarus, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. In the future, such countries may apply to become members of the European Union. Who can say now which way things are likely to go?

I hope that in any future widening of the European Union, which we and perhaps Opposition Members want to see, we shall pay full attention to common sense. That is why I fully endorse the speeches of my hon. Friends the Members for Dorset, West and for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson), and the wording of the motion, which is full of common sense. It talks about a European Union with which people in this country and the rest of the world will feel comfortable and at ease.

My hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) and I visited one of the European institutions the other day; we went to see the new parliament building in Brussels. It is not finished yet, but I am sure that it will be in the near future. I sometimes lose track of how many parliament buildings we have around the European Union. In my time, I have been to the European Parliament in

[Mr. Nigel Evans]

Luxembourg and I have been to the European Parliament in Strasbourg. The new parliament building in Brussels is lavish. Strasbourg is now saying, "We can do better than that and we can build a brand new parliament building so that we shall not have to give up European Parliament sessions in Strasbourg."

So yet another parliament building is on offer. I sometimes wonder whether we should have one each. There are 12 member states; if each had a parliament, we could meet there once a month. What will happen when there are 16 member states? Can we not have some common sense in decisions on our institutions? Such institutions are extremely expensive. People floating between Strasbourg and Brussels is expensive enough, and I hope that we shall consider establishing one parliament building to which everyone can go. I know that it would not be set up in the United Kingdom, so I am not bothered about where it would be located. Let the people concerned make up their minds on the matter.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): Is not the problem that there is no agreement about the seat of the European Parliament because the Governments of the member states will never come to an agreement that will suit the Union?

Mr. Evans: That may be the case, but it does not detract from the argument that the common-sense approach would be to knock a few heads together in the European Union and to decide where the European Union Parliament should be based. All the supporting institutions could be around it, so we would not have to float around the European Union, as we currently do, which is a waste of European taxpayers' money. That is the last thing that we as Conservatives want to happen.

The common-sense side of subsidiarity allows member states far more say in what goes on in their country, if it does not impinge on other European Union countries. I want far more common sense to be applied.

We have heard some horror stories recently. My hon. Friend the Member for Taunton mentioned a subject on which, as he said, I am silent, but that does not mean that I do not have feelings about Brussels' decisions on it. There has been a proposal for a European plug, for example. I am sometimes exasperated by some of the Commission's proposals. It is almost as if it has to justify its existence by continually coming up with ideas. But people in this country ask, "Why do we need to go down that route?"

Mr. Dykes: It is part of the single market.

Mr. Evans: Yes, but we have had our present plug and socket system for many years. It can be proved that it is extremely safe and that it does not impinge on our fellow European Community member states. Another system may be more convenient for them, but if I were to accept the argument that we should all have the same plugs and sockets, before long we would all be speaking the same language and driving on the same side of the road. That may be the direction in which my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) would like to lead us, but the vast majority of people in this country would not support that. Let us have some common sense in the rules and regulations emanating from Brussels so that we can feel more comfortable about supporting them.

My constituents and the majority of my Conservative colleagues are extremely pleased with the Foreign Secretary's policy on qualified majority voting. In the past few years, far more issues have been settled by qualified majority voting. That may have been right. My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East said that problems would arise if each member state could block proposals just by saying no and that we would not get anywhere. The blocking measure is important to protect the interests of this country in certain sectors and it should be retained.

If future qualified majority voting extended to 27 countries as opposed to 23, it would be more difficult for us to block the application of European Community legislation to Britain. In that case, we should hold back for a while. An intergovernmental conference will be held in 1996, so I cannot understand for the life of me why there is such pressure to decide on QMV by Tuesday. The four countries that will join the European Union will be net contributors, so I should imagine that all the members of the Union would like them to join. If the decision on QMV were deferred until 1996, at least we should have time to reflect and to ensure that we got it right. We should have a full 12 months to discuss how QMV should work and we should then be able to judge whether any alterations should be made to it.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Edgware General Hospital

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Arbuthnot.]

2.33 pm

Mr. John Gorst (Hendon, North): I am grateful for the opportunity to draw attention to the dismay caused in my constituency by the suggestion that one of the two Barnet hospitals, Edgware general hospital, should be closed. I am glad to see that my hon. Friends the Members for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes), and for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) and my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) are here. They have neighbouring constituencies, will which be equally affected if the proposals are implemented.

Edgware general hospital has been an important part of the north Hendon community for 65 years. During that time, it has steadily built a reputation for excellence in its treatment of patients and for the dedication and care of its staff. The hospital has now become an integral part of the community that it serves. It has become so much a part of the local scene that literally no one is prepared to contemplate its loss.

Many of my constituents feel that to be deprived of a facility such as their general hospital would be akin to Kew losing its gardens or Canterbury suddenly finding that its cathedral had been confiscated. That is the measure of how gravely my constituents regard the local health authority's proposal to deprive them of their hospital.

Of course, tradition or sentiment do not of themselves provide justification for preserving an institution. One must respond to changing circumstances and, if need be, match them to new arrangements. Nevertheless, when matters are both profoundly disturbing and vastly expensive, we should be doubly certain that innovations are required.

My constituents feel, and I agree with them, that these changes involving the proposal to close Edgware general hospital are most definitely not necessary or desirable. They fail on every ground laid down by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he was Secretary of State for Health. At that time he said:

"a better national health service . . . means a service that always puts the patient first . . . in ways responsive to people's views."

My constituents simply do not agree that the arguments for the closure of Edgware hospital do that. They do not meet the criterion of "putting patients first". How can one say that one is putting people first if, in the process, one is making them sick with anxiety because of what one is foisting on them? How can one say that while ignoring every potential patient's objections?

Public opinion apart, the closure does not stand up to examination on other grounds. Even the process of public consultation upon which its acceptance is supposed to be based has been inadequate—an inadequacy to which I am sure my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East will attest.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): We are deeply grateful to my hon. Friend for his leadership and resolute determination in our campaign and many hours of meetings. We have all worked together under his leadership to save the hospital. Is not one of the most bizarre issues the fact that while there is heavy population density around the hospital, which makes it an ideal location on the border between his constituency and mine, the local health authority's alternative proposal, Barnet hospital, is in a relatively rural underpopulated area?

Mr. Gorst: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. I thank him for the support that he has given to our endeavours to keep the hospital open.

While proclaiming a regard for public opinion, the so-called "consultation process" has been little more than window dressing. If there has been a success, it has been in uniting all sections of the community, and every shade of opinion within it, against a proposition that has the dubious distinction of never before having united so many people in such a concentrated area on a single subject with such universal hostility.

Young and old, left and right, doctors and patients—all have joined in a show of unparalleled opposition. More than 40,000 names have been collected and public protest meetings have drawn unprecedented audiences. Ordinary local residents, many of whom have never before protested about anything, let alone attended a public meeting, have gathered to express their indignation, astonishment or concern.

Sir Rhodes Boyson (Brent, North): My hon. Friend's knowledge of my constituency is as wide as, if not wider than, that of his own constituency. I echo the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) about the leadership that my hon. Friend has given in attempting to keep the hospital open.

Throughout my constituency, there is considerable concern about this matter. Endless letters have been sent about it and concern has been expressed in small meetings in churches and elsewhere. I do not accept the Government's figures and their claims that beds have to be taken out of London hospitals. I think the figures are erroneous. The bed numbers in London are no better than those in the rest of the country.

Today, we are concentrating on saving the hospital and I hope that the Minister will assure the House at the end of the debate that it will be saved, otherwise this battle will increase. I think that throughout London—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. Interventions should, by their nature, be short, particularly in a debate such as an Adjournment debate.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: I shall finish this thought and then sit down. I support my hon. Friend in all that he has said.

Mr. Gorst: I am most grateful to my right hon. Friend. Indeed, I will return to the point that he has made in a moment. I reiterate that the people who are protesting against this proposal are not rent-a-mobs of local trouble-makers. They are active business men, elderly pensioners and worried housewives—the sorts of people whom we are used to calling middle England.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): My family has twice used Edgware general hospital and the concern that my hon. Friend expresses is shared by many electors in Hendon, South. They recognise that there are very poor travel links between Edgware and Barnet and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) used that fact to emphasise the need for a new Barnet hospital, so we must use it to emphasise the need for Edgware hospital to remain.

Mr. Gorst: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend for endorsing a point that I shall make also. I hope that the Minister will take it on board when he hears it twice.

There has been an overwhelming expression of public sentiment which contains a very simple message: why is Parliament, the Government, or whoever, setting up a consultation process to allow all interested parties to have their say and then turning a deaf ear to their arguments and opinions? Patients pay through their taxes for the use that they make of the national health service. They should not be treated as numbers in an accountant's ledger.

Some of those people are sick or elderly, infirm or disabled or perhaps distracted by family worries. Governments have a special responsibility to them: a duty to ensure that desk-led proposals do not supplement patient-led preference. Those present and prospective users of the national health service have not been standing alone on this issue. Doctors, too, have had their opinions brushed aside. Local GPs in the borough of Barnet—highly trained professionals who, every day or night, deal face to face with their patients on health matters—have expressed their concern also.

The medical profession should be both a linchpin and a starting point for any serious reform. Without its backing, reform in that sector is not just unwise or unworkable but likely to be stillborn or crippled. To steamroller through the changes without the whole-hearted support of local doctors would be a mixture of folly and foolhardiness.

Ms Tessa Jowell (Dulwich): I join the hon. Gentleman in expressing concern at a hospital closure that would have an impact across London. Local Labour party branches and community groups share the hon. Gentleman's concern and the worries of general practitioners. I understand that they are also anxious that the decision has been based on highly flawed data. The figures on which the proposals are based are not even regarded as sound.

Mr. Gorst: I thank the hon. Lady for her endorsement of an issue to which I shall, I promise, turn in a moment.

It was once famously said that what we see depends mainly on what we look for. In the case of Edgware general hospital, it seems that answers were decided long before questions were formulated and certainly long before opinions were canvassed. All the public hearings that have taken place have had the appearance of trying to justify a predetermined, inflexible decision from which there would be no subsequent departure. One is reminded of the words of the queen in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland". "No! no!" said the queen. "Sentence first—verdict afterwards." That is how it has all sounded. It is little wonder that my constituents have been so enraged by the semblance of a show trial in which the verdict for the prosecution has preceded the hearing in court. The proposals to close Edgware hospital are clearly unpopular, but they are more than that: they are misguided.

Residents in north Hendon are not opposed to change in itself. No one welcomes disruption with open arms, but provided that it leads to a betterment in the quality of life, the residents of north Hendon, like everyone else, will accept it with good grace. But the proposals do not offer any betterment; they do not offer any quid pro quo. Something is removed, but nothing tangible is being put in its place.

To be fair to the Barnet health authority, there is talk of a shift to primary care and of replacing care in hospital with care in the community. It is obviously prudent to prepare our health care for the realities of the 21st century, but to disguise a disinvestment in secondary care as an investment in primary care seems nothing more than a sleight of hand. Robbing Peter to pay Paul is not a straightforward or viable way to run a health service. It is far from clear that Barnet's primary health care system will be able to cope with any additional work load.

In the longer term, there are pitfalls in believing that technology and primary care can have more than a marginal effect; they can do only a certain amount. It is rather like what used to be known as the penicillin trap. In 1948, when penicillin was first invented, it was believed that from then on, sending people to hospital would become a thing of the past. Of course, it did not; penicillin did not stop people from becoming ill. In the same way, day care or out-patient treatment will not remove the need for hospitals.

Behind all the plans lies a false assumption that Barnet is over-bedded, which is far from true, as has already been said. Since 1982, Barnet has suffered a 37 per cent. cut in the total number of beds and a 46 per cent. cut in the number of acute beds. Indeed, the North West Thames region already has the lowest per capita number of acute beds anywhere in the country. That has been confirmed by the recent reports by Professor Brian Jarman, who has pointed out that Greater London does not have an overprovision of beds. Therefore, it is not only unwarranted, but highly debatable to propose further cuts. Where, for example, would last year's 100,000 or more accident and emergency cases in Barnet have gone? Where would last year's 44,000 self-referrals at Edgware general have gone to? Would it not have been a dangerous underprovision of resources to have had only three quarters of the beds required for a worst-case scenario?

There is yet another objection to the proposal to close Edgware, which in many ways causes most worry among my constituents—accessibility. The proposal to close Edgware general hospital and to rely, in its place, on one hospital on a site that can be more than an hour away by public transport, creates real problems, especially, but not uniquely, for people without cars. The most deprived localities are those that are nearest to Edgware general. They are the places that use its services the most, yet, should Edgware general close, those will be the very people with the furthest to travel to reach their hospital and who are the least able to afford to do so.

Visiting sick relatives or friends will require a nightmare journey across a borough sliced in half by a major motorway. Such an imposition on patients—who may be elderly—or on their relatives is hardly likely to help their recovery process. That transport difficulty, which is compounded by London's radial rather than cross-town transport system, has been treated dismissively by the health authority planners.

That is extraordinary for another reason. The health authority recognises that the greatest need for, and use of, hospital services occurs in the Colindale and Burnt Oak areas, so why is it siting the hospital for my constituents at the other end of the borough, where people are affluent and comparatively have less need of those medical resources? Cross-borough travel is far from simple. A hospital is not like a shopping centre. One cannot expect an out-of-town hospital to be a success, as though it were a well-endowed supermarket.

All those circumstances and considerations lead inexorably to one conclusion—Edgware general must remain open for the foreseeable future. It should be a principle in reform, in all sectors affecting basic feelings of security, where vulnerable people are concerned, that Governments and their agencies do not play havoc with people's fear of illness and infirmity. Faced with the outcry that the threatened closure of Edgware general has caused, it behoves the Government to tread softly; to plan the way ahead with reassuring moves; not to engage in disruptive innovation.

It is not for Members of Parliament to usurp the function of civil servants, but I need convincing that all possible alternatives have been fully and adequately examined by the Barnet health authority. I strongly urge my hon. Friend the Minister to ensure that that has been done before irreversible, draconian solutions such as a hospital closure are given any more consideration. If my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has boxed in her agents—the Barnet health authority—let her, like some 20th century Pandora, release those geniuses from the confines and constraints of their box. Then, at the very least, some hope will remain for a more acceptable solution to the dilemma of the Department's accountancy problems.

In short, I am asking for my constituents to be freed from the present agonies of impending deprivation. There is a real danger of making a huge irreversible decision, affecting the lives of thousands of people, on the basis of a half-baked, pseudo-scientific manipulation of figures devised by a team of over-educated boffins. As no less a figure than Sir Winston Churchill said, we must beware of needless innovation, especially when guided by logic.

This is neither the time nor the place for experiment, because lives are at stake.

2.55 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Tom Sackville): First, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North (Mr. Gorst) on the eloquent, portentous, almost Churchillian way in which he made his case for retaining the acute services at Edgware hospital. Clearly, there is enormous concern among his and other hon. Friends' constituents. If I were not aware of that already, I certainly am as a result of this debate.

Anything involving major change in the health service is bound to cause enormous concern and I well understand why my hon. Friend has spoken as he has. At some stage in his speech he gave the health authority some credit. Its intention is to improve health services overall for those who live within the area that it covers. As he knows, it means to invest substantially in improved primary health care to reflect the fact that more care will be delivered in a primary health context.

The health authority certainly means to take a number of steps to bring health care closer to people's homes in the sense that many more people will be treated as out-patients and will recover at home, rather than during long stays in hospital. Most importantly, the health authority will try to ensure that it has the resources available to reduce waiting times for everybody, if possible to an absolute maximum of six months, which would be well in excess of the national standards and guarantees that now prevail.

To do all that, the health authority must live within its means. It has a budget of some £164 million a year, which is spent on local residents' health care. It must therefore decide how to spend that budget in order to deliver some of the aims that I have just enumerated. It must think carefully about whether it wishes to contract with the two acute hospitals within the area. It must take account of the fact that health care is changing. Whereas a few years ago a patient might have spent 10 days or two weeks in hospital, today that patient may spend only two days in hospital or even be treated as a day patient. All over the country, including in Barnet, the proportion of surgery, particularly elective surgery, being carried out as day cases is rising rapidly. It must be understood that demand is also rising.

However, the acceleration of day surgery and day treatment generally is having a dramatic effect on the demands for beds and we cannot ignore that. Barnet health authority has clearly arrived at the conclusion that it would like to concentrate the acute services on one site and it appears that it has agreement with the trust that that would be the proper way in which to proceed. Therefore, over a period of time, it would put all acute services at Barnet and, on the Edgware site, it would invest in a number of services including those for minor injuries, a great range of out-patient consultations, out-patient rehabilitation and therapy services, diagnostic services and a number of day-care services. It is its belief that that is the best way in which it can offer a complete range of health care to all those living in their area.

I must preface all that by saying that no decisions have been taken. An intention has been expressed by the health authority and if it is to make any major changes in service of that sort and there are statutory objections to such a scheme, Ministers would have to decide because the case would before them. In that eventuality, we would want to be certain that, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North said, all alternatives had been examined thoroughly. We would want to see a major improvement in primary care for everybody in the area. That would be a prerequisite.

If there were a concentration of the acute services on one site from the present two acute hospitals, we would want to see that the services available at the other hospital, which would cease to be acute, would cover the needs of the population living in that area as much as is possible. We would want to see a well-worked out plan for services across the whole area.

I stress that that matter will have to be decided by Ministers if there are objections and we will take all factors in the case into account. The comments of my hon. my hon. Friends the Members for Hendon, North, for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) will form a substantial part of our considerations.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at two minutes past Three o'clock.

—motorway	275	1,380
4 lane dual—all purpose	—	—
—motorway	345	1,750

These figures are indicative only because both site and choice of pavement design will cause them to vary. Further, the figures for porous asphalt are based on limited experience.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the average costs of constructing one mile of dual three-lane motorway (a) in a tunnel and (b) on the surface.

Mr. Key: The cost of building roads and tunnels varies considerably dependent upon location, topography and ground conditions. At current prices the average total cost of building one mile of dual three-lane motorway on the surface would be between £6 million and £10 million. Building the same length in tunnel would probably cost at least £60 million and possibly as much as £150 million.

Road Construction

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent investigations have been carried out into the relationship between link road and motorway buildings and employment and prosperity.

Mr. Key: Among recent United Kingdom studies into this issue of which I am aware are a study commissioned jointly by Glasgow development agency and Scottish Enterprise National on the "Economic Benefits of the M74 Norther Extension"—Kennedy McTavish Ltd., Oscar Faber TPA, and Cambridge Systematics Inc, August 1993; one by E. T. Judge on "Regional Issues and Transport Infrastructure: some reflections on the Lancashire—Yorkshire Motorway" published in 1983; and an investigation by P. J. Mackie et al of the institute of transport studies, Leeds University into the likely effects of the second Severn crossing, 1986. The centre for transport studies of the university of London is currently embarking upon a study into the impact of the new A14 M1-A1 link road for the British Road Federation. There are a number of other recent studies carried out in the United States and Netherlands.

Vehicle Congestion

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been made by his Department of work done by the Oxford university transport studies unit concerning the effect on congestion of vehicle mileage increases.

Mr. Key: I am aware of work on this topic carried out by the TSU. I am concerned about the impact of traffic growth on congestion. Failing to invest in road improvements will cause congestion to increase, which will damage the economy. It has been suggested that road improvement may itself make some contribution to traffic growth. The extent of this effect is being studied by the Department of Transport's standing advisory committee on trunk road assessment, which is due to report later this year. It is, however, clear that economic growth rather than road provision is the main determinant of demand.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide figures for the amount his Department has been reimbursed by the Department of Social Security in respect of statutory sick pay provision for each of the past three years.

Mr. Norris: A figure for 1990-91 is not available. The sums reimbursed in 1991-92 were approximately £706,000; and £1·04 million in 1992-93. Reimbursements in the current financial year are expected to remain around £1 million.

Consultancies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) of 31 January, Official Report, column 496, what was the network referencing listed under the column headed "Service Required"; and what KPMG provided.

Mr. Norris: The network referencing project concerned the review and possible re-development of the existing computer-based model of the trunk road and motorway network. This model is used by the Department's computerised network information system, which helps decisions on highway investment.

KPMG was commissioned in September 1992 to review the Department's business requirements for network-based data and to recommend an effective referencing system. KPMG's report in May 1993 recommended the simplification of the current network model, and provided a business case to justify the re-development.

Mrs Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) of 31

January, Official Report, column 496, what duties the temporary finance director, hired from Coopers and Lybrand, carried out; and for how long that director was employed.

Mr. Norris: The purpose of this appointment between 3 August 1992 and 31 January 1993 at the Transport Research Laboratory was to cover the delay in appointing a permanent finance director from the private sector; and to assist in developing a culture of service that would encourage a more commercial orientation in the finance department.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) of 31 January, Official Report, column 496, what was the study of EC directives under the column headed "Service Required"; and what service Coopers and Lybrand provided.

Mr. Norris: The study by Coopers and Lybrand was into directive 91/440/EC on the development of Community railways. Coopers and Lybrand provided recommendations on, among other matters, accounting separation, track charging and mechanisms for access to the railway network arising from this directive.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) of 31 January, Official Report, column 496, what was the OPRAF consultancy under the column headed "Service Required"; and what service Ernst and Young provided.

Mr. Norris: The OPRAF consultancy was commissioned to identify the business objectives, business processes and information requirements of the rail regulator and the director of rail franchising, and to consider and evaluate these and future IT requirements. Ernst and Young performed this study, producing a formal report, and subsequently developed an implementation plan, more detailed specifications and recommendations for technical strategy options.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) of 31 January, Official Report, column 496, what was the DISC network policy under the column headed "Service Required"; and what service KPMG provided.

Mr. Norris: The DISC network policy project was set up to develop a technical strategy for wide area computer networking provision and network management services. KPMG provided business and technical expertise, and assistance in the preparation of policy guidance for the departmental information systems committee—DISC.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) of 31 January, Official Report, column 496, if he will set out in detail the type of financial advice provided by Capita in 1993.

Mr. Norris: Capita Management Consultants was asked to review the financial and management information systems used to plan, monitor, control and report expenditure on accommodation and office services; to develop proposals for a computerised management accounting system; to advise on time and activity recording systems; to calculate the full economic costs of each service; and to assist in developing service level agreements and baseline costings for market testing services.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) of 31 January, Official Report, column 496, what was the senior staff review under the column headed "Service Required"; and what service Price Waterhouse provided.

Mr. Norris: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency reviewed and revised its senior structure in order to further improve the management of its organisation. Price Waterhouse gave advice and assistance in that process.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) of 31 January, Official Report, column 496, what duties were carried out by the temporary accountant hired from Michael Page Finance; and how long the accountant was employed.

Mr. Norris: The purpose of this appointment was to cover staff absence during the period 5 May 1993 to 27 August 1993; and to assist in the preparation of the first set of commercial accounts for the Transport Research Laboratory.

Fewston Transport

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many lorries from Fewston Transport of Skipton have been employed on motorway building or maintenance contracts; whether Fewston's vehicles have ever been checked or prosecuted for safety infringements; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will exclude Fewston Transport of Skipton from all future and present motorway contracts;

(3) what requirements on vehicle safety are imposed on contractors and subcontractors on motorway projects; what inspection procedures are in place for vehicle safety; and what sanctions are imposed on firms found running unsafe vehicles.

Mr. Key: All vehicles which use public roads must meet the relevant legal requirements, the enforcement of which is a matter for the police and the Department of Transport's vehicle inspectors.

The vehicle inspectorate has conducted annual roadworthiness tests and roadside spot checks on vehicles belonging to Fewston Transport; the operator has not been prosecuted under his current licence for any vehicle roadworthiness defects or for being overweight.

The Department has no contracts directly with Fewston Transport although the firm may have been engaged as haulage contractors by other contractors or suppliers working on the Department's trunk roads and motorways.

The Department's contracts require compliance with the law generally. We are considering the practicality of a specific requirement that main contractors ensure all goods vehicles using the site are covered by a valid operator's licence. Persistent failure to do so would be a factor taken into account in offering future opportunities to tender for departmental contracts.

The Department has also formed a joint working group on illegal operations to address the problem of illegal operators and to coordinate enforcement action against them.

A27

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the price (a) paid to those who have to sell their property in connection with the development of the A27 in the Worthing area because of urgent personal problems and (b) of their or similar properties before the A27 schemes were announced; and if he will now purchase properties whose owners need to move because of urgent personal problems under the blight conditions.

Mr. Key: The purchase price is the full market value of the property as agreed with the district valuer, calculated as if the scheme had never been proposed. The valuation basis is therefore the same as would have applied before the proposals were announced.

The Department has already agreed to purchase, under discretionary powers, more than 90 properties in the Worthing area whose enjoyment would be seriously affected by the proposals and whose owners need to move because of urgent personal problems. It will continue to do so where the discretionary purchase criteria are met.

Seat Belts

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken into the effectiveness of seat belts in preventing injury in coach and minibus crashes, with particular regard to the relative merits of lap-only belts and three-point belts.

Mr. Key: My Department has carried out a good deal of research on seat belts, primarily in connection with cars, much of which can be used to inform policy decisions on seat belts on public service vehicles.

Both lap and three-point belts are effective in preventing ejection from the vehicle which is a major cause of injury in accidents involving coaches and minibuses.

British Rail

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) British Rail line closures and (b) British Rail passenger and freight service reductions.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1981 and 1994 British Rail passenger services were discontinued on the lines listed. There were no closures in 1979 and 1980. There have of course been a number of new services introduced in this period.

Comparable information is not available for freight-only lines, which have not been subject to statutory closure procedures.

Details of alterations to levels of service on individual passenger and freight lines between 1979 and 1994 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Commercial Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take urgent action to seek a change in the law to make directors of firms, whose neglect of maintenance of commercial vehicles is the cause of road deaths, personally responsible for manslaughter.

Mr. Key: The Law Commission is currently reviewing the law on manslaughter and expects shortly to publish a consultation paper.

Minibus Drivers

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current licensing requirements for minibus drivers; and what plans he has to review them, with particular regard to those drivers transporting children.

Mr. Key: Passenger-carrying vehicle driving entitlement is required to drive any minibus over eight passenger seats when driven for hire or reward. A public consultation on changes arising from the second EC directive on driver licensing, which requires stringent medical and driving test standards for drivers of these vehicles, will include proposals for volunteer drivers of minibuses with up to 16 passenger seats.

Under current legislation drivers who hold ordinary car licences have entitlement to drive vehicles of up to eight passenger seats. If they are 21 years of age or over they are also allowed to drive a minibus with up to 17 seats, including the driver's, provided it is not for hire or reward.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he intends to operate the Transport and Works Act 1992 so as to comply with the requirements of the European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macgregor: Compliance will be achieved by appropriate amendments to the 1992 Act by means of regulations to be made under powers conferred by section 2 of the European Communities Act 1972.

Trunk Road Schemes

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each region all proposals for trunk road widening or construction that are (a) now due to proceed in the course of the next three years, (b) deferred from the next three years following his recent review of the roads programme, but still due to proceed at some future date and (c) originally intended to commence in the next three years but now cancelled completely; and if he will indicate the estimated cost in each case.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 28 February, Official Report, columns 565-66, concerning trunk road schemes due for start of works in 1994-95.

A prioritisation review of the national trunk road programme is currently under way, the conclusions of which will be published shortly.

Coach Crashes (Children)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all coach crashes involving the transport of children for the period since 1984, together with a breakdown of fatalities, serious injuries and lesser injuries.

Mr. Key: The table shows the number of coach accidents in which a child occupant was injured, and the consequent number of child occupant casualties in each of the three injury severity groups.

Coach accidents in which a child occupant was injured, and consequent child occupant casualties: GB 1984-1992

New Roads and Street Works Act

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of whether the groups employed by Nynex Cable Comms in Bolton are working in accordance with the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991; when he intends to respond to the representations from local authorities concerning this Act; what plans he has to change the current legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Assessments in relation to particular local roads are a matter for the local highway authority rather than for me. I have received a number of representations about the operation of the Act, including two letters from my hon. Friend to which I shall reply shortly. We have no plans to change the Act itself but much of its detailed effect is contained in regulations which we are reviewing at present and will change if it is appropriate to do so.

Road Construction Programme

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) the proposed schemes in the Government's road forward construction programme and (b) any deletions or additions to the forward construction programme; and which of those schemes were at the planning stage, at the consultation stage, in construction or to be completed by April 1994.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the information contained in the following White Papers and road reports, copies of which are in the Library:

Policy for Roads: England 1980—(Cmnd 7908).
Policy for Roads: England 1981—(Cmnd 8496).
Roads in England 1982.
Policy for Roads in England: 1983—(Cmnd 9059).
National Roads England 1985.
Policy for Roads in England: 1987—(Cm 125 I-II).
Roads for Prosperity (1989)—(Cm 693).
Trunk Roads, England: Into the 1990s (1990).

A prioritisation review of the national trunk road programme is currently under way, the conclusions of which will be published shortly.

Channel Tunnel Link

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now checked that all information given by him in the House in relation to the Ashford section of the channel tunnel link, was accurate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 24 January, Union Railways has suggested that a route through the barracks to the west of Ashford may now be practicable. Consultation is taking place on this new route option in addition to the two options mentioned in the statement.

Railtrack

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the basis upon which grants to local authorities in connection with section 20 of the Transport Act 1968 to meet increased track charges to be levied by Railtrack for passenger railway operations will be reduced in the year 1995-96 as compared with 1994-95;

(2) what is the basis upon which grants to local authorities in connection with section 20 of the Transport Act 1968 will be increased in the financial year 1994-95 to meet increased track access charges to be levied by Railtrack for passenger railway operations;

(3) what proportion of the increased track charges to be levied by Railtrack for passenger railway services operated under the provisions of section 20 of the Transport Act 1968 will be met by locally-raised revenue, including the council tax;

(4) whether grants to local authorities under section 20 of the Transport Act 1968 to meet increased track access charges to be levied by Railtrack for passenger railway operations will be made directly to passenger transport authorities or to their constituent metropolitan authorities.

Mr. Freeman: Special grants will be paid in 1994-95 to the six English passenger transport authorities, PTAs, to cover the additional costs of maintaining existing service levels of metropolitan passenger rail services resulting from the restructuring of the railway and the introduction of new charging systems for the use of track and rolling stock. In Scotland the extra costs arising in 1994-95 will be paid direct to Strathclyde regional council through the Scottish Office.

These grants will cover the difference between the costs that the passenger transport executives, PTEs, would have incurred under the existing regime and the revised costs once the new charging systems are in place, less amounts being paid to the PTEs in respect of past investment that they have financed through capital grant.

It is our intention to cover the additional costs in 1995-96 and beyond through enhancing the rail "bolt-on" within metropolitan districts' standard spending assessment. The Government will be reviewing the formula for establishing the "bolt-on" in the light of the new charges. In Scotland, the additional costs will be covered in future local government finance settlements.

The proportion of the cost of supporting local rail services by locally raised revenue can be expected, therefore, not to increase.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that grants awarded to local authorities in PTA areas, for the purpose of meeting additional charges imposed by rail operators and resulting from access charges set by Railtrack should be ring-fenced for that purpose beyond 1994-95.

Mr. Freeman: As I explained in my letter to the chairman of the public transport committee of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities of 30 September 1993, special grants will be paid to the six English passenger transport authorities in 1994-95; thereafter the additional costs resulting from the introduction of new charging systems following the restructuring of the railway will be recognised by enhancing the rail "bolt-on" within metropolitan districts' standard spending assessment.

In Scotland the additional costs arising in 1994-95 will be paid direct to Strathclyde regional council through the Scottish Office. Thereafter, the additional costs will be covered in future local government finance settlements.

A1-M1 Link

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to (a) commence and (b) be completed on the Doncaster metropolitan borough council section of the A1-M1 link road servicing the Dearne valley area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The two schemes proposed by Doncaster borough council are on the A635 and would bypass Marr and Hickleton. The council hopes to begin both schemes in 1996 for completion in 1997.

Roads

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects any major trunk road schemes in Suffolk and Norfolk to be progressed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: A great deal is currently being progressed. I recently announced a start of works on two schemes in Norfolk, A11 Besthorpe-Wymondham and A47 Walpole Tilney-Tilney High End. Construction also continues on the A140 Scole-Dickleburgh improvement. The eastern relief road in Lowestoft Market to Saxmundham were published on 1 March and a public inquiry into draft orders for A12 Hopton on Sea was held in January this year. Progress on other schemes is dependent upon the outcome of the review of the road programme. I hope to make an announcement on that soon.

Crossrail

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 124 concerning the cost of the crossrail project, what he meant by the base cost: and whether it included the alterations to the project contained in the additional provision deposited in January 1993.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 4 March 1994]: The base cost estimate of the crossrail project is the estimate believed to be as close as possible to the likely value of contracts to be awarded for the works in a competitive tendering climate when the relevant industries are neither in recession nor over-extended; the £1,703 million base cost estimate referred to in my answer of 11 January includes the cost of the works defined in the additional provision deposited in January 1993.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 124 concerning the cost of the crossrail project, how the estimated sum of £259 million for property purchases and compensation for loss and disturbance to property was arrived at; how much of this sum relates to the purchase of rights in property required for the building of crossrail; and how much relates to compensation for loss and disturbance to property owners.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 4 March 1994]: The estimated sum of £259 million for property purchases and compensation for loss and disturbance to property was a preliminary estimate of the compensation payable in respect of properties which would need to be purchased; it is intended to cover both the market value of the property and compensation for disturbance. The figure is necessarily an overall approximation; the final figure will depend on the outcome of detailed future negotiations between the crossrail Bill promoters and the owners and tenants of the properties affected.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions since 1979 when overseas aid has been made conditional on trade deals.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The provision of overseas aid is not conditional on trade deals. Bilateral aid is largely tied to the procurement of United Kingdom goods and services for projects or programmes supported which we and the recipient Government have agreed as developmental priorities.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the level of aid given to (a) Bangladesh, (b) Ecuador, (c) India, (d) Indonesia, (e) Jordan, (f) Malaysia, (g) Nigeria, (h) Oman, (i) Pakistan and (j) Thailand in each year since 1980.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 3 March 1994]: The levels of gross bilateral aid disbursements to the countries specified were as follows:

Gross public expenditure on bilateral aid

Malaysia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the contract awarded to Biwater or companies connected with Biwater in 1986 for a water supply system in Malaysia, supported by United Kingdom Government financial assistance, was the subject of competitive tender.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 3 March 1994]: No. Biwater secured the project under a negotiated contract with the client, the Malaysian Ministry of Public Works.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electoral Register

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Home Office has taken to ensure that (a) people with learning disabilities and (b) people with sensory disabilities are registered to vote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Last year we provided guidance for electoral registration officers on the registration of people with learning disabilities. We have also circulated guidance prepared by the Royal National Institute for the Blind and the Spastics Society. As part of our post-election review, the RNIB and the Spastics Society were invited to a meeting to discuss the difficulties faced by disabled electors. Their concerns are reflected in the reports of the working groups concerned with particular aspects of the review, copies of which are being placed in the Library.

Drug Offenders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were convicted of drug offences in the Greater London area during 1993.

Mr. Maclean: The 1993 court proceedings data will not be available until the autumn 1994.

In 1992, within the Metropolitan police district and the City of London, 4,828 males and 521 females were convicted of drug offences.

Blakenhurst Prison

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held at Blakenhurst prison on 28 February; and what category has been given to this prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Terry Davis, dated 7 March 1994:

HM Prison Blakenhurst

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking about the number of prisoners at Blakenhurst prison on 28 February, and what category has been given to the prison.

On 28 February 574 prisoners were held in Blakenhurst, which is a category B local prison.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is the Home Office representative at Blakenhurst prison; what is his job title; and what are his responsibilities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Prison Service representative at Her Majesty's prison Blakenhurst is a controller appointed under section 85(1)(b) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. The controller is a governor III and he is supported by a deputy controller and a secretary. Responsibilities of controllers are set out in section 85(4) of the same Act.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken by his Department to ensure that Mr. Bernard Higgins is a suitable person to be director of Blakenhurst prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under section 85(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 every contracted-out prison has to have a director who must be a prisoner custody officer specially approved and appointed by the Secretary of State. A person may not be appointed as a prisoner custody officer unless the Secretary of State is satisfied that the applicant is a fit and proper person to perform the relevant functions and has received training to the standard appropriate for the performance of those functions.

The Secretary of State was so satisfied in the case of Mr. Higgins, who was formerly a governor in the Prison Service, and gave approval for his appointment as director in October 1993.

Ms Ruddock To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, columns 738-40, how many units of accommodation are temporarily unusable;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, columns 738-40, how many prisoners have been transferred to other prisons; and if he will name the prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 7 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about Blakenhurst prison.

No cell accommodation at Blakenhurst was made unusable as a result of the incident there on 24 February but a control room and office accommodation, which are essential for control purposes, were damaged. The certified normal accommodation (649) has therefore been temporarily reduced to 590 to enable repairs to be carried out and to ensure that control is maintained. The normal occupancy level will be resumed in the week beginning 7 March.

61 prisoners were transferred following the incident to other prisons. The establishments concerned were Pentonville, Highdown, Wormwood Scrubs, Norwich, Elmley, Bullingdon, Belmarsh, Shrewsbury, Winchester and Birmingham prisons.

Protection of Pet Animals

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many communications he has received during the consultation on deregulation on the European convention No. ETS 125 for the protection of pet animals; how many were in favour and how many against; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received to (a) raise the age at which a child can buy an animal from a pet shop to 16 years and (b) license animal sanctuaries, in order that the United Kingdom can sign and ratify the European convention No. ETS 125 for the protection of pet animals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Department has received 14 responses to its consultative letter on the European convention for the protection of pet animals. Nine were in favour of the United Kingdom ratifying the convention and five argued against.

In addition to responses to the consultative exercise, the Department has, since January 1992, received one letter from the public arguing that the minimum age at which someone may be sold a pet animal should be raised to 16 years; and one letter proposing that animal sanctuaries should be licensed.

Prisoners (Funerals)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to prison governors in dealing with requests from prisoners to be allowed to attend funerals under escort; and if he will place a copy of this guidance in the Library.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Terry Davis, dated 7 March 1994.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about prisoners' escorted absences to attend funerals.

Guidance for Governors is contained in Standing Order 7E, its accompanying Circular Instruction (43/1990), and the Security Manual, section 59.

Copies of these documents are already in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people detained at Blakenhurst prison were allowed to attend family funerals under escort (a) in January and (b) in February;

(2) how many requests from prisoners at Blakenhurst prison to attend funerals under escort were refused (a) in January and (b) in February;

(3) how much money is paid to United Kingdom Detention Services for the cost of escorting prisoners at Blakenhurst prison to funerals and other important family events.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Terry Davis, dated 7 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about prisoners at Blakenhurst prison attending funerals and other important family events.

Two prisoners at Blakenhurst were allowed to attend family funerals under escort in January and none in February. No prisoners were refused attendance at funerals in January and three prisoners were refused in February.

UKDS tendered to provide the service set out in the contract for the whole operation of the prison, including escorting prisoners to court and elsewhere, and are paid an agreed sum for this total service.

Prison Governors

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the entitlement of prison governors to time off work to attend family funerals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Terry Davis, dated 7 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the entitlement of prison governors to time off work to attend family funerals.

Special leave for this purpose is not an entitlement. Wherever possible, however, subject to the operational needs of establishments, governors would be allowed time off, with pay, to attend the funeral of a close relative or dependant.

Voter Registration

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve voter registration amongst 17 to 25-year-olds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We carry out an annual advertising campaign to encourage people to complete and return the electoral registration form, and provide posters and leaflets aimed at young people. We also commission research into the working methods of electoral registration officers which is used to inform guidance to assist them in their task of drawing up a comprehensive register.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the proportion of those eligible to vote in this year's European Parliament election who are aged between 18 and 25 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department spent on encouraging 17 to 25-year-olds to put their names on the electoral register in (a) 1979, (b) 1985, (c) 1990 and (d) the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: (a) No breakdown of advertising expenditure figures showing expenditure targeted at 17 to 25-year-olds is immediately available.

(b) 1984-85—£12,226 was spent on a public information film.

(c) 1989-90—£5,300 was spent on specific leaflets. This was in addition to a £452,000 advertisting campaign aimed at all adults aged 16 plus.

(d) 1993-94—£4,000 was spent on specific posters. This was in addition to a £620,000 advertisting campaign aimed at all adults aged 16 plus.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's advertising in persuading young people between 17 and 25 years to go on to the electoral register.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Research undertaken following the 1993 television advertising campaign showed the following:

(1) that awareness among 16 to 24-year-olds, of the need to do something to be registered, rose during the campaign period from 22 per cent. to 40 per cent.

(2) that awareness among 16 to 24-year-olds, of the need to put their name on a form to register, rose during the campaign period from 33 per cent. to 49 per cent.

(3) recognition of electoral registration advertising in 1993 by the 16 to 24 age group reached 50 per cent.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of people who were between 18 and 25 years at the 1987 general election (a) were registered to vote at that election and (b) actually voted at that election;

(2) what proportion of those on the electoral register in each year from 1986 to 1993 were aged between 17 and 25 years;

(3) how many people of those currently eligible to vote are aged between 18 and 25 years; and what proportion of this is of the total number eligible to vote;

(4) what percentage of (a) those registered to vote in Britain and (b) those who voted in Britain during the 1992 general election were aged between 17 and 25 years;

(5) what proportion of people who were between 18 and 25 years at the 1992 general election (a) were registered to vote at that election and (b) actually voted at that election;

(6) what percentage of (a) those registered to vote in Britain and (b) those who voted in Britain during the 1987 general election were aged between 17 and 25 years;

(7) what proportion of 17 to 25-year-olds are currently on the electoral register; and what proportion of British citizens as a whole are currently on the electoral register.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available.

Parole

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means his Department ensures that offenders on parole in the care of the probation service, who are required to attend a forensic consultant psychiatrist as a condition of their parole, actually do so.

Mr. Maclean: The responsibility for ensuring that offenders on parole comply with their licence conditions rests with local probation services. The Home Office has recently reminded all probation services of the importance of giving prompt effect to licence conditions.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation keeps the performance of all services under review.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to provide disclosure of parole dossiers and reasons for parole decisions to those prisoners who were sentenced before the early release provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1992 came into force on 1 October 1992.

Mr. Howard: I propose to provide openness in the parole process to those prisoners sentenced before 1 October 1992 who have a parole eligibility date—PED—or its anniversay, of 1 October 1994 and beyond. Under the openness arrangements the parole timetable takes about 26 weeks from start to finish; prisoners should receive their parole dossiers about four months before their PED, be interviewed about their parole case by a parole board member about three months before PED, and receive reasons for the parole decision about three weeks before PED. On this timetable, the review process will begin in early April for those prisoners who become parole eligible from 1 October.

I shall continue to take decisions on the release on parole licence of such prisoners, after taking into account the recommendations of the parole board.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Howard: In the current financial year the Home Office will be spending £311,800 on the provision of subsidised child care for staff at a variety of locations throughout England. This provides 104 nursery day care places for 128 children under five and 503 holiday play scheme places for children between five and 12-years-old. In all instances subsidised child care provision is made available only where it can be shown to be justified in value for money terms.

Mr. Sammy Davis

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letters sent to him by Mr. Steve Haywood, 57 Medusa road, Catford, SE6, dated 8 June 1993 and 7 February 1994, regarding the case of Mr. Sammy Davis.

Mr. Charles Wardle: An official reply has now been sent to Mr. Haywood about the case of Mr. Sammy Davis. I have arranged for a copy of that letter to be forwarded to the hon. Member.

Closed Circuit Television Systems

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether funding is available from his Department for local authorities to establish closed circuit television systems to reduce crime.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no specific funds available for local authorities for this purpose. Funding for the capital costs of closed circuit television systems has been made available to some local authorities and others through the Home Office safer cities programme. It is also open to local police authorities to contribute towards the provision of CCTV systems from their capital allocation which is supported by 51 per cent. Home Office grant.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made as to the implications of the United Kingdom Government failing to implement the chemical weapons convention prior to July 1994; and what these would be.

Mr. Needham: There are unlikely to be any significant implications for the United Kingdom if the Government do not implement the chemical weapons convention by July 1994 as the earliest that the convention can enter into force internationally is 13 January 1995.

Rover Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 830, if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the letter to him from BMW; and to what extent the assurances therein have been affected by subsequent developments.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. Copies of the letter were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 31 January.

Honda has stated that it intends to continue current and planned collaborative programmes with Rover subject to negotiations on the commercial terms.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 319, whether he expects the amount of research and development on Rover cars, other than Land Rover, to increase solely as a result of the takeover by BMW.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Wena Hotels

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Egyptian authorities during the arbitration process involving Wena Hotels.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker raised the experience of Wena Hotels when she met the Egyptian Prime Minister, Dr. Atef Sidqi, and the Minister for the Public Business Sector, Dr. Atef Ebeid, in Cario on 13 November 1993. Our embassy in Cairo has kept in close contact with both Wena Hotels and the Egyptian authorities on this issue.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider United Kingdom aid to Egypt following the experiences of Wena Hotels' investment in Egypt.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no such plans.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take to protect and promote the interests of United Kingdom companies which invest in Egypt following the experiences of Wena Hotels.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned at Wena Hotels' experience and will continue to do what we can to help it and other British investors, the overwhelming majority of whom experience no difficulty in their dealings in Egypt.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Egyptian authorities in respect of the United Kingdom company Wena Hotels' investment in Egypt prior to the arbitration process involving that company.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We raised the question of Wena Hotels with the Egyptian authorities on a number of occasions. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs did so with the Egyptian Foreign Minister during President Mubarak's visit to London in the spring of 1993, urging the Egyptian authorities to encourage the Egyptian party to the dispute to go to arbitration as soon as possible.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge a total ban on the production, sale and use of anti-personnel mines at the review conference on the inhumane weapons convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom intends to play a full part in the review conference on the 1981 United Nations weaponry convention, which we expect to take place in 1995. We are also participating in the meetings to prepare for the conference, the first of which took place in Geneva from 28 February to 4 March.

The main aim of the review conference will be to consider the strengthening of protocol II of the weaponry convention, which already contains strict rules governing the use of mines. Our priority at the conference will be to encourage greater adherence to the United Nations weaponry convention.

East Timor

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what inquiries Her Majesty's Government made of the Indonesian authorities in regard to the murder of British citizens Brian Peters and Malcolm Rennie, near Balibo on East Timor, on 16 October 1975, during the invasion of East Timor by Indonesian military forces.

Mr. Goodlad: We pressed the Indonesians for information at the time, as did the Australian Government, as Mr. Peters and Mr. Rennie were working in East Timor as part of an Australian television team.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how overseas domestic workers are given the leaflet on their rights in the United Kingdom; if he will ensure this is done without the presence of the employer and that the domestic worker is given time to read the leaflet before rejoining the employer; and whether these leaflets are available in all appropriate languages.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Overseas domestic workers are handed a copy of the information leaflet when interviewed at post for entry clearance, without their employers present.

Leaflets are available in Arabic, Bengali, Hindi, Punjab, Spanish, Tagalog, Tamil, Thai and Urdu, as well as English. Where an applicant does not understand, the contents of the leaflet are explained.

Turkey

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government relations with Turkey.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Our relationship with Turkey is good, reflecting our close ties in NATO and Turkey's long-standing association with the European Union.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in Turkey.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The human rights situation in Turkey is worrying. The Turkish Government are aware of our concerns. We recognise the difficulties faced by the Turkish authorities in tackling the PKK terrorist threat in the south-east, but this has to be done within the rule of law and with full respect for human rights.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last made representations to the Government of Turkey regarding the treatment of Kurds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last raised human rights with the Turkish Government during his visit to Ankara on 19 and 20 January.

Iraq

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the United Nations concerning its sanctions of medical supplies and food to Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Iraq is discussed regularly by the Security Council. We remain determined that Iraq must comply fully with all its international obligations as set out in Security Council resolutions.

Medicines have never been subject to sanctions, and food has been exempt since the passage of United Nations Security Council resolution 687 in April 1991.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from hon. Members concerning sanctions on Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received a number of letters from hon. Members about sanctions against Iraq. On 22 February the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) tabled an early-day motion about the effect of sanctions on the humanitarian situation in Iraq.

We do not believe that sanctions should be lifted until Iraq complies with all its international obligations under the relevant Security Council resolutions.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for the views of Her Majesty's Government regarding Iraqi treatment of the Kurds to be conveyed to the Government of Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Kingdom representatives at the United Nations continue to press Iraq to respect the human rights of its population. We are co-sponsors of a resolution at the current session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights which condemns Iraq's continued abuses of the human rights of all citizens, including the Kurds.

We, the United States, France and Russia made a demarche to Iraq on 5 January protesting against Iraqi behaviour including the blockade of the Kurdish area and the cutting off of electricity to Dohuk. The Security Council also took into account Iraq's repression of the civilian population when deciding on 18 January that there were no grounds to lift United Nations sanctions.

Libya

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Nations sanctions on Libya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Security Council imposed sanctions against Libya through its resolutions 748 and 883. The Council has expressed its readiness to review these measures with a view to suspending them immediately if the Secretary-General reports to the Council that the Libyan Government have ensured the appearance of those charged with the bombing of Pan Am 103 for trial before the appropriate United Kingdom or United States court and have satisfied the French judicial authorities with respect to the bombing of UTA 772.

Albania

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has studied the conclusions of the permanent monitors of the European Community regarding border incidents between Serbia/Montenegro and Albania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 March 1994]: The EC monitoring mission in Albania provides factual reports on incidents on the Serbia/Albania border. We study its reports closely. We believe that the ECMM presence is a valuable confidence-building measure, and we regret that the Serb authorities have refused to allow the EC monitoring mission to undertake independent investigation of particular incidents.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) Albanians and (b) Serbs have been killed or wounded near the border of Serbia/Montenegro and Albania since 1 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 March 1994]: According to information provided by the Albanian authorities, two Albanian nationals have been killed near the Albanian border with Serbia/Montenegro. One Albanian national has been wounded. We have no information on the number of Serbs killed or wounded near the border.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken or proposes to take regarding aggression by Serbian forces against Albania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 March 1994]: We understand that a number of border incidents have resulted in Albanian casualties. We condemn any such incidents, which put at risk the stability of the entire region, and call on the leaders of all countries in the region to show restraint.

Kosovo

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken or proposes to take regarding violations of human rights by the Serbian authorities in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 March 1994]: We condemn reported Serbian violation of human rights in Kosovo and continue to press for the return of the CSCE monitors expelled from Kosovo in 1993. Members of the British embassy in Belgrade visit the region regularly, and maintain contact with the political parties based there. I met Dr. Rugova in London in December.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received the report of the United States State Department on human rights in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 March 1994]: Yes, we have received the State Department report on human rights in Serbia/Montenegro, which includes Kosovo.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the expulsion of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe monitors from Kosovo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 March 1994]: In July 1993 the Belgrade authorities refused to allow the CSCE missions in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina to continue their activities and the missions had to withdraw. The United Kingdom had contributed two monitors.

The CSCE continues to press for the return of the missions. Their presence was a stabilising influence and contributed to the prevention of conflict. The CSCE is monitoring developments in the region with the help of diplomats from CSCE embassies in Belgrade.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of people of Albanian descent who have fled from Kosovo over the past two years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 March 1994]: We understand that numbers of people, of both Serbian and Albanian descent, have left Kosovo in the last two years, but do not have reliable figures.

Departmental Records

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress with the computerisation of his Department's financial record keeping, drawing attention to any difficulties and stating the arrangements for ensuring continuity of supply of the computer equipment and consumables.

Mr. Goodlad: Following a study of the requirements of a new financial management accounting system—FMAS—a notice of tender was published in the official journal of the European Union in November 1993. Responses from interested parties are currently being evaluated and it is expected that a contract for development of the new system will be let later this year. The FMAS project is being managed in accordance with standard Government methodologies. Contracts exist with outside contractors for the maintenance of existing systems and the supply of consumables. Similar contracts will be put in place for the new system.

Suspense Accounts

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the suspense accounts referred to in the 36th report of the Committee of Public Accounts 1990-91, HC275, remain unreconciled or have been reconciled in a way that has not wholly satisfied the auditor.

Mr. Goodlad: All the suspense accounts referred to have now been reconciled. The Comptroller and Auditor General did not make any qualifications on the FCO accounts for 1991-92 or 1992-93.

Accounting Officers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters have been reported to his Department's accounting officer by finance staff following the issue of written instructions in March 1991 referred to in paragraph 9 of the Treasury minute on the 36th report from the Committee of Public Accounts 1990-91, Cm. 1725.

Mr. Goodlad: The March 1991 instructions remain in force. The performance of the accounting systems has been carefully monitored. No reports to the accounting officer have been necessary.

PRIME MINISTER

Northern Ireland

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the main differences between the agreement between the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) and Mr. Gerry Adams and the Downing street declaration; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Downing street declaration was the result of work between the two Governments, which began when I first met Mr. Reynolds shortly after he became Taoiseach in February 1992.

I have seen no document purporting to be an agreement between the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) and Mr. Adams, save for their published statements.

Quangos

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will hold all paid members of Government quangos liable to surcharge in the same way as elected councillors.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no powers to surcharge paid members of non-departmental public bodies in the same way as elected councillors and have no plans to seek such powers. Public bodies are already able to apply disciplinary sanctions, including seeking prosecutions where appropriate.

Ministers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 770, if he will list the five Cabinet Ministers who have served in the armed forces.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the President of the Board of Trade, the Lord Privy Seal and the Secretary of State for National Heritage, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland have all done national service.

Jewellery

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 28 February to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) Official Report, column 579, if he will list the items of jewellery on the official inventory of No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 March 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 3 March, Official Report, column 804.

EDUCATION

LEA Schools

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary local authority-controlled schools in Birmingham he has visited in the last 12 months.

Mr. Patten: I have not visited any schools in Birmingham in the last 12 months. Since becoming Secretary of State I have visited two Birmingham schools: Cockshut Hill secondary school and Small Heath grant-maintained school.

School Buses

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice he issues to the governing bodies of grant-maintained schools in relation to the safety and roadworthiness of public service vehicles that are contracted to convey children to and from school.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1991 the Department arranged for all schools to receive the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents code of practice on school transport safety. On 21 January 1994, the Department issued guidance on school transport—including safety—to local education authorities, which are responsible for the home-to-school transport of pupils at self-governing schools.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools operate driver safety programmes for their staff minibus drivers.

Mr. Forth: Neither this Department nor the Department of Transport have statistics available—information is not collected centrally.

Further Education

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what guidance he provides to the Further Education Funding Council on the measures to be taken following the refusal of any lecturer employed by an incorporated further education college to sign a new contract;

(2) what statutory powers exist for the Further Education Funding Council to penalise lecturers in incorporated colleges of further education who refuse to sign new contracts;

(3) what statutory powers exist for the Further Education Funding Council to require lecturers employed in incorporated colleges of further education to sign new contracts and render existing contracts invalid.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council is taking no such action. Neither my right hon. Friend nor the FEFC has any statutory powers, either to require lecturers to sign new contracts, or to penalise those who do not. The conditions for the release of grant withheld from the FEFC relate only to contracts of employment for new staff. It is for individual colleges to deal with their staff about contracts of employment.

Birmingham Education Officers

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many meetings he has held with (a) Birmingham city council education officers and (b) Birmingham city councillors from the controlling group in (i) the last 12 months and (ii) since he came to office.

Mr. Patten: None.

School Transport

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list (a) those local education authorities providing free transport to school and (b) those charging for all journeys of over three miles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: All local education authorites have a statutory duty to provide or arrange free of charge the transport which they consider necessary for a pupil's school attendance. But since LEAs have discretion to consider each case on its merits, information is not collected centrally.

Special Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to include in the code of practice on special educational needs guidelines on evidence which local education authorities will need to have available in order to make a decision as to whether or not to make a statement, with particular reference to evidence that relevant and purposeful measures have been taken to meet the child's special educational needs in his or her present school and that these have proved to be insufficient.

Mr. Forth: Parts III and IV of the draft code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs contain extensive guidance to local education authorities on the evidence they should consider when deciding whether to make assessments and statements, including evidence about the special educational provision made by the child's mainstream school. My right hon. Friend will consider all representations received during the consultation process on the draft code and lay a revised code before Parliament.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans he has to establish guidelines in the code of practice on special education needs defining the level of resources which should be normally available, or to designate this more clearly as a responsibility of the local education authorities;

(2) what is his policy on the balance local education authorities should endeavour to achieve between resources allocated to schools to help cater for pupils with special educational needs and resources held centrally in order to provide resources for pupils with statements;

(3) what guidance is given in the draft code of practice on special educational needs, about the proportion of their budgets local education authorities should allocate towards special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: It is and will remain for local education authorities, in the light of local policies and circumstances, to decide what level of resources will normally be available to schools in their area; the proportion of their general schools budgets to be allocated to special educational needs; and the balance between resources delegated to schools and those held centrally for pupils with special educational needs. The Department has recently issued guidance on the local management of schools in circular 2/94. My right hon. Friend will consider all comments received during the consultation process on the draft code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. He will lay a revised code before Parliament in due course.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to set up a national representative group to monitor the implementation of the proposed code of practice on special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: None. The Department will, with Office of Standards in Education and others, monitor closely the implementation of all aspects of part III of the 1993 Act, including the code of practice.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he wil list all applications for capital grants from grant-maintained schools that he received which relate to the need to improve or extend accommodation as a result of a change in the ages between which children attend the school.

Mr. Robin Squire: The statutory proposals published under section 89 of the Education Reform Act 1988 relating to changes to age range at grant-maintained schools are as follows:

Note:

Table shows all applications for a change of age range. Where applications requested grant to improve or extend accommodation, a grant figure is listed.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total sum of money made available for meeting applications for capital grants from grant-maintained schools during 1992-93 and 1993-94; and how much was awarded in grants during each year.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of £28·5 million of grant was available to grant-maintained schools in 1992-93 for expenditure on capital work. For 1993-94 the total grant available is £87·6 million.

The amount of grant paid to schools in 1992-93 was £25·8 million. The final outturn figure for 1993-94 is not yet available.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what criteria he uses for deciding which applications for capital grants from grant-maintained schools to approve.

Mr. Robin Squire: Self-governing schools are eligible for two main kinds of capital grant: a formula allocation grant for all schools for small-scale capital works, which schools may use according to their own priorities; and named project grant, for which schools may bid.

For 1994-95 financial year the priorities set for the assessment of named projects are:

1. Commitments arising from projects already approved and started but unlikely to be finished before April 1994;
2. Major repairs and other work required on priority health and safety grounds;

3. Bids for projects involving work required to implement the national curriculum;
4. New projects to provide additional school places in areas of population growth—basic need—and;
5. Work involving access for the disabled.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all applications for capital grants from grant-maintained schools made during (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94, indicating the name of the school, the purposes and amount of the application, the amount granted and the purpose of the grant.

Mr. Robin Squire: Applications for capital grant in annual bidding exercises are made in advance of the financial year concerned. I therefore refer the hon. Member to the copies of papers I have previously placed in the Library detailing all applications made during 1992-93 for funding in 1993-94, and all those made during 1993-94 for funding in 1994-95. The papers similarly detail the resulting allocations.

Bids from schools entering the sector between September 1993 and January 1994 are still under consideration.

In addition, all schools are eligible for a formula allocation capital grant.

Children

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make an estimate of the costs involved in raising the primary school starting age to the beginning of the academic year in which they are age six for all children and the introduction of a minimum of two years full-time nursery education for all children.

Mr. Robin Squire: The estimated net additional cost of providing full-time education in nursery classes to all the pupils in the age group identified by the hon. Member would be £1·7 billion in current prices. In addition there would be costs associated with capital, transport, and the training of additional teaching and support staff.

Driving Lessons

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy as to children being taught to drive motor cars as part of their school education; how many children in each of the last three years have been taught to drive; and what has been the cost to public funds.

Mr. Robin Squire: Driving lessons are not part of the national curriculum. I am not aware of any recent representations for such provision to be made by schools nor of any schools which do so.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Robin Squire: London-based staff are able to use the Westminster holiday play scheme, which is organised by the Office of Public Service and Science. The cost of places is shared equally by parents and the Department. In the year ending 31 March 1993 six members of staff used the scheme for their children on one or more occasions, at a cost to the Department of £821.

Darlington-based staff have access to a play scheme which was set up at the instigation of the Department for Education. Places are shared with other civil servants working in the Darlington area. In the current financial year the accommodation cost to this Department will be £2,705, and 73 children of DFE staff will use the scheme.

The Department contributes towards child care facilities as part of its policy of promoting equal opportunities for staff with domestic commitments.

Equal Opportunities (Training)

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which local education authorities have bid for grants for education support and training funding for training in equal opportunities; whether those local education authorities are to receive that funding; and what the total grants for education support and training expenditure will be for 1994-95.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is no provision in the 1994-95 grants for education support and training—GEST—programme for schemes to fund equal opportunities. The Department will be supporting LEA expenditure of some £270·6 million in 1994-95 for a range of educational priorities through the GEST programme.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what weekly amount of money and what percentage of their gross earnings a single earner couple with two children on average earnings in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside, (b) north Yorkshire, (c) west Yorkshire, (d) south Yorkshire and (e) Humberside paid in (i) income tax less child benefit, (ii) national insurance contributions and (iii) VAT in 1978-79; and what amount and percentage of their gross earnings each of those average families will have paid in 1994-95.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information for 1978-79 and 1993-94 is shown in the table. Tax payments in 1994-95 will depend on earnings growth in each region.

Yorkshire and Humberside—income tax and national insurance contributions as a percentage of earnings

Income tax less child benefit	12·6	10·7
National insurance contributions	6·5	7·8

Notes to table

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.
2. Child benefit is treated as a negative income tax.
3. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males at adult rates with pay unaffected by absence in April of each year.

Bank Charging Arrangements

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings he and his ministerial colleagues have had with the chairmen or representatives of the clearing banks regarding their charging arrangements for small business and personal customers since 1 January 1993.

Mr. Nelson: My ministerial colleagues and I meet the chairmen and representatives of the clearing banks from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues. Most recently, my officials and I have held a series of meetings with the banks to discuss the industrial finance initiative.

Civil Service Pay Delegation

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on civil service pay delegation.

Mr. Dorrell: As set out in the "Citizen's charter: First Report of November 1992", the delegation of pay and grading matters is an important element in the Government's drive to improve quality and efficiency in the provision of public services. By allowing the introduction of pay and grading systems tailored to the objectives and requirements of individual organisations, delegation enhances the ability of managers to manage and develops the Government's policy of linking pay and performance.

By 1 April the 23 home civil service organisations listed in the table below will have taken on responsibility for negotiating the pay and conditions of their own staff. The staff affected—who account for around 55 per cent. of the home civil service—carry out a wide variety of work in locations across the United Kingdom, reflecting the diversity of the organisations concerned. In addition, departments and agencies employing some 40,000 industrial civil servants have decided to take delegated responsibility for pay and grading arrangements. This means that in total over 60 per cent. of the home civil service will be under delegated arrangements by July 1994.

It is clear that there is scope to improve further the delivery of public services by extending the pay delegation initiative. I have therefore invited all remaining executive agencies employing over 500 staff, together with the larger agency candidates, to put forward proposals for taking on pay delegation by 1 April 1995, where this is appropriate to their business needs.

WALES

Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many days per week Sir Geoffrey Inkin is contractually bound to give to each of the three non-departmental public bodies which he chairs or of which he is a member.

Mr. Redwood: The average time commitments of the public appointments held by Sir Geoffrey Inkin OBE are as follows.

Cardiff Bay development corporation—2½ days per week.
Land Authority for Wales —2½ days per week.
He is not on three bodies.

Inward Investment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 415, what action he will take following his reading of the report on inward investment and industrial innovation in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The report shows that encouraging developments are under way in Wales. Programmes such as Source Wales, and a range of training and innovation support measures, are already in place to address those areas where the report considers that further progress is required. These programmes are kept under constant review. For example, my recent consultation paper, "People and Prosperity—A Challenge to Wales" has elicited an excellent response and I will be publishing a strategy framework for training, education and enterprise in due course.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations expressing opposition to the original scheme for the reorganisation of the milk marketing board he received from within Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Six of the 62 representations I received about the Milk Marketing Board's original scheme of reorganisation expressed opposition to all or part of the proposals.

Research Reports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he published the 20th research report Wales, for 1992-93; how many copies were printed; at what cost; and to whom they have been distributed.

Mr. Redwood: "Research Wales, 20th report", which sets out research supported by the Welsh Office in 1992-93, was published on 1 February 1994; 220 copies were printed at a cost of £230. As well as being made available on request, copies have been sent to national libraries, higher education institutions, the Welsh Affairs Committee, the Libraries of the House and various media organisations.

Languages

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to increase the use of British languages that belong to the Brythonic and Goidelic families of languages.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are five indigenous Celtic languages: Welsh and Cornish (which falls into the Brythonic group) and Irish, Scots Gaelic and Manx (which fall into the Goidelic group). Of these, only three are commonly used today. These are Welsh, Irish and Scots Gaelic.

The Government have a long-standing commitment to helping to secure the future of the Welsh language. The Welsh Language Act 1993 is the latest manifestation of this commitment. The Act establishes the principle that in the conduct of public business and the administration of justice in Wales, Welsh and English should be treated on a basis of equality so far as is both appropriate in the circumstances and reasonably practicable. The Act also establishes the Welsh Language Board with the objective of promoting and facilitating the use of Welsh. It is the Government's belief that, as a result of the Welsh Language Act and the work of the Welsh Language Board, a substantial increase in the public services available to the public through the medium of Welsh will be achieved. The goal is to give effect to the Government's long-term aid of allowing people who wish to do so the choice of using Welsh in all aspects of their daily lives.

The Government support the Welsh language in other ways. We are acutely aware of the importance of education and, since 1988, Welsh has been an integral part of the schools curriculum in Wales. It is a core subject in Welsh medium schools and compulsory in all other maintained schools in Wales. Nursery education is particularly important and I was pleased recently to be able to announce a substantial increase in our contribution to Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin, the Welsh nursery schools movement, for the coming financial year; £537,000 has been allocated —a 15 per cent. increase on 1993-94—to help Mudiad develop in the less Welsh-speaking areas of Gwent and Deeside.

At the same time I was also able to announce further grants to other voluntary organisations playing a significant part in ensuring that the language flourishes: the National Eisteddford, the Welsh Books Council and Urdd Gobaith Cymru, the Welsh youth movement.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland supports the Gaelic language and culture by providing grants (a) to education authorities to provide Gaelic-medium education; (b) for the making of television programmes in Gaelic; and (c) to cultural organisations committed to maintaining and developing the use of the language. It is hoped that these measures will lead to an increase in the use of Gaelic in Scotland.

The Government recognise that the Irish language is an important part of the cultural heritage of many people in Northern Ireland. The Government manifest respect for the special importance of the language of those people, encourage interest in it and appreciation of it for its own sake rather than any political connotations, and seek to highlight the contribution that the language has made to the cultural heritage of the whole community.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had in relation to the compliance by Cardiff Bay development corporation with the undertaking specified in the code of practice, paragraph 2.3, on the operation of schedule 7 to the Cardiff Bay Barrage Act 1993 that owners and occupiers would be informed individually 28 days before the commencement of construction and 28 days before impoundment.

Mr. Redwood: The hon. Member wrote to me on 4 February about certain aspects of the notification procedure and I replied on 27 February. Lord Brabazon of Tara, who chaired the Select Committee in another place, has also written to me following representations from local residents groups. His letter is being considered and I shall be replying in due course. My officials have also discussed related issues with representatives of the local residents group.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Balfour Beatty construction consortium in relation to the provisional awarding of the contract to construct the Cardiff Bay barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1993-94 my Department spent £16,703 in support of child care for its staff; £12,246 of this provided 30 full-time nursery places currently being used by 37 children, some part-time and £4,457 supported play schemes for approximately 45 children during the Easter and summer holidays. My Department is committed to providing child care where it is cost-effective in assisting the retention of trained and experienced staff. The cost of support is evaluated annually.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give a ranking by county of the percentage of women who are claiming child benefit;

(2) if he will provide a ranking by region of the percentage of women who are claiming child benefit.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available. Child benefit take-up is estimated to be nearly 100 per cent. The percentage of child benefit recipients who are women is estimated to be 95 per cent.

Benefits (Overseas Residents)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people living abroad have been receiving benefits under regulation 2 of the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975.

Mr. Scott: The number is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sickness

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has as to the reasons for changes in the number of claims for sickness and invalidity benefits and in periods of sick leave since 1985.

Mr. Scott: This Department has undertaken an extensive programme of research into the factors underlying the growth in caseloads of invalidity benefit. This consisted of five reports which were published last autumn. Copies have been placed in the Library. We have also commissioned research on employers' responses to the 1991 changes in statutory sick pay. The report, which will include an analysis of factors affecting sickness rates and control of sickness absence, will be published shortly.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been sent assessment forms so far this year by the Child Support Agency; what will the total number of assessment forms by the Child Support Agency in 1993-94; and how many assessment forms will be issued by the Child Support Agency in the following years 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Mike Hall, dated 4 March 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the number of maintenance assessment forms sent by the Child Support Agency.

In the period 5 April to 31 December 1993 the Agency issued 711,000 maintenance application forms to parents with care.

It is not possible to give estimates of the expected number of application forms which will be issued in future years, but overall the Agency expects to be dealing with around one million parents with care in each year.

I hope this reply is useful.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average maintenance settlement issued by the Child Support Agency; what is the average maintenance payment collected by the Child Support Agency; and how many of those contacted by the Child Support Agency already paid maintenance under existing arrangements.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Mike Hall, dated 4 March 1994:

I am replying to you recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

You asked about the average maintenance assessment made and collected by the Agency. Initial estimates were that average weekly maintenance assessments by the Agency would be approximately £45-£50 a week. Information gathered on assessments completed to date, and the amounts the Agency therefore expects to collect, is consistent with these estimates.

You also ask about clients with existing maintenance arrangements. To the end of December 1993, the Agency had issued maintenance enquiry forms to 344,000 absent parents. Figures were not kept on the proportion of these cases in which maintenance was not already being paid. We estimate, however, that about 55 per cent. of cases taken-on by the Agency were not already receiving maintenance.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have started to pay maintenance in line with the Child Support Agency assessments.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Mike Hall, dated 4 March 1994:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of people paying maintenance to the Child Support Agency.

The Child Support Computer System records clients' details on an individual case by case basis. It is not currently configured to produce the information in the form requested.

It may be helpful, however, if I explain that as at 31 December 1993 the Agency had completed 121,600 assessments of which over half were issued in the last two months.

I hope this reply is useful.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what level of housing benefit was payable to households in (a) council tenancies, (b) housing association tenancies and (c) private tenancies, annually, for each year from 1988.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), on 25 January at columns 185-86.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Scott: The net cost of providing subsidised child care facilities for staff in this Department is currently around £500,000 a year. This sum is spent on workplace nurseries, 600 places; holiday play schemes, 2,460 places; after school child care and child care referral services.

These initiatives are supported on value for money grounds in helping to recruit and retain staff and in enabling the staff themselves to balance the demands of home and work.

ENVIRONMENT

Government Offices

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 863, if he will list any Government accommodation in (a) the SW1 postal district of London and (b) the remainder of the United Kingdom that is undergoing refurbishment, showing the location of the accommodation being refurbished and the nature and cost of each refurbishment.

Mr. Baldry: Vacant or partially vacant properties on the common user estate with refurbishment schemes in planning or execution are listed. Refurbishment ranges from minor internal uplift to full-scale replacement of services, modernisation, refitting and improvement to render buildings capable of re-occupation and economic use.

Some schemes are undertaken and funded by occupying Departments or landlords and the cost of providing fully comprehensive information and the costs of each scheme would be uneconomic.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, (1) pursuant to his answer of 12 January to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans), Official Report, columns 200-1, regarding the conducting of the investigation of shipments of hazardous waste from the United Kingdom to developing countries (a) how much civil service and consultant time the investigation has utilised so far, (b) how much civil servant and consultant time the investigation is expected to utilise in total, (c) which organisation other than his Department will be involved in the investigation, (d) what are the terms of reference of the investigation, (e) when and how the investigation was announced and (f) which United Kingdom and overseas organisations have been invited to submit evidence;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 12 January to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans), Official Report, columns 200-1, regarding the report of the investigation of shipments of hazardous waste from the United Kingdom to developing countries (a) when the investigation will be complete, (b) how the investigation will make its report and (c) when the report will be made public;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 12 January to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans), Official Report, columns 200-1, regarding the scope of the investigation of shipments of hazardous waste from the United Kingdom to developing countries (a) which countries the investigators will visit and for how long, (b) how many hazardous waste recovery facilities the investigators will visit, (c) which United Kingdom organisations have been invited to submit evidence and (d) what criteria the investigation will use to evaluate whether recovery operations in non-OECD countries are environmentally sound.

Mr. Atkins: The investigation has utilised about 150 hours of civil service time, but no consultant time to date. The time which will be spent upon the investigation will depend upon the findings in the first stage of the inquiry, which is designed to obtain information about environmental standards in receiving countries. The Department will consult representative trade organisations for the industries mainly concerned as well as environmental interest groups.

The announcement of the investigation and its terms of reference, details of the reporting method and its availability and the United Kingdom organisations invited to submit evidence were detailed in my reply of 12 January 1994 to my hon. Friend the Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans), Official Report, columns 200-1. No specific invitations were issued to organisations to submit evidence, but I shall be glad to take account of any relevant information that United Kingdom or overseas organisations might send me.

The first stage of the investigation will be completed in May 1994. The countries and hazardous waste facilities which will be investigated will depend upon the outcome of the first stage of the inquiry. The investigation will use the technical criteria established by the United Nations environment programme's expert group, the Basel convention technical working group on the environmentally sound management of wastes, when evaluating recovery operations in non-OECD countries.

Landfill

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of the meeting on 28 February between his Department and the waste industry to discuss compliance with the Environmental Protection Act 1990 relating to landfill.

Mr. Atkins: No meeting was held on 28 February between my Department and the waste industry.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the cost of licences needed to dispose of waste as a result of EC directives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: As the then Minister for the Environment and Countryside explained on 29 November 1993, Official Report, column 384, the Government intend to bring the waste management licensing provisions of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 into force on 1 May 1994. Those provisions will reflect the requirements of relevant EC directives. We have consulted interested parties in stages since August 1992 on our detailed proposals. Building on that consultation, the Department circulated for comment a draft compliance cost assessment and invited comments from industry by 28 February. We have received nine responses from trade associations and individual companies.

On 10 August and 4 December 1992 consultation papers were issued on the charging scheme for waste management licensing which we propose to make under section 41 of the 1990 Act. All of the representations received in response to those consultation papers have been considered and details of the charging scheme which will come into force on 1 May 1994 will be announced as soon as possible.

Housing

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the average percentage increases over the last three years in (a) registered fair rents in private unfurnished lettings, (b) house prices and (c) commercial rents.

Sir George Young: The latest available information on average yearly percentage increases in registered fair rents in private unfurnished lettings and house prices is given in the table.

England (per cent.)

Year	Fair rents	House prices
1990	+16·8	−1·8
1991	+10·8	−2·1
1992	+13·3	−4·6
1993	n/a	−3·2

For information on commercial rents, I refer the hon. Member to the Valuation Office Agency.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has received about the EC proposals for the disposal of waste and a licensing system from farmers and the National Farmers Union.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend's predecessor and other Ministers in the Department have received four letters from the National Farmers Union, and nine from hon. Members writing on behalf of farmers, about the new waste management licensing system and the EC framework directive on waste—91/156/EEC. My officials have also received correspondence, and have met the NFU.

The forthcoming waste management licensing regulations will retain the current exemption for agricultural waste when they come into force on 1 May 1994. However, in order to comply fully with the requirements of the EC framework directive on waste, it will be necessary to make subsequent provision for some types of agricultural waste to be treated as controlled waste. We have undertaken to issue a consultation paper on any such proposals for new controls over agricultural waste, before making any changes.

Council Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will revise his practice notes for councils about the collection of the council tax.

Mr. Baldry: The Department's practice note, "Council Tax Administration", which deals with billing and collection of the tax in England and Wales, will be revised shortly to take into account some minor changes in secondary legislation which will come into effect on 1 April 1994.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to introducing legislation to compensate householders who are sent demands for council tax payments when the council tax has been paid.

Mr. Baldry: The sensible course in these circumstances is for the taxpayer to produce his receipt or proof of payment. If he cannot do so, and the authority remains of the view that he has not paid, such matters would, in England and Wales, eventually come before a magistrates court for a decision. The court has discretion to order costs to either party. These arrangements are fully adequate and we see no reason to change them.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make representations to local authority directors of finance to seek improvements in the accuracy of their council tax billing procedures.

Mr. Baldry: We have no evidence that such advice is necessary to authorities in England.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to safeguard householders who receive erroneous bills for the council tax.

Mr. Baldry: In England and Wales, taxpayers may appeal to a valuation tribunal about disputed liabilities which cannot be resolved with the local authority.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the penalty for delaying payment of council tax for over six months.

Mr. Baldry: If an instalment of council tax remains unpaid, an authority may seek a liability order from a magistrates' court. This enables the authority to employ a range of recovery options, including attachment of the debtor's earnings, deductions from income support, and the levy of distress. An authority can recover from the debtor the costs of obtaining the liability order and the costs of levying distress. Within this framework we do not consider a specific financial penalty for non-payment is necessary.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of dealing with council tax valuation appeals.

Mr. Baldry: The estimated average cost of processing a council tax appeal in the current financial year in England is £115. This estimate includes Valuation Office Agency and valuation tribunal costs.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties in each band (a) will and (b) will not attract council tax transitional relief in Pendle, Westminster, Wandsworth and Ribble Valley in 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held by the Department.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce more stringent entry controls for foreign toxic waste.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering the need for additional provisions to implement the EC Waste Shipments Regulation, and will announce his conclusions in due course.

Council Tax

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimated savings to local authorities from the advance payment of council tax by appellants whose appeals have been delayed by the operation of the valuation appeals procedure.

Mr. Baldry: No such estimates have been made.

Living Over The Shop

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many successful schemes have been initiated under the living-over-the-shop scheme; and how many of these have used the services of the living over the shop project at the university of York.

Sir George Young: In 1992-93, 269 new homes were created as a result of the Department's flats-over-shops programme. Of the 132 local authorities who received supplementary credit approvals in respect of this, only one has acknowledged any significant involvement with the living-over-the-shop project. It is of course possible that others may also have had some contact with the LOTS project. In addition, schemes financed by the Housing Corporation created 223 new housing units in 1992-93. Other schemes have also gone ahead using the owner's own resources and other funding mechanisms.

Pennine Bridleway

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to complete the Pennine bridleway.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 21 January, Official report, column 869.

Paris Commission Policy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Government policy on compliance with the Paris Commission's policy agreed in June 1993.

Mr. Atkins: The Paris Commission is a meeting of representatives of the contracting parties to the 1974 Paris convention. A contracting party is bound only by the decisions and recommendations of the Commission that it accepts. It is United Kingdom policy to comply with those decisions and recommendations that we accept. At its June 1993 meeting, the Commission adopted the following decisions and recommendations:

a. Recommendation concerning the limitation of pollution from existing primary iron and steel production installations (PARCOM Recommendation 93/1): adopted by a three-quarters majority (Belgium, Portugal and Spain entered reservations); the United Kingdom accepted this recommendation;

b. Decision on the phasing-out of the use of hexachloroethane in the non-ferrous metal industry (PARCOM Decision 93/1): adopted by a three-quarters majority (Germany and the United Kingdom entered reservations, as did the Commission of the European Communities); the United Kingdom reservation is because we have not completed the assessment of the cost of complying with the decision;

c. Recommendation on further restrictions on the discharge of mercury from dentistry (PARCOM Recommendation 93/2): adopted by a three-quarters majority (France, Portugal and Spain entered reservations); the United Kingdom accepted this recommendation;

d. Recommendation on the elaboration of national action plans and best environmental practice for the reduction of inputs to the environment of pesticides from agricultural use (PARCOM Recommendation 93/3): adopted by a three-quarters majority (France and Portugal entered reservations); the United Kingdom accepted this recommendation;

e. Recommendation on the phasing out of cationic detergents DTDMAC, DSDMAC and DHTDMAC in fabric softners (PARCOM Recommendation 93/4): adopted by a three-quarters majority (the United Kingdom entered a reservation); the United Kingdom reservation was because evidence that available substitutes are less environmentally hazardous is not available except to the firms that have developed them, and because formal action is unnecessary, given the 90 per cent. reduction in usage in recent years;

f. Recommendation concerning increases in radioactive discharges from nuclear reprocessing plants (PARCOM Recommendation 93/5) was adopted by a three-quarters majority (France and the United Kingdom entered reservations, as did the Commission of the European Communities; Belgium entered a study reserve, which has now been withdrawn); the United Kingdom reservation was because the first limb of the recommendation made no progress beyond the commitment in the 1992 Action Plan, while the second limb both was too vague to provide a proper basis for a PARCOM recommendation and, insofar as it provided for a role for the Paris Commission in the decision process, was inappropriate.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake or commission research into the effects of low-level radioactive waste in west Cumbria over the past 30 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Low-level radioactive waste in west Cumbria is managed and disposed of in accordance with strict regulatory requirements. The west Cumbrian environment has, over many years, been the subject of extensive research and monitoring programmes undertaken by the nuclear site operators, the regulatory authorities and Government Departments.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the source of the calculation in the consultation paper, "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies" that homelessness acceptances accounted for 45 per cent. of local authority lettings in 1992-93; what is the source of the figure of 29 per cent. in the research report accompanying the consultation paper; and what is the comparable figure from housing investment programme returns from local authorities.

Sir George Young: The percentage figure given in the consultation document is based on information provided by local authorities on their 1993 housing investment programme—HIP—returns; it relates to the proportion of new lettings, that is total lettings less transfers of existing tenants and dwellings let through mutual exchanges or mobility arrangements, in 1992-93, both secure and non-secure, that were to homeless households.

The figure in the research report is based on a representative sample of new local authority secure tenancies over the period April to July 1991.

There are a number of differences between the two proportions, including the reference period and the coverage of the sample and the definition of new lettings.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total amount of central Government grant given to each urban programme authority in the years 1980-81, 1986-87 and 1993-94 at constant 1994 prices.

Mr. Baldry: The urban programme grant paid to current urban programme authorities is as follows:

[1] In 1980-81 the London Boroughs of Hackney and Islington were treated as one UP authority.

Notes:

UP funding figures for 1980-81 and 1986-87 are actual outturn figures adjusted by GDP deflator indices to constant 1994 prices. UP funding figures for 1993-94 are forcast outturns. For all the three financial years grant was paid at 75 per cent. of actual expenditure.

The blank spaces in the table mean that the authority was not a UP authority in that financial year.
The UP partnerships of Newcastle/Gateshead and Manchester/Salford have not been split because historic outturn data was not kept by constituent authority.

Tenancies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many private sector tenancies were (a) available for rent and (b) in rented occupation in each year from 1979.

Sir George Young: The Department compiles estimates on the number of private rented dwellings. These are published in the quarterly and annual publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". The information requested about tenancies is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made on the number of residents of Ipswich affected by Government clawback of council tax transitional relief; what is the maximum resultant increase in council tax involved; if he will urgently review the decision to clawback the relief; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Transitional relief grant will fall to be repaid only where taxes are uncollected. The amount to be repaid, and any consequent effect on council taxes, is entirely dependent on the collection performance of Ipswich borough council.

Sheep Dip

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 113, regarding representations from EU bodies about sheep dip, what was the purpose and content of the formal inquiry; and what was Her Majesty's Government's response.

Mr. Atkins: Correspondence between the United Kingdom and the European Commission is treated in confidence.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether funding is available from his Department for local authorities to establish closed circuit television camera systems to combat crime.

Mr. Baldry: There is no specific funding for this purpose. General funds are made available by the Department to local authorities each year in the revenue support grant settlement and authorities may use these funds to establish CCTV systems. The regeneration plans of several city challenge partnerships have included CCTV schemes in their crime reduction-prevention strategies.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of bed-and-breakfast provision for each housing department in 1993.

Sir George Young: [holding answer 22 February 1994]: I have today placed in the Library a table giving figures on the net costs of housing homeless households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in 1992-93, the latest period for which data are available, as reported by local authorities on their revenue outturn return.

Renovation Grants

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total amount given in renovation grants including (a) improvement, (b) intermediate and (c) repair each year since 1988-89; and what is the latest available information for each authority in the north-west;

(2) what was the total amount of renovation grants including (a) improvement, (b) intermediate and (c) repair for each year since 1988-89; and what is the latest available information on the amounts of grant made in each year by the local authorities in the north west region.

Sir George Young: [holding answer 3 March 1994]: Information about house renovation grants for England as a whole is shown in the quarterly publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Information about payments under the Housing Act 1985 (including improvement, intermediate and repair grants) is shown separately from those under the new grants system set up by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Figures for each year appear in the issues and tables listed. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Latest available figures on the total amounts of renovation grants made available in each local authority area in the north-west region from financial year 1988-89 to 1992-93, and the first six months of 1993-94, are shown in the table.

Marine Aggregates Industry

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responsibility his Department has for promoting the interests of the marine aggregates industry.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 March 1994]: My Department has sponsorship responsibility for the construction products and materials industries generally, and including the marine aggregates industry. It provides a first point of contact for the products and materials sectors; acts as the link between Government and the industry; speaks for the industry in Government; and co-ordinates action on environmental issues that affect the products and materials sectors of the industry. My Department also co-ordinates the Government view procedure which is a prerequisite for the licensing of extraction.

Livera Foods plc

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money was made available for the establishment of Livera Foods plc in Preston Farm, Stockton on Tees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 March 1994]: Details of financial transactions between the Department, sponsored bodies, and private companies are commercially confidential, and I therefore cannot give details of grant, if any, given to Livera Foods.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

8. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the progress of the setting up of the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: The director general is currently assessing the eight applications for the main section 5 licence to operate the national lottery. I understand that he hopes to be able to make an announcement of the successful applicant in May of this year and formally grant the licence in July.

Play Services

17. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what efforts have been made by his Department for ensuring the future provision of local play services following any reorganisation of local government.

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State receives copies of each report prepared by the Local Government Commission and comments, as appropriate, in relation to his areas of responsibility which include children's play.

Sinn Fein (Broadcasting)

22. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to review his broadcasting restrictions on the Sinn Fein/IRA.

Mr. Brooke: The restrictions remain under review in the light of further developments.

Business Sponsorship

23. Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to promote business sponsorship of the arts.

Mr. Brooke: The Government seek to promote a partnership approach to arts funding by developing a network of sources of support, nationally and locally. Over the last 20 years, business sponsorship has made an increasingly important contribution to our expanding arts economy. In 1976-77 business support amounted to about £500,000. By 1992-93 that figure had increased to at least £57·7 million.

The Government's own business sponsorship incentive scheme—BSIS—has done much to encourage this welcome trend. Since its inception in 1984, the scheme has attracted £69·2 million in new money to the arts. In recognition of the importance of business sponsorship and of the success of the BSIS I shall increase the scheme's budget for next year by £300,000 to a record £4·8 million. This will enable a new ABSA office to be established to serve the midlands. I will also be modifying the scheme for business sponsors in Wales to allow Welsh arts organisations to make more effective use of it.

Speke Hall

24. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to secure the future of Speke hall in the Liverpool, Garston, constituency.

Mr. Sproat: Speke hall is owned by the National Trust. The hall has been grade I listed by the Secretary of State; the moated site in which it stands is a scheduled monument; and its garden is grade II listed in the "National Register of Historic Gardens of Special Interest in England". Since 1987 English Heritage has provided over £200,000 in grant aid towards repairs to Speke hall.

Film Exports

25. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what contribution the export of United Kingdom-produced films made to the United Kingdom's annual balance of trade in the last financial year for which records are available.

Mr. Brooke: Export earnings by United Kingdom film companies reached £371 million in 1992, the last year for which figures are available. Some £182 million of this total was earned from the provision of production services, with the remaining £189 million having come from overseas royalties.

Albert Memorial

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the policy of his Department towards the repair and refurbishment of the Albert memorial.

Mr. Brooke: The restoration of the Albert memorial will start this year. The work will make the memorial sound for at least 60 years and will comprise repair of the ironwork, the lead cladding, the stonework, statues and decorations together with the provision of a visitor centre.

BBC Charter

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many representations he has received regarding the operation of the BBC's regional policy during his review of the BBC's charter in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: During 1993, I received 44 letters about the BBC's regional policy. In 1993, I also received some 2,800 responses to the Government's consultation document about the future of the BBC. A small number mentioned the BBC's regional policy, or the English regions, and 85 letters from organisations commented on the BBC's programmes and services for Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland.

Parliamentary Broadcasting

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has made to the BBC concerning the sound of broadcasting of Parliament on FM; and what response he has had.

Mr. Brooke: None. This is a matter for the BBC.

Film Production

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to encourage United Kingdom-based film production.

Mr. Brooke: There is nothing I can usefully add to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 25 January, Official Report, column 135.

BBC Efficiency Improvements

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the BBC's efficiency improvements in his review of the royal charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Last year, I appointed the independent consultants, Touche Ross, to examine efficiency and economy measures in the BBC, as part of its study on the level of the television licence fee. I welcome its conclusion that the BBC has pursued opportunities to make savings and efficiency improvements in a vigorous and effective manner. The BBC is taking further measures to improve its efficiency. We are taking account of the BBC's continuing efforts to operate more cost-effectively in developing our proposals for the corporation's future.

Sports (Promotion)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action he is taking to link sports clubs with schools to promote games' coaching and team sports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: On 16 February, my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State held a consultative conference on sport in schools involving representatives of both sport and education. One of the issues discussed was how to improve the provision of team sports by strengthening the links between clubs and schools, and we are now considering the ideas put forward.

Channel 4 Licence

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will review the conditions which are attached to the licence for Channel 4 to broadcast.

Mr. Brooke: The licence conditions for Channel 4 are a matter for the Independent Television Commission. I have no plans to review the provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1990 on the financing of Channel 4.

United Kingdom Broadcasters

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the success of United Kingdom broadcasters in the international broadcasting market.

Mr. Brooke: I congratulate British broadcasters on their success in selling programmes abroad. I hope they will build on these achievements in the years ahead.

SCOTLAND

Cottage Hospital Closures

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what legislation he is consulted before a cottage hospital may be closed; and if he will give details of the procedure laid down.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend is consulted in accordance with the requirements of NHS circular 1975(GEN)4 before a hospital may be closed: the procedure laid down is that the health board should consult all bodies with a valid interest, in time to allow all comments to be considered and taken into account before the board takes a final decision, and before any proposals, revised where appropriate, are submitted to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department first received information from Tayside health board that it wished to close Meigle cottage hospital.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Home and Health Department was first informed of a proposal to close Meigle cottage hospital in 1963, when a review of Meigle's future was undertaken by the Eastern Regional hospitals' board. The first formal submission seeking approval to close was received by the Department in July 1991.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the proposals received by his Department in the years 1987 and 1988 about the plans of Tayside health board to close Meigle cottage hospital.

Mr. Stewart: No formal submission seeking approval to close Meigle cottage hospital was received in this period. The only reference to possible future closure was in the health board's strategic plan "Strategy for Health Care in Tayside for the 90's", published in July 1988.

Women (Statistics)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a ranking by region of the percentage of families headed by a female lone parent.

Mr. Stewart: The information is not readily available in precisely the form requested. However, two closely related statistics have been derived from published 1991 census tables. The information is shown in the table.

The term "female lone parent households" is used here to describe households with one female aged 16 or over and one or more children under 16, not necessarily related. The term "lone parent families" is used here to describe families with dependent children headed by a lone parent —male or female.

NHS Help Line

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department has established a help line to assist patients with inquiries relating to the operation of the national health services in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: Yes. The NHS helpline was set up in October 1992 to provide the public with a wide range of information about the NHS in Scotland.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made as to whether his Department has assessed how many of those pupils currently covered by the assisted places scheme would have entered private education without the support offered by the scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of such pupils is impossible to assess accurately but they must be very few. Over 80 per cent. of the families of pupils receiving assisted places in 1993-94 have incomes below £18,000 per annum, and about 45 per cent. have incomes below the £9,522 threshold which entitles a pupil to a free place. Such families would not be able to meet school fees without assistance.

Mountain Rescue

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the cost to Grampian, Tayside, Highland and Strathclyde regions in 1979, 1989 and 1992 and the latest available date for police involved in mountain area search and rescue activity;

(2) what was the cost to Grampian and Tayside Health Boards and other Scottish health boards in 1979, 1989, 1992 and the latest available date for ambulance and other emergency services involved in mountain area search and rescue activity.

Mr. Stewart: The cost of ambulance and other emergency services involved in mountain rescue activities does not fall on health boards.

Forestry

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a summary of the report of the forestry review group as a basis for public consultation before reaching his decisions.

Sir Hector Monro: The report of the forestry review group is, and will remain, confidential to Ministers. There will, however, be consultation on the options preferred by Ministers before matters are taken forward. The form and timing of consultation will depend on the conclusions which Ministers draw from the advice which they have received from the review group.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much revenue was received by the Treasury in each year since 1981 from the sale of Forestry Commission land in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales.

Sir Hector Monro: Receipts from the sale of Forestry Commission land during the year ended 31 March 1993 were £5 million, Scotland; £3·1 million, England and £1·8 million, Wales.

A breakdown of the receipts in previous years by country is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total receipts from sales throughout Britain are as follows:

1983	14·6
1984	23·6
1985	22·1
1986	17·0
1987	14·7
1988	13·1
1989	12·4
1990	13·0
1991	12·0
1992	14·5
1993	9·9

All receipts from the sale of Forestry Commission land under the disposals programme are surrendered to the Treasury.

Dounreay

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what level of public consultation there has been or will be into allowing increased levels of radioactive discharge from Dounreay reprocessing plant;

(2) if a full enviromental impact assessment has been made into the consequences of allowing increased radioactive discharge from Dounreay reprocessing plant; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what research has been undertaken and consultation held into the impact on fish and the fishing industry through allowing increased radioactive discharge from the Dounreay reprocessing plant; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: AEA Technology has applied to the chief inspector, HM industrial pollution inspectorate, for revised waste disposal authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 in respect of the Dounreay site. Copies of the application have been made available to the public in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

The application provides an assessment of the environmental impact of the proposed discharges including the possible effects on marine food stuffs. If, however, the chief inspector considers that he requires further information in order to determine the application he is entitled to seek such information from the applicant or such others sources as he sees fit.

Before granting an authorisation in respect of the disposal of radioactive waste on or from the Dounreay site the chief inspector is required by the Act to consult such local authorities, relevant water bodies and other public or local authorities as appear to him to be proper to be consulted by him.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the levels of radioactive discharge from Dounreay reprocessing plant in the current year; and what are the estimated levels in each of the next five years.

Sir Hector Monro: Information about radioactive discharges from Dounreay is available in a series of statistical bulletins published by the Scottish Office entitled "Radioactive Waste Disposals from Nuclear Sites in Scotland". The most recent bulletin provides information for the period 1988 to 1992 and copies are in the Library. A further bulletin covering the period 1989 to 1993 is in preparation and will be published as soon as possible.

Levels of discharge in future years are dependent on the outcome of the application which AEA Technology has made to the chief inspector, HM industrial pollution inspectorate for revised waste disposal authorisations.

Rail Freight

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with British Rail regarding the sale of freight sidings at Crianlarich and Oban; what is his Department's position on the matter; and if he will make a statement regarding the policy his Department is adopting in order to encourage the development of rail freight in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with British Rail regarding the sale of freight sidings at Crianlarich and Oban. Government policies are designed to encourage freight to transfer from road to rail where it makes economic and environmental sense to do so. The existing freight facilities grant scheme, administered in Scotland by the Scottish Office, provides targeted financial assistance to capital projects which demonstrably help the environment by switching traffic from road to rail. The scheme is being enhanced and the changes will take effect from 1 April 1994.

A new grant scheme to be administered by the Department of Transport on a Great Britain basis is being introduced from 1 April, under which contributions can be made towards track charges for freight traffic where it can be demonstrated that such traffic could not be attracted to rail without it.

Roads

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums he intends to spend on road improvements between Stranraer and Dumfries over the next three years; and when he expects the remainder of that road to have been improved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As is customary, my right hon. Friend will shortly be announcing those major trunk road schemes on which, subject to completion of statutory procedures and available resources, it is intended to commence construction next year and, provisionally, in the subsequent two years. In recent years more than £85 million has been spent on schemes to improve the A75, including a number of bypass schemes to relieve communities along the route. The recent review of Scotland's key roads confirmed that these improvements have substantially eliminated the operating difficulties on the route.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of vehicles in each different category counted by his Department using the Stranraer-Dumfries road at maximum, minimum and average flows; what is his estimate of the average speed of vehicles on that road; and what were the figures five and 10 years ago.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Automatic traffic counters on the A75 located at Carsluith and Castle Douglas have been used to obtain an estimate of the maximum, minimum and average annual traffic flows in 1993. The traffic flows obtained are indicated in tables 1 and 2.

Table 1, Carsluith, shows that the maximum annual two-way daily flow occurs in August and is 5,825, the minimum daily flow is in January and is 2,897 with an average annual daily flow for this site of 4,241.

Table 2, Castle Douglas, shows that the maximum annual two-way daily flow occurs in August and is 8,185, the minimum daily flow is in January, 5,498, with an average annual daily flow for this site of 6,563.

Information regarding traffic speeds has been obtained from the A75 Carsluith site. This information was retrieved on 28 February and 2 March 1994 and is summarised in table 3. Speed data was not available for five or 10 years ago.

An analysis of the historic traffic flows on the A75 between Stranraer and Dumfries has been carried out. Tables 4, 5, 6 and 7 show how traffic volumes have changes over the period from 1982 to 1992 at various locations along the route. In summary during the period 1982 to 1992 traffic volumes increased by between 18 per cent. and 30 per cent. depending on location.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office has its own on-site nursery at East Craigs, Edinburth which is registered for 15 full-time places and operates on a mix of full and part-time attendance. Those using the facility meet its running costs with accommodation costs being met by my Department. The Scottish Office takes occupancy of a major new building at Victoria quay, Leith in the autumn of 1995. Our plans for this building include a 30 to 35-place nursery.

Additionally, staff in my Department can place children in the central holiday play scheme, in Edinburgh. The facilities are available to staff on a full repayment basis although my Department makes a small contribution of around £500 to the play scheme to help with the cost of outings. Discussions are also taking place about a similar play scheme in the Glasgow area.

Prisoners (Criminal Proceedings)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many cases a commissioner has been appointed under section 33 of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 in (a) the sheriff court and (b) the High Court to date; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 February 1994]: There have been no appointments in either sheriff court or High Court proceedings to date.

Imports

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of European imports to Scotland are transported directly by (a) sea and (b) air to Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1994]: Imports in 1992 from EC countries to Scotland directly at seaports were 2,736 thousand tonnes, and at airports 2,000 tonnes. Total imports from Europe to Scotland are not available, therefore the requested percentages cannot be derived.

Royal Fine Arts Commission

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of the Royal Fine Arts Commission, their place of residence, and the remuneration paid to each.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 March 1994]: The information is given in the table. No remuneration is paid to members of the commission, but expenses are payable.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of (a) finished consultant episodes and (b) private patient finished consultant episodes in Scotland in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 March 1994]: Activity in Scotland is not recorded in the form of finished consultant episodes. The number of discharges for finished consultant episodes in Scotland is therefore not centrally available.

The following table sets out acute sector hospital discharges for NHS patients. Figures on private patients are not routinely collected.

	Patient category
Financial year	Private	Other	Total
1989-90	1,301	868,743	870,044
1990-91	1,430	898,013	899,443

Private Health Treatment

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the total income from private patients in the NHS in Scotland in each year since 1989-90;

(2) what was the income from private treatment of each trust hospital in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 March 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply about the total income which I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 10 February 1994 at column 340.

The first two NHS trust hospitals in Scotland were set up from April 1992 and the income from private patients was as follows:

NHS Trusts	1992-93 £
South Ayrshire	89,000
The Royal Aberdeen Hospitals	531,000

Figures are not available for 1993-94.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in slaughterhouses in each year since 1985.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 March 1994]: The information requested, for the years available, is set out in the table:

Year	Employees in employment in Slaughterhouses
1987	1,400
1989	1,200
1991	1,500

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy that section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 shall no longer be used as a reason for not disclosing information to the public; and if he will make a statement on the implications for the Health and Safety Executive of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) would not normally withhold information where it is allowed to disclose it. Section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 prohibits the disclosure of information without the consent of the person providing it, except where disclosure would be for the purposes of the functions of the HSC, the Health and Safety Executive or other enforcing authorities. The HSC makes full use of these exceptions to the prohibition.

Under the provisions of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992 the HSE is obliged to make available environmental information in those areas where it has environmental responsibilities, subject to withholding any information that falls within one or more of the exempted categories in regulation 4.

Northumberland Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what Government grants were given to the Northumberland training and enterprise council in each year since 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: The table lists funding given to Northumberland training and enterprise council since 1990.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish Farms (Pollution)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list those pesticides, including dichlorvos, she has so far identified as major toxic chemicals polluting the North sea from United Kingdom fish farms; and if she will make a statement on their control and their effect on the biodiversity of the North sea.

Mr. Soames: All veterinary medicines and pesticides are subject to strict approval arrangements which take into account their potential effect on the environment. All direct discharges, including from fish farms, containing potentially toxic substances are controlled through a system of consents.

We have no evidence of chemicals used in fish farms affecting the biodiversity of the North sea. In line with ministerial North sea agreements, the United Kingdom is acting to reduce the discharge of the most toxic and polluting substances, including dichlorvos, to the North sea. A full quality status report on the North sea will be published by the Oslo and Paris Commissions later this year for the North sea conference ministerial meeting in 1995.

In addition, the Ministry carries out a programme of monitoring of the aquatic environment for a range of metals and organic compounds in fish, shellfish, seawater and sediments. The results are published annually.

Blackcurrants

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she is taking to ensure a level playing field in the market for blackcurrants in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The main competition for United Kingdom blackcurrant growers comes from Eastern Europe. Trade is governed by agreements between the European Community and Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Romania and Bulgaria. These provide for minimum import prices for fresh and frozen blackcurrants from these countries and were initially the subject of faulty implementing legislation by the Commission. Following strong pressure from the United Kingdom, including an intervention by my right hon. Friend the Minister with Commissioner Steichen, the legislation now reflects the Europe agreements and gives the Commission the power to manage the market as provided for in them.

Regional Flood Defence Committees

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the current chairmen of the regional flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority are farmers and landowners.

Mr. Jack: All nine current chairmen of the regional flood defence committees in England have farming or landowning interests.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she will select the chairmen for appointment to the regional flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority who will serve from July.

Mr. Jack: It is expected that chairmen-designate of the nine regional flood defence committees in England will be appointed within the next two months.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria she will use to select the chairmen for appointment to the regional flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority who will serve from July.

Mr. Jack: Under section 10 of the Water Resources Act 1991 those responsible for appointing the chairman or a member of a regional flood defence committee are required to have regard to the desirability of appointing a person who has experience of, and has shown capacity in, some matter relevant to the functions of the committee. These criteria will be used in selecting the chairmen of the nine committees in England.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the appointments she makes to regional flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority reflect the priorities set out in the flood and coastal defence strategy.

Mr. Jack: All members of the NRA's regional flood defence committees in England are expected to take account of the priorities set out in the MAFF-Welsh Office flood and coastal defence strategy in their work on the committees.

Essex Coast Environmentally Sensitive Area

Dr. Spink: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she expects to implement the Essex coast ESA; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I plan to launch the Essex coast ESA on 16 March.

Pigs

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what progress has been made with the implementation of the Welfare of Pigs Regulations 1991;

(2) how many dry sows in the United Kingdom are currently housed in sow stalls or tethers; what plans she has to phase out such systems by 1 January 1999; and what action will be taken against producers who fail to comply with this deadline.

Mr. Soames: The Welfare of Pigs Regulations 1991 prohibit the keeping of sows in close confinement stalls or tethers on agricultural land unless the stalls and tethers were in use on that land before 1 October 1991. This temporary exemption will end on 1 January 1999 when the use of all such stalls or tethers will be prohibited. The regulations are enforced by the state veterinary service and producers who fail to comply can expect to be prosecuted.

It is estimated that approximately two thirds of the indoor breeding heard of 640,000 sows is now housed in alternative systems. To assist the industry, this Department is funding a programme of research into alternative systems of husbandry. It has also contributed to the work of the pig welfare advisory group and financed the publication of a series of nine booklets and associated workshops on alternative systems.

Sheep Exports

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if all sheep exported from the United Kingdom to Spain for further fattening are subsequently killed in EC-approved abattoirs.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Council directive 64/433/EEC as amended, on health conditions for the production and marketing of fresh meat, requires member states to ensure that meat placed on the market for human consumption has been obtained from premises which meet the conditions laid down in that directive. This means that sheep which are exported to Spain for further fattening and subsequently placed on the market for human consumption must be slaughtered in approved abattoirs.

Family Food Bills

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will estimate by how much the average food bill of the average family of four is inflated as a direct result of the common agricultural policy, giving figures separately for (a) dairy products, (b) sugar, (c) beef, (d) cereals, (e) rice, (f) fruit and vegetables, (g) potatoes, (h) oilseeds, (i) linseed, (j) olive oil, (k) wine and (l) tobacco;

(2) if she will estimate by how much the average food bill of the average family of four is inflated as a direct result of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 11 January, at columns 65-6. For the reasons given, it is not possible to estimate the effect of the CAP on the food bill for individual commodities.

Farmers Charter

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representation she has received concerning the preparation of a farmers charter.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers which I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 2 February, Official Report, column 735, and 3 February, Official Report, column 861.

Potato Producers

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will set out the material available to her on the information on state aid provided to potato producers in other European Union member states.

Mr. Jack: Since November 1991 the EC Commission has published in the C series of the Official Journal brief details of the state aids, including our own potato marketing scheme, to which it has raised no objection. Those in other member states are summarised:

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much her Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if she will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is committed to making every effort to help with the provision of child care provided a value for money case can be made to support the need for such facilities. Currently, there are some 48 nursery places for children aged between six months and five years, and some 100 holiday play scheme places for children aged between four and 14 years.

The Ministry has a purpose-built 40-place nursery at its Guildford site and a 30-place nursery is due to open at its new King's Pool site in York this autumn. Also, a 33-place nursery is under construction at the central science laboratory's new site at Sand Hutton, near York, which is due to open in 1996.

In addition a survey is being carried out at all offices in the Ministry currently without child care facilities to assess the level of demand. All options for child care will be considered including general advice on facilities available locally and participation in nurseries and play schemes run by other organisations.

The amount spent on child care is not available centrally.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of public appointments made by her Department in 1993 were of women; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The percentage of appointments made by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food held by women has increased from 10 per cent. in 1991 to 18 per cent. in 1993. Our aim is to increase this to 25 per cent. in 1996. If achieved, this would represent an increase of just under 40 per cent. compared to 1993 figures.

Group Actions

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what stage the fundamental review of the rules governing group actions has reached; and when he expects the report and recommendations arising from the review to be published.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On 16 December last year the Lord Chancellor announced the terms of reference for his Department's fundamental review of expenditure. This will cover all areas of the Department's business, including civil litigation, and will report to the Lord Chancellor in June. As any conclusions and recommendations resulting from this review will clearly have implications for group actions, procedures with regard to such actions are being examined as part of the review.

The results of fundamental reviews are not commonly made public. Any action which the Lord Chancellor decides to take as a result of the review's conclusions will, however, be preceded by public consultation in the usual way.

Magistracy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure that the magistracy is made more representative in terms of gender, race and social class.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster seek, through central initiatives and through their local advisory committees, to ensure that, so far as possible, candidates who are put forward for appointment to the magistracy reflect the local community they will serve in terms of such factors as age, gender, ethnic origin, political affiliation and employment background. Notices are placed in the press and local initiatives are undertaken such as letters to organisations and court open days to encourage suitable men and women from all walks of life to put themselves forward.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the political balance of magistrates within west Yorkshire.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political balance of magistrates within west Yorkshire on the latest information available is as follows:

	West Yorkshire
Conservative	572
Labour	397
Liberal/Democrat	220
Independent/Not known	163

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the members of the committees responsible for recommending magistrates in west Yorkshire.

Benzodiazepine Cases

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received, and from whom, concerning the handling of Benzodiazepine litigation cases by the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have received numerous representations about decisions made by the board in the Benzodiazepine litigation from other Members of Parliament, members of the public and from solicitors on behalf of their clients.

Pepper v. Hart

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to the implications, including cost of litigation, of the ruling in the case of Pepper v. Hart.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The implications of the decision have been considered in detail by an inter-departmental working group, and a number of practical steps for the avoidance or correction of mistakes or ambiguities arising out of ministerial statements during the passage of legislation are being put into practice, for example by guidance to Departments on legislative procedures. Issues concerning the cost of litigation are being taken up with legal practitioners' governing bodies throughout the United Kingdom.

County Courts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he will take to ensure that cases, listed for county court hearings on a particular day, are heard on that day; if he will consider a system of compensation in circumstances of failure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no specific plans to alter the present system of listing cases in the county court. During the last few years, 82 county court trail centres have been established which have concentrated resources and provided better listing systems. Listing officers in those centres are expected to remain in post for at least a year. Listing, however, is reliant on the accuracy of time estimates provided by the parties, the number of door-of-the-court settlements and the priority which must necessarily be given to any urgent applications, particularly in the family area. Notwithstanding these difficulties, the trial centres are continuing their efforts to find more efficient ways of dealing with cases.

Departmental policy on compensation was set out in a parliamentary answer on 28 January 1987, Official Report, column 246, and remains unchanged. The Lord Chancellor is prepared to consider claims for ex-gratia payments if a party has suffered loss as a result of the negligence of court staff. This does not, however, cover the failure of a case to be heard as a result of the listing process which is carried out under judicial direction.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many solicitors' firms have (a) applied for and (b) been granted legal aid franchises.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There have been 1,425 applications for franchises. No franchises will be granted until 1 August 1994.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for amending the rules governing legal aid franchises; and if he will publish the proposed new rules.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Before franchising comes into effect, changes will be needed to the legal aid regulations. These will be laid before Parliament in the usual way. The terms of the contract between the Legal Aid Board and those who are granted franchises are still the subject of discussion between the Legal Aid Board and the Law Society.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to restrict legal aid provision to those solicitors' firms which have successfully applied for legal aid franchises.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many solicitors' firms have ceased to take on legally aided clients for (a) criminal matters and (b) civil matters in each of the last five years; and what representations have been made to him as to the reasons for the cessation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Figures on the number of solicitors' firms which have ceased taking on legally aided clients are not available. The table shows the number of offices receiving payment from the Legal Aid Board for each of the last five years, broken down into criminal matters and civil matters. The number of offices does not equate to the number of solicitors' firms.

The Lord Chancellor has received representations from the Law Society and from a number of solicitors arguing that low fee rates for legal aid work are causing solicitors to cease undertaking this work. However, the number of offices which do receive payment for legal aid work has risen as a proportion of all solicitors offices from 68 per cent. in 1988-89 to 82 per cent. in 1992-93.

[1]These figures exclude the number of offices receiving payment in respect of criminal legal aid in the higher courts, where the information is not collected and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many employees of the Manchester legal aid board have been (a) made redundant or (b) asked to take voluntary redundancy this year and in each of the previous three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) None and (b) none. There are, however, 11 redundant posts at the Manchester area office and volunteers are being sought for redundancy up to that number.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of the total number of legal aid boards employees have been (a) told that they will be made redundant or (b) asked to take voluntary redundancy this year and in each of the previous three years; if he will list the names of the relevant boards and the numbers involved in categories (a) and (b) at each; and what is the total number affected nationally.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) Nil. (b) The board is looking for 139 volunteers across all area offices as follows: London 40, Brighton three, Reading three, Bristol 10, Cardiff four, Birmingham six, Manchester 11, Newcastle 15, Leeds eight, Nottingham three, Cambridge nine, Chester nine and Liverpool 18. There have been no voluntary redundancies in the previous three years in area offices.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the job titles and the civil service grades of all the Legal Aid Board employees who have either been told that they will be made redundant or have been asked to take voluntary redundancy at (a) Manchester legal aid board and (b) other legal aid boards.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No Legal Aid Board employees have been told that they are redundant. Volunteers have been asked for in a range of jobs from grade 7 to administrative assistant.

(a) In the Manchester area office the grades from which volunteers have been requested are grade 7, SEO, higher administrative officer and secretary. (b) In the rest of the country the grades from which volunteers have been requested are from grade 7 to administrative assistant, but the grades affected vary from office to office.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received and from whom, concerning redundancies among the staff of legal aid boards.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what costing procedures his Department has carried out as regards a possible increase in costs to the legal aid fund as the result of a reduction in the number of legal aid appeals certifying committees, due to more applications being allowed by legal aid certifying officers; and what plans he has for publishing the results of those costing procedures.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No costing has been carried out as no reduction in the number of area committees dealing with appeals against refusals of legal aid is anticipated. The frequency with which area committees meet fluctuates from time to time in accordance with the numbers of appeals made.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to close down any of local legal aid offices; and in relation to how many of these offices he has such plans.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board has no such plans.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether instructions have been issued to (a) Manchester legal aid board or (b) other legal aid boards concerning a reduction in the numbers of legal aid appeals certifying committees; to how many legal boards such instructions have been issued; what representations he has received in response; and how many such committees he is seeking to dispense with nationally.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No instructions have been issued to the Manchester area office of the Legal Aid Board, or to any of the board's other area offices, to reduce the number of area committees dealing with appeals against refusals of legal aid.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he or any of his officials have suggested the closure of (a) some or (b) all local legal aid offices as part of legal aid policy.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) No and (b) no.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Orthopaedic Surgery

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were on the waiting lists for orthopaedic surgery for each health board area in each year since 1988; and what is the current figure.

Mr. Ancram: The information is not held in the form requested. In-patient treatment in the trauma and orthopaedic surgery specialty is available only in the Eastern and Western board areas. It is not possible to give a breakdown of the total numbers waiting by their board of residence. The total number of people on the waiting lists for treatment in the trauma and orthopaedic specialty in Northern Ireland is as follows:

	Ordinary[1] admissions	Day cases[2]
March 1988	4,604	—
March 1989	5,119	36
March 1990	3,603	33
March 1991	3,738	22
March 1992	3,607	30
March 1993	3,127	728
December 1993	3,190	765

Note:

Information relating to waiting times for day cases was not collected centrally until 1 April 1988.

[1] The ordinary admissions totals may include some patients waiting for day case admission, which cannot be separately identified.

[2] Increase in day case figures between March 1992 and March 1993 was as a result of Musgrave Park Hospital first being able to identify day cases separately.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were on the waiting lists for their first appointment with an orthopaedic surgeon in each year since 1988, in each health board area; and what are the current figures.

Mr. Ancram: The information is not held in the form requested. The total number of people on the waiting lists for their first out-patient appointment in the trauma and orthopaedic specialty in Northern Ireland is as follows:

	Number
31 March 1993[1]	10,838
31 December 1993	12,545

[1] Information relating to waiting times for first out-patient appointments in the trauma and orthopaedic specialty was not collected centrally until 1992-93.

It is important to view the numbers waiting for their first appointment against the numbers seen for the first time in a 12-month period. A total of 26,699 first appointments were seen in hospitals in the Eastern board area in 1992-93 and 5,307 in hospitals in the Western board area.

Power Failures

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the electricity power failure in Northern Ireland on 3 February; and what steps are being taken to ensure that such an incident does not recur.

Mr. Tim Smith: The causes of the failure are being investigated by Northern Ireland Electricity plc. The director general of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland and I have asked the company for a report on the matter and on the measures being taken by Northern Ireland Electricity plc to prevent a recurrence.

Glass-fronted Fires

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost of maintaining glass-fronted fires, including chimney relining in Housing Executive homes, in the Greater Belfast area, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chief executive that the information which is readily available is as follows:

£ million

Year	Greater Belfast area	Belfast region
1988-89	[1]—	0·392
1989-90	[1]—	1·066
1990-91	[1]—	1·035
1991-92	2·025	1·471
1992-93	2·859	2·082

[1] Information prior to 1991-92 on the Greater Belfast area which includes Housing Executive, Belfast districts 1 to 7, Castlereagh districts 1 and 2, Lisburn districts 2 and 3 and Newtownabbey district 1 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Road Projects

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by start date the major road building and road improvement schemes in each roads division in Northern Ireland in the current year and for the next five years, indicating his estimate of the cost.

Housing (Design Guide)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he intends to take to consult district councils on his Department's design guide on housing.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Department wrote to district councils among other interested bodies when it started work on the rural design guide last year. The letter explained the purpose of the proposed guide and asked for comments. Seven councils have replied and their comments are being taken into account in the production of the guide.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Postgraduate Scientists

31. Mr. Coe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to implement the new arrangements for training postgraduate scientists outlined in the science and technology White Paper.

Mr. David Davis: Last month, the Office of Science and Technology published a consultation paper on arrangements for making a master's year the normal starting point for research students supported by the research councils. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster also announced extra funding for industrially orientated co-operative awards in science and engineering studentships in his allocation of the science budget for 1994-95.

Citizens Charters

37. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the success of the charters for which he is responsible.

Mr. David Davis: Delivering charters is the responsibility of individual public service providers. But details of achievements in health, education, housing, transport and many more public services will be published in the citizens charter second report later this month.

Open Government

38. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many constituency visits he has made concerning open government.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to ensure that the ombudsman has the resources necessary to discharge his functions under the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is important that the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration should be properly resourced to oversee the implementation of the code of practice. Subject to parliamentary approval, the PCA's current provision is planned to be increased by 14·75 per cent. in 1993-94 and then an additional 85·5 per cent. in 1994-95. This increased provision, which has been broadly carried forward into 1995-96 and 1996-97 as part of the 1993 public expenditure survey, also covers additional staff, their accommodation and administrative costs to match the increasing work loads for the PCA and health service commissioners as more complaints are being referred by MPs and received direct from members of the public.

Civil Service

39. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the practice of fast streaming in the civil service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I announced a review of the fast-stream entry on 18 February, Official Report, columns 1010-11.

Science Research

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures are proposed to ensure equitable geographic distribution of science research facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Decisions on the siting of publicly funded research facilities are taken on their individual merits.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans his Department has to encourage private sector partnerships with university science departments and university research institutes.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the 2 February debate in the House on the research council orders, during which I set out my immediate plans for encouraging private sector partnerships with the science and engineering base, Official Report, column 895, through, for example, the "realising our potential" awards —ROPA—grants scheme and the industry-led CASE postgraduate studentship awards.

At my request, the Director General of the Research Councils is embarking on a fundamental examination of the research council programmes in order to advise on the overall health of the science and engineering base, and on the action required to take forward the policies set out in the White Paper "Realising our Potential: A Strategy for Science and Technology"—Cm 2250, May 1993.

Human Gene Technology

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about Government control of human gene technology.

Mr. Waldegrave: Certain aspects of human gene technology are controlled under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, which are designed to protect human health and safety and the environment from genetically modified organisms used in contained conditions such as laboratories or industrial facilities. Under these regulations, all persons undertaking such work must conduct a risk assessment of the activity. This assessment will determine the risk classification of, and the safety precautions required for, the work. The independent Advisory Committee on Genetic Modification is regularly consulted on higher risk projects.

All premises where work with genetically modified organisms takes place must be registered with the Health and Safety Executive. The regulations also contain provisions for inspection and enforcement under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

All proposals for gene therapy research on human subjects are considered by the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee, established in 1993 by United Kingdom Health Ministers in response to the recommendation of the Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy. It advises on the acceptability of such proposals on ethical grounds, taking account of the scientific merits of proposals and potential benefits and risks.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the answer by the Prime Minister on 13 December, Official Report, column 700, what assessment he has made of the effects of subsidiarity on the EC acquired rights directive and the Government's market-testing and competitive tendering programme.

Mr. David Davis: The Government welcome the European Commission's review of the directive, under subsidiarity, and hope that this will remove the damaging effects it can have on competitiveness and jobs—in particular where it has been inappropriately applied to contracting out.

However, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 which implement the directive in United Kingdom law have not prevented Departments from market testing or otherwise examining around £1·1 billion-worth of services, to the end of December 1993.

Agencies (Management)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place a copy of the Trosa report into the setting up of executive agencies and the evaluation of the civil service reforms in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I did so on 1 March and I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans), Official Report, columns 671-72.

HEALTH

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the public appointments she is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Sackville: In addition to those listed in "Public Bodies 1993", my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, or Ministers acting on her behalf, appoints the chairman and members of the following bodies:

Central Research and Development Committee for the NHS;
Research and Development Strategy;
Dental Vocational Training Authority;
National Advisory Body (which guides and co-ordinates the Confidential Enquiry into Stillbirths and Deaths in Infancy in England, Wales and Northern Ireland);
NHS Supplies Authority;
National Breastfeeding Working Group;
Nutrition Task Force;
Pharmacists' Review Panel;
Vocational Training Appeal Body.

My right hon. Friend appoints chairmen of the London implementation group, the joint supervisory board of the NHS centre for coding and classification and the national case mix office.

In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for appointing the expert members of the steering group on the microbiological safety of food. Some appointments to the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine and the General Dental Council's dental auxiliaries committee are made jointly with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Appointments are also made to the three main "Health of the Nation" advisory groups. These are the wider health working group, The Chief Medical Officer's "Health of the Nation" working group and the chief executive's NHS implementation group.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State also appoints 26 bodies of special trustees to administer the trust funds of various pre-1974 boards of governors and university hospitals which chose to keep their individual funds.

Pacemaker Leads

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients with (a) Siemens and (b) Medtronic pacing leads which have been subject to warnings have had the leads replaced or inactivated.

Mr. Sackville: According to information sent to the national pacemaker database, 224 Siemens pacing leads, and 39 Medtronic pacing leads subject to warnings, have been replaced or inactivated in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been implanted with (a) Sorin 580T silicone pacemaker leads, (b) Talectronics 330258158 pacemaker leads, (c) Talectronics 033301 pacemaker leads, (d) Medtronic 4004 pacing leads, (e) Medtronic 4004M pacing leads, (f) Medtronic 4082 pacing leads, (g) Siemens 1010T pacing leads, (h) Siemens 1050T pacing leads and (i) Siemens prototype T93 since 1987; and how many have died in each category, in each year since 1987.

Mr. Sackville: There is no 580T pacemaker lead made by Sorin Biomedica, and no records exist of pacemaker leads with the model numbers 330258158 and 033301.

Information requested for the Medtronic and Siemens pacemaker leads, based upon data returned to the national pacemaker database, is shown in the table.

Information based upon data returned to the national pacemaker database

Note: None of the deaths given above for either the Siemens or Medtronic pacemaker leads was lead-related. (Information based upon data returned to the National Pacemaker Database).

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recommendations her Department has made to pacing centres and follow-up centres about the incidence of failures in polyurethane leads.

Mr. Sackville: Advice issued is contained in pacemaker technical notes Nos. 48, and 49, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given regarding the purchase of polyurethane leads by (a) her Department and (b) the medical devices directorate.

Mr. Sackville: The medical devices directorate, a division of the Department of Health, gives no specific advice on the purchase of polyurethane leads. However, purchasers are strongly recommended to buy medical devices only from companies registered under the Department's manufacturer registration scheme.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what review her Department has conducted of the use of polyurethane in pacing leads; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No formal review has been conducted. The Department is continually up-dated by the national pacemaker database which analyses statistics on the use of all types of implantable pacemaker leads.

Faulty Medical Devices

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last had discussions with the Food and Drug Administration in the United States of America on the subject of faulty medical devices; and which devices were discussed.

Mr. Sackville: No formal discussions have been held with the Food and Drug Administration in the United States of America on the subject of faulty medical devices. No central record is kept of the frequent informal contacts which are made about a variety of subjects associated with a wide range of medical devices.

Pacemaker Database

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimation she has made of the accuracy of the national pacemaker database.

Mr. Sackville: Overall data capture was last estimated by the national pacemaker database to be 88·8 per cent. in 1992, based upon an annual nation-wide audit. Data accuracy is dependent upon that supplied, on a voluntary basis, by the implanting and follow-up centres. The database has a system for data validation, which has recently led to a re-classification of some of the data.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 618, listing pacing and pacing follow-up centres, what information she has on hospitals not on the pacemaker database, carrying out pacing or pacing follow-up.

Health Management Trust Ltd.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement concerning the establishment by West Midlands regional health authority of the Health Management Trust Ltd., with particular reference to the transfer to the trust of Crown copyright software and the licence fee paid for this.

Dr. Mawhinney: The financial information project—FIP—was set up in 1979 and was jointly funded initially by the Department and West Midlands regional health authority and later by an association of regions. The association was subsequently disbanded. In order to ensure the further development of the software, a charitable trust called the health management trust was set up and a licence was granted to it by the Department to use, develop and distribute the software for the benefit of the national health service. As the trust is a non-profit-making charity and the software is made available to NHS users at beneficial rates, there was no licence fee.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what amount was granted by the West Midlands health authority to Health Management Trust Ltd.; what were the reasons for this; how much of this amount the company has repaid; and what representations her Department has made to West Midlands health authority on this matter;

(2) what amount was lent by the West Midlands health authority to Health Management Trust Ltd.; what were the reasons for this; what were the repayment terms of the loan; and what representations her Department have made to the West Midlands regional health authority on this matter.

Dr. Mawhinney: The amount granted by West Midlands regional health authority to Health Management Trust Ltd. is £101,700: in addition loans amounting to £930,000 have been made by West Midlands regional health authority to Health Management Trust Ltd. The grant was not repayable and was made as part of a total package of financial assistance to enable the trust, on behalf of the regional health authority, to research and develop computer-based systems to improve organisation and management within the NHS. The loan was made to enable the trust to continue development of the financial information project—FIP—software products, consisting of software systems on ward nursing, paramedic and theatre systems and community nursing and is repayable, with interest, by quarterly instalments beginning on 28 February 1994. The Department has been in contact with West Midlands regional health authority about this matter on a number of occasions.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what authority the West Midlands regional health authority was able to establish the Health Management Trust Ltd. as a separate company with charitable status; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health Management Trust Ltd. was established by a number of individuals, some of whom were national health service employees, acting in a personal capacity, with assistance from the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the level of charges levied by Health Management Trust Ltd. on the users of software, including other health authorities, for which it has the Crown copyright.

Dr. Mawhinney: The level of charges is a matter for Health Management Trust Ltd. to determine.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from other national health service bodies about the conduct of Health Management Trust Ltd. in pursuing legal action against the users of the software for which it has the Crown copyright.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department is not aware that Health Management Trust Ltd. has taken legal action against any national health service users.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what settlements have recently been concluded between (a) the South Western regional health authority and (b) North West Thames regional authority and Health Management Trust Ltd.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1992, the Department mediated successfully in a dispute between South Western regional health authority and Health Management Trust Ltd. In 1993, the Department was similarly successful in mediating between North West Thames regional health authority and the Health Management Trust. The terms of the respective settlements are confidential between the parties concerned.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has made to West Midlands health authority or Health Management Trust Ltd. about these settlements.

Dr. Mawhinney: None, as settlement was reached by all the parties concerned.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the relationship between the West Midlands health authority and Health Management Trust Ltd. and FIP Ltd.;

(2) what is the status of Health Management Trust Ltd. and FIP Ltd. within the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: Financial information project—FIP—was set up in the mid 1980s as a consortium of district health authorities to develop and use a series of financial information systems. In July 1989 the West Midlands regional health authority agreed a proposal to transfer the activities of FIP to an independent trust—Health Management Trust—which was registered as a charity. Focus Information Systems, the new name for the company previously known as FIP, is a wholly owned subsidiary of Health Management Trust Ltd.

Dental Health

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the potential dental risks associated with the use of soya-based baby milk.

Mr. Sackville: Soya-based infant formulas have been developed for the particular needs of infants who are allergic to cow milk protein or who are lactose intolerant or who are being reared on a vegan diet. In order to meet all of these needs in one product they are formulated with carbohydrates which are more cariogenic than lactose. Parents feeding their infants with soya-based formulas should therefore pay particular attention to good weaning practices. Oral hygiene procedures should be started as soon as teeth emerge and parents may wish to seek medical and dental advice on the provision of fluoride supplements.

Abortions

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give a breakdown by regional health authority of the numbers of abortions performed in the latest year for which figures are available in pregnancies of more than 24 weeks' gestation; if she will indicate the grounds upon which those abortions were performed; and, specifically, if she will indicate where appropriate the nature of any possible handicap from which the baby might have been suffering.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 29 June 1992 at columns 437-38.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued by her Department about the nature of those handicaps which might be considerd to be so severe as to fall within the provision of the existing legislation that abortions might in those cases be performed up until birth; and, specifically, whether dwarfism or acondraplasia might reasonably be considered as grounds for such late abortions.

Mr. Sackville: Decisions as to what constitutes "substantial risk" and "serious handicap" within the ground specified in the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, are matters for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned taking into account all of the facts and circumstances of each case.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has yet received a formal notification of the abortion in a pregnancy of 35 weeks' gestation, performed at St. George's hospital, Tooting over the weekend of 5 and 6 February; and if she will indicate the name of the doctor performing that abortion and the grounds upon which it was authorised.

Mr. Sackville: Information provided to the chief medical officer on abortion notification forms under regulation 4 of the Abortion Regulations 1991 may not be disclosed because of restrictions set out in regulation 5.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce new regulations to regulate the advertising of formula milk for babies.

Mr. Sackville: Draft regulations to implement two European Community directives covering the composition, marketing and export of infant formula and follow-on formula have been the subject of a public consultation exercise carried out by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The closing date for receiving comments was 4 March. The regulations will be finalised once we have considered carefully the comments received.

Additionally, since April 1992, approximately £1·6 million has been spent by the Department on specific studies including the Tomlinson inquiry.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria have been used in selecting the officers for compulsory redundancy.

Mr. Hanley: The primary aim of the Army redundancy programme was to ensure that the Army would retain the proper structure and balance of age, skills and experience necessary for the future. Selections were based on these principles.

Malaysia

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the extra training on military strategy and other defence items promised as part of the arms deal negotiated with Malaysia between 1985 and 1988; who was to provide it; how many military personnel were involved; and for what purpose such training was provided.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has provided only technical training under the terms of the 1988 memorandum of understanding signed with Malaysia. This training has taken place both in the United Kingdom and Malaysia, and has included the provision of loan service personnel. Further details, including costs, are confidential between the two Governments.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the difference between the normal commercial rate and the concessionary rate offered by the United Kingdom for the purchase of arms to Malaysia under the 1988 memorandum of understanding; how much was actually paid to make up this difference, under what heading of expenditure this was paid; and what assessment he has made of the consistency of such concessionary rate with the Washington convention on export credits and other international agreements.

Mr. Aitken: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 21 February, Official Report, column 69.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 22 February, Official Report, column 69, who heads the special unit set up inside his Department in support of the arms deal to the Malaysians under the 1988 memorandum of understanding; what are its functions: and to whom it is accountable.

Mr. Aitken: A director heads the Malaysian project office. The MPO exists to provide advice and support to the Malaysian Government in their procurement of defence equipment from United Kingdom suppliers; the director is accountable through the head of the Defence Export Services Organisation to Ministers.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what way Her Majesty's Government fulfilled their offer to the Malaysians, under the 1988 memorandum of understanding, to assist in fixing easier terms; if there was any shortfall in the funding by the Malaysian Government; and what are the precedents for making such provisions.

Mr. Aitken: All defence purchases by Malaysia under the 1988 MOU have been made on a cash basis. As to precedents, at that time Malaysia was eligible under OECD conventions for export credit at consensus rates.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Hanley: No central records are maintained of total departmental expenditure on providing child care facilities, or the number of children catered for. It is departmental policy, however, to increase the provision of child care facilities for staff wherever possible; budget holders are encouraged to set up new child care facilities for staff where there is sufficient demand.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 240, with which third parties the possibility of their clearing minefields in the Falklands is being explored.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply. We have not explored with any third parties the possibility of their clearing minefields in the Falkland Islands.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the latest projected spending in 1993-94 on (a) criminal legal aid, (b) civil legal aid and (c) the total legal aid budget.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is estimated that the total net cost of legal aid this year will amount to £1,225 million. Of that, £527 million will be spent on criminal legal aid and £698 million on civil legal aid. Estimates for each category of legal aid are as follows:

	£ million
Criminal legal aid
Criminal Magistrates	192
Criminal Higher	235
Duty Solicitors Schemes	79
Criminal Green Form	21
Civil legal aid
Civil legal aid	552
Green Form	126
Assistance By Way of Representation	20
Total legal aid	1,225

Family Law

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the Government's response to the recommendations in the Law Commission's report "Family Law: Matrimonial Property"—Law Comm 175.

Mr. John M. Taylor: After careful consideration the Government have decided not to implement this report. The Lord Chancellor is, however, grateful to the Law Commission for the valuable contribution which the report has made to the development of this area of the law.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tobacco Taxation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 666, what contribution to Treasury finance is made by VAT from tobacco consumed by children under 16 years of age in the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: It is estimated that around £15 million is raised in VAT on tobacco smoked by children between the ages of 11 and 15 in the United Kingdom.

Earnings Statistics

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what weekly amount of money and what percentage of their gross earnings a single earner couple with two children on average earnings in London paid in (i) income tax less child benefit, (ii) national insurance contributions and (iii) VAT in 1978-79; and what amount and percentage of their gross earnings each of those average families will have paid in 1994-95.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not our practice to produce estimates at the sub-regional level as they are not, in general, reliable.

Alcohol

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he proposes to protect British off-licence shops from the importation of duty-free wines, beers and spirits from France; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: For offences involving illegal disposal of imported alcoholic drinks, the law provides for seizure of the goods and penalties of up to seven years' imprisonment. Customs is acting vigorously to protect the legitimate trade by seeking out offenders. In the 12 months to December 1993, 1,175 detections were made. Most of these cases were dealt with by seizure of the goods and sometimes the vehicles involved. Fifty-one prosecutions involving 76 defendants were completed and have resulted in fines and in some cases imprisonment. More are in the pipeline. This firm action will continue.

Savings Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made with the review of savings taxation.

Mr. Dorrell: I am examining the impact of tax and other Government policies on savings and the flow of funds through the economy. This work covers a range of issues and will extend over a number of months.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will specify the nature of the publicity regarding public access to land that was agreed for those properties in Lancashire benefiting from conditional exemption from inheritance tax.

Mr. Dorrell: The owner of land which is conditionally exempt from inheritance tax is required to publicise the agreed public access arrangements. The heritage advisory agencies will discuss with each owner the appropriate level of publicity. Each case is cconsidered individually and all relevant factors, including the existing level of publicity, are taken into account. Although the extent of public access may already be widely known, for example where substantial public access is already given, the owner will generally be required to take specific steps to publicise the public access arrangements, for example by advertising the access arrangements in a local tourist office or town hall.

Gross Domestic Product

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects national gross domestic product, excluding North sea oil revenues, to reach the same level as in the second quarter of 1990.

Mr. Nelson: Latest data for non-oil GDP in 1993, and the growth forecast in last November's "Financial Statement and Budget Report", imply that non-oil GDP will pass its second quarter 1990 level some time in mid-1994.

BT3 Share Offer Campaign

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, columns 271-72, if he will place in the Library a copy of the results of any market research relating to the BT3 share offer campaign.

Mr. Dorrell: The market research into the advertising campaign on the BT3 share sale was carried out on a commercial in confidence basis. The research commented on the relative strengths of the creative ideas of competing advertising agencies; it would not be appropriate to make it public.

Taxation (Construction Workers)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to alter the system of taxation and national insurance for self-employed construction workers.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 10 February, Official Report, column 382.

Low-wage Earners

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of Government policies on the economic well-being of the poorest 10 per cent. of wage earners.

Mr. Dorrell: The real income of a family with two children at the lowest decile of male earnings has risen by almost 24 per cent. since 1978-79.

Private Health Insurance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would be raised if income tax were collected on the value of all health insurance benefits given to employees; and what is the amount actually collected.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 March 1994]: All directors, regardless of their earnings, and all employees earning at a rate of £8,500 a year or more—including the value of their benefits in kind—are taxed on any health insurance provided by their employers. An estimate of the tax collected on this basis was given in my answer to the hon. Member on 14 January 1994, Official Report, column 308. Information is not available about the numbers of employees earning at a rate of less than £8,500 a year who are provided with health insurance benefits by their employers.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions the Treasury has had with officials or Ministers from the Department of Health about (a) extending tax relief on private health insurance to those aged under 60 years or (b) abolishing tax relief for those aged over 60 years.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 March 1994]: Internal discussions within the Government are confidential.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Prime Minister how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

The Prime Minister: Disaggregated information of this sort could be otained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

The Prime Minister: Such purchases are included within my Office's overall administration expenditure, which is published every year in the annual report.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Official Gifts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 162, what happened to those gifts of small value presented to former Prime Minister Baroness Thatcher and not required by her on leaving office.

The Prime Minister: Gifts of small value are the property of the Prime Minister, not the Government. The retention or disposal of such items is therefore a matter for the Prime Minister concerned.

Malaysian Protocol

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister how many Cabinet meetings were held between the signing of the Malaysian protocol in March 1988 and 28 June 1988.

The Prime Minister: It remains the Government's practice not to give details of Cabinet or Cabinet Committee meetings.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister on what date he was first made aware of the references to civil aid and arms' sales in the Malaysian protocol of March 1988.

The Prime Minister: On 12 May 1988, in my capacity as Chief Secretary to the Treasury.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Parliamentary Broadcasting

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to introduce legislation to clarify the BBC's existing obligation to carry a daily sound broadcast report of Parliament by stating the wavelengths on which the broadcast shall be carried; and what plans he has for legislation to extend the BBC's existing obligation in respect of sound broadcasts to television.

Mr. Brooke: None. The BBC is responsible for deciding how to use the frequencies allocated to it, including the editorial content and scheduling of its programmes, under the terms of its royal charter and licence and agreement. I am sure that the BBC will have taken note of the concern which has been expressed in Parliament about its daily reports of proceedings.

Television Licences

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans the Government have to raise the cost of the television licence during the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Brooke: I announced on 4 November 1993, Official Report, columns 309-10, that, from 1 April 1994, the fee for a colour television licence would increase to £84·50 and that for a monochrome licence to £28. I have today laid before the House the regulations necessary to bring these fees into force.

Sir George Young: I am replying with information on projects undertaken by my own Department. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) of 28 February, Official Report, column 555, if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter relating to wind farms to which he refers.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 536, if he will list the grade 2* listed buildings for which consent to demolish has been given.

Mr. Baldry: Grade 2* listed buildings for which consent to demolish was given during the period 1 January 1982 to 31 March 1993 are:

Allanby house, Maryport, Cumbria
Dogmersfield park, Hampshire
2 Lansdown crescent, Cheltenham
Old Farmhouse, Manor House farm, Crawford, Lancashire
Campsall hall, South Yorkshire
Welton grange, Humberside
Clayhouse barn, Halifax

Details of buildings for which consent was given prior to 1982 are not readily available.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to give greater protection to tenants in mobile home parks; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: We have no plans at present to introduce further legislation concerning mobile homes. However, the two major industry bodies have recently launched a charter for mobile home residents which aims to help residents and site owners understand their existing legal right, and extends the responsibilities of site owners. Members of the industry bodies will be obliged to follow the charter.

St. Andrew's Gardens, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what time scale he how puts on the completion of the city challenge flagship project at St. Andrew's gardens project in Liverpool; and what funding will be made available for the project in the present financial year and the next;

(2) when he expects to hold the public inquiry into the Russell street-Berry street link road, Liverpool; and when it is likely that a decision will be available;

(3) what assessment he has made as to the effect of the public inquiry into the Russell street-Berry street link road, Liverpool on the city challenge flagship project at St. Andrew's gardens.

Mr. Baldry: I cannot say at this stage, when the public inquiry into the Russell street-Berry street link road might be held or when a decision will be issued. Arrangements for the inquiry will be put in hand once the planning and listed building consent applications and related documents requested from Liverpool city council on 16 February have been received.

The original time scale projected for the completion of the St. Andrew's gardens project was June 1966. My officials are currently discussing with Liverpool City Challenge and Merseyside Improved Houses what steps need to be taken to avoid significant delays as a result of the call-in and public inquiry.

Funding for the vacant stock initiative element of the project, through Liverpool City Challenge, is as follows:

1992-93	2·400
1993-94	[1]1·047
1994-95	[1]1,354
1995-96	[1]0·703

[1] Estimated.

City Challenge funding for the houses for sale element —in addition to private sector investment is:

	£ million
1995-96	[1]0·420
1996-97	[1]0·280

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out by industrial sector the number of jobs a) created and (b) saved by the Leeds development corporation in each financial year since its inception.

Mr. Baldry: Leeds development corporation does not analyse employment numbers within its areas by standard industrial classification. Nor does it keep records of the number of jobs saved. The numbers of gross jobs created within its area for each financial year since its inception are as follows:

Year	Numbers
1988-89	1,526
1989-90	2,458
1990-91	2,320

Year	Numbers
1991-92	210
1992-93	830

Plymouth Development Corporation

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress regarding the urban development corporation established in Plymouth in part to deal with redundant assets at Devonport; what assets have been transferred to the UDC from the MOD; on what basis this transfer took place; how many of these assets have been sold or developed; how many jobs have been created in the initiative; how much investment has been carried out by the Government to date; what is the total cost of the initiative to the Government to date; and what is the projected total.

Mr. Baldry: Plymouth development corporation was set up in April 1993. Since then it has encouraged the private sector to offer solutions to the redevelopment of its ex-MOD sites. Royal William yard in particular was a part of the DOE private finance initiative announcement in November last year.

Two sites, Mount Wise—seven acres—and Royal William yard—32 acres—have been transferred to PDC. Mount Batten—55 acres—will be transferred this month. All are being transferred at open market value, although the purchase cost is part of the MOD contribution to the development corporation.

PDC is still examining the potential for redevelopment of the ex-MOD sites so no assets have yet been sold or developed. No direct jobs, other than two permanent staff of the development corporation, have been created but the corporate plan indicates the potential to create over 1,300 new jobs and to lever in some £50 million of private sector money.

The Government money spent by PDC so far is in the region of £7 million including land purchase. Over the five-year life of the development corporation it is anticipated that the Government will contribute some £45 million towards the redevelopment of their sites. However, all such long-term commitments are subject to the annual public expenditure survey.

Water Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of (a) water supply and (b) sewerage services for the average home in the areas covered by (a) Wales Water, (b) Severn Trent, (c) North West England and (d) Thames in 1992-93 and 1993-94; and what was the cost of the water supply for the average home in each area in each year.

Mr. Atkins: Information on water and sewerage companies' average charges is published annually in the Centre for the Study of Regulated Industries statistics series publication "The UK Water Industry—Charges for Water Services", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the price per thousand gallons of water for the areas covered by (a) Wales Water, (b) Severn Trent, (c) North West England and (d) Thames in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Atkins: Information on water and sewerage companies' unit costs for water delivered in 1992-93 is contained in the Office of Water Services publication "The Cost of Water Delivered and Sewage Collected", a copy of which is available in the Library. The report for 1993-94 will be available towards the end of the year.

Gipsy Sites, Essex

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what implications the recent policy announcement on gipsy sites will have for Essex county council's proposal to establish a gipsy site at Barnards farm, East Hanningfield, Chelmsford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Essex county council's application for approval in principal to develop this site has already been received by the Department. Provided that the county council wishes to proceed, and that the scheme meets the grant criteria, it will continue to be considered for approval under the existing system.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress there has been on the review of the arrangements for dealing with contaminated land which was announced on 24 March 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I am glad to report that the contaminated land review, set up in March 1993 under the chairmanship of my Department, has made good progress. Establishing where liability should fall for dealing with damage resulting from historic pollution is complex and the subject is not conducive to easy answers.

Many interested organisations and individuals have set out their views to the review. Such participation has been extremely helpful in drawing out the key issues and options. To build on that, I have agreed that it would be appropriate to issue a consultation paper, giving all interested parties an opportunity to comment on the preliminary conclusions.

The consultation paper "Paying for Our Past" has been published today—I have placed a copy in the Library of the House. We have invited comments by 3 May. Those views will be taken into account before we reach our final conclusions.

The consultation paper makes clear that we support a "suitable for use" approach to dealing with contaminated land. That is that contaminated land should be treated to deal with unacceptable actual or perceived threats to health, safety or the environment, taking account of the actual or intended use of the site; and, where practical, we should keep or bring such land back into beneficial use. That helps us to minimise pressures on green-field sites.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the spending plans for Department of the Environment, PSA Services, the Office of Water Services and Ordnance Survey for the years 1994-95 to 1996-97.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. I have today published the Department of the Environment annual report for 1994

—Cm 2507. This sets out in detail the outcome of the public expenditure survey announced in the Budget statement on 30 November 1993. The report provides an overview of the departments' discharge of their responsibilities over the past year, providing background to each spending programme and policy with more detailed information on performance targets, output measurements and value for money.

The report sets out our recent achievements and our plans for taking forward policies for the protection and enhancement of the natural and man-made environments. With their wide range of functions, my departments have a leading role to play in this and in ensuring that we see the wider picture of what we are doing, so that we pursue policies of sustainable development. The report contains many examples of how this is being achieved.

The report is also an important part of my departments' accountability to the public, in line with citizens charter principles.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the chairmanship and deputy chairmanship of the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Gummer: I am pleased to inform the House that I have appointed Sir Brian Pearse to be chairman of the Housing Corporation from 1 April 1994. I am also appointing Mr. Peter Cooke to the post of deputy chairman. Both appointments will be for three years. As well as welcoming this excellent new team to head the important work of the Housing Corporation, I should like to express my gratitude to their predecessors, Sir Christopher Benson and Sir Norman Wakefield, for their outstanding contributions during their term in office.

North Sea

Mr. Illetson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the main findings and conclusions of the recent quality status report on the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The North sea quality status report has not yet been published. The Oslo and Paris Commission and the International Council for Exploration of the Sea are working jointly on preparations for publication at the end of March.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update figure K3, tax revenues from the main local taxes as percentages of total tax revenues of local governments, selected countries, of Cmnd 9714—"Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Gummer: No.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the total amount of central grant given to Brent, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith and Fulham, Islington, Kensington and Chelsea, Lambeth, Lewisham, Newham, Southwark, Tower Hamlets, Wandsworth, Blackburn, Burnley, Knowsley, Liverpool, Manchester, Preston, Rochdale, Salford, Middlesbrough, Birmingham, Coventry, Sandwell, Wolverhampton, Leicester, Nottingham, Bradford and Kingston upon Hull in the years 1980-81, 1986-87 and 1993-94 at constant 1994 prices;

(2) what was the total amount of central Government grant given to each local authority in England in the years 1980-81, 1986-87 and 1993-94 at constant 1994 prices.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 7 March 1994]: I have arranged for the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 7 March 1994]: In the current financial year 1993-94 my Department—excluding the Property Services Agency—has spent £60,250 on subsidy for nursery and holiday play scheme provision for 132 children. Start-up costs for additional places in two new inter-departmental nurseries in Westminster and Bristol amounted to £30,000.

Nuclear Recycling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations underpinned the decision not to include nuclear recycling at Sellafield or Dounreay in chapter 23 on waste and recycling, at pages 148 to 157 of Her Majesty's Government's sustainable development strategy report published on 25 January.

Mr. Atkins: Chapter 23 of "Sustainable Development: the UK Strategy"—Cm 2426—concerns non-radioactive waste.

"Watch Your Waste"

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what part his Department plays in the Open university book "Watch Your Waste" to which reference is made at page 153 of the report on the Government's sustainable development strategy, released on 25 January.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment funded the production of the book.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Common Agricultural Policy

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the next meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers the decision of the President of the Commission not to publish the report of experts on the future of the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have no plans to do so.

Embassies and High Commissions

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 29, how he assesses the savings made to his budget as a result of reductions in Ministry of Defence personnel in embassies and high commissions in the absence of estimates of related expenditure; and if he will publish an estimate of the per capita additional net costs to his budget of a service attaché of colonel or equivalent rank in post in (a) a western European country, (b) a middle eastern country and (c) a Commonwealth third-world country.

Mr. Goodlad: Savings resulting from reductions in Ministry of Defence personnel in embassies and high commissions cannot be identified precisely. Direct savings from residential accommodation will be known but other savings arising from, for example, utilities and office space would need to be estimated pro rata after taking account of any direct support provided by the Ministry of Defence.

The additional direct annual per capita cost—residential accommodation without utilities—of a service attaché of colonel or equivalent rank in (a) Paris (b) Amman and (c) Islamabad would be about £18,700, £11,000 and £6,500 respectively. Other costs would have to be estimated in the same way as for savings.

Western Honduras

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with RTZ-Kennecott Mining Company on the environmental consequences of mining in Western Honduras.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have had no such discussions. My officials and RTZ are in touch from time to time.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) of 18 February, Official Report, column 1036, what information he can provide concerning public interest immunity certificates signed from 1994 and moving in reverse chronological order, without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Colonies (Police)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which colonies and overseas dependencies and territories have police forces which are under the control of the governor; and if he will list their establishment.

Mr. Goodlad: All the police forces of the dependent territories are under the control of the governor. Their establishment is as follows:

Dependent territory	Police establishment
Anguilla	85
Bermuda	414
British Virgin Islands	142
Cayman Islands	251
Gibraltar	214
Falkland Islands	14
Hong Kong	34,000
Montserrat	93
Pitcairn Islands	[1]
St. Helena and its dependencies	37
Turks and Caicos Islands	120

[1] Part-time.

Malaysia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if (a) the fax links and (b) the telephone between Kuala Lumpur and his Department were operational throughout the period of the negotiations of the protocol with Malaysia in March 1988; if duty officers at the Foreign Office were available at this period; and what rules apply to their contacting Ministers or Ministers' private office staff outside normal office work hours.

Mr. Goodlad: Normal communications facilities and duty officer arrangements were available throughout the period. Arrangements also exist for contacting Ministers' private secretaries out of normal office hours.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) of 25 January, Official Report, columns 145-46, if he will give the reasons for the time taken after the signing of the Malaysian protocol in March 1988 for a letter to be sent saying that aid could not be linked to arms sales.

Mr. Goodlad: When the text of the protocol became available in London at the end of March, Ministers immediately recognised that the aid-defence sales link would have to be disentangled. Extensive consultations between Ministers followed in which we decided that we should make clear to the Malaysian Government that a link was not possible.

Hong Kong

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 353, what is the lower limit of costs of the draft schemes prepared for consultation with the Association of Members of Her Majesty's Overseas Civil Service.

Mr. Goodlad: Consultations between Her Majesty's Government and the Association of Members of Her Majesty's Overseas Civil Service in Hong Kong on a proposed package of benefits are taking place this week. The cost of the package will be known after it has been finalised.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the annual report on Hong Kong will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Goodlad: The report is being published and laid before Parliament today. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

TRANSPORT

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on the future status of the Transport Research Laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his decision shortly. He recently announced, in evidence to the Transport Select Committee, his provisional view that TRL should transfer to the private sector. Copies of the consultants' report on the feasibility of privatisation, made available to the Committee, are being placed in the Library of the House.

Contingencies Fund

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to seek an advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Mr. MacGregor: Further to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 24 February, Official Report, column 324, pending parliamentary approval of the revised spring supplementary estimate on the administration and transport services vote—class VI, vote 2—sought to provide for a payment to the United States Government, expenditure estimated at £20,000,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Driving Tests

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he would accept a bid, either from the in-house team or the private sector, which would mean that the booking of driving tests for Wales would no longer be undertaken in a Welsh location;

(2) if he would accept a bid, either from the in-house team or the private sector, which would mean that the booking of driving tests for Scotland would no longer be undertaken in a Scottish location.

Mr. Key: "The Government's Guide to Market Testing" makes it clear that restrictions which limit contractors' abilities to give the best value for money should not be included in market tests other than for operational reasons. Moreover, geographical constraints on the supply of goods and services are not, in general, permitted under EC competition law. The conduct of driving tests and the location of driving examiners in Wales and Scotland will not be affected by the market test. The requirement to continue to provide the present Welsh language service is to be included in the invitation to tender for the driver test booking service.

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the work currently undertaken by the traffic area offices for the Driving Standards Agency is part of the current market test of DSA booking services.

Mr. Key: As shared occupiers of the buildings that they share with seven of the 10 DSA booking offices, traffic area offices currently supply DSA with a variety of office support and property-related services. These might not be required if DSA work were relocated as a consequence of the market test of the DSA booking services. Bidders for the DSA booking service will also be free to choose whether to continue the current arrangements under which three traffic area supply finance services to DSA booking offices.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he would accept a bid for the DSA booking services if that resulted in the centralisation of all booking services in one location.

Mr. Key: In order to ensure security of supply it is envisaged that the Driving Standards Agency will award up to four contracts to provide a booking service for separate geographical areas. Bids to run the service as a whole will also be considered if the contract will be managed with the same degree of security.

British Rail

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in real terms, for each year from 1979 to 1995 the (a) public service obligation grant awarded to British Rail and (b) external financing limit awarded to British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

New Car Registrations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of new car registrations for each of the last eight quarters for (a) Birmingham, (b) the west midlands and (c) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Key: The requested information is shown:

Birmingham	20,960	22,058	26,362	15,067

EC Funding

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those transport projects involving European social and regional funds which have been given the go-ahead since (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Mr. MacGregor: Lists of transport projects in England approved to date under the European regional development fund since 1979 and 1989 have been placed in the House of Commons Library today. Since 1979, 1,306 projects have been approved and their total value is around £626 million.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the amount of EC social and regional funds available for transport projects over the past 13 years; and what amount was not taken up during that period.

Mr. MacGregor: The total value of transport projects in England approved under the European regional development fund since 1981 to date is almost £605 million. Funds are available for a wide range of infrastructure projects and no specific allocation is made for transport projects. Any shortfall in expenditure is reallocated to other projects.

Market Liberalisation

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's progress since 1989 in further liberalising air and other transport markets both inside and outside the European Union.

Mr. Norris: Good progress has been made since 1989 in liberalising international transport markets.

The third air liberalisation package is now in force in the EU and has been extended to Norway and Sweden. It will shortly be further extended to Iceland, Finland and Austria under the European Economic Area agreement. Our objective as far as the United States is concerned remains to liberalise air services, thus providing further choice and competition on transatlantic routes. Elsewhere, we are making progress in agreeing new or revised arrangements which allow carriers to make commercial decisions on how best to serve the market without needing to seek Government approval. Around 20 such agreements have been made since 1989, with others currenlty being pursued.

International shipping markets are already largely liberal. Agreements on liberalisation of international shipping and cabotage within the EU are examples of further progress in this direction.

The road haulage market within the EU is now effectively liberalised and substantial progress has now been made on liberalising passenger services. Road transport agreements, existing or under negotiation, with other countries, are in the main liberal or free of permit quotas.

Access to railway infrastructure must now be granted on equitable conditions for international railway groupings both within EU member states where they are established and in states in between, subject to safety and financial conditions, which must not be discriminatory.

Stansted

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is considering the redesignation of Stansted as a regional airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: No, we have largely discontinued this system of airport categorisation. This was announced in the 1985 airports policy White Paper—Cmnd 9542.

Disability Awareness

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the need for disability and mobility awareness training for taxi and private hire car drivers.

Mr. Norris: The Department attaches the greatest importance to disability awareness training for all transport operators.

Following consultation with both licensing authorities and the taxi trade, the Department of Transport has produced a video aimed at taxi drivers which deals specifically with disability awareness issues. Much of the information is directed to drivers of wheelchair accessible vehicles, but much of the practical advice is also applicable to drivers of saloon cars, for example on how to assist people with sensory impairments. The video is entitled "Call A Cab" and is available on free loan from the Department of Transport's mobility unit.

The Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee which advises the Secretary of State on transport issues affecting disabled people has recently set up a sub-committee to look specifically at the issue of accessible taxis. I know that one of the first topics it will be tackling is driver training and I look forward with interest to receiving its proposals.

Passenger Carrying Vehicle Test

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of drivers pass the passenger carrying vehicle test at (a) the first attempt, (b) the second attempt and (c) the third attempt.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. John Ford. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from S. J. Ford to Mr. Michael Shersby, dated 7 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the percentage of drivers who pass the passenger carrying vehicle test (PCV) at their first, second or third attempt. We do not routinely collect this information as it does not directly affect the operation of the Agency.

For consistency of testing, and in fairness to the candidate, it is preferable if the examiner is not made aware of the number of previous attempts a candidate has made at a test. The overall pass rate on PCV tests in the last two financial years was:

	Per cent.
1992-93	53

As part of our second Customer Survey, completed last year —the results of which were published in September—we asked a random sample of all our customers whether it was their first test or a repeat attempt. Of 355 people in the sample who had recently taken their PCV test, 81 per cent. had just passed; of these passes, 40 per cent. were at the first attempt, 33 per cent. at the second, 18 per cent. at the third and 7 per cent. at the fourth.

Buses and Coaches (Children)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) those local education authorities operating a three-to-two seats policy on school buses and (b) those local education authorities operating a policy of one child to one seat; what plans he has to change his Department's three children to two seats policy on school buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The information requested is not kept centrally.

As part of a wider review of bus and coach safety my Department is reviewing the concession which allows three children, under the age of 14, to share a double seat and count as two passengers.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to limit the number of young children that can be carried on coaches without the use of seatbelts to two on each seat.

Mr. Key: As part of a wider review of bus and coach safety my Department is reviewing the concession which allows three children, under the age of 14, to share a double seat and count as two passengers.

Railtrack

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, by category, the principal assets of Railtrack from 1 April, together with the total valuation of each category.

Mr. Freeman: The scheme for transferring assets from the British Railways Board to Railtrack has not been finalised.

Lollipop People

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department is giving local authorities in respect of the legality of lollipop people escorting children of pre-school age across busy roads.

Mr. Key: Sections 26 and 28 of the Road Traffic Act 1984 empower school crosssing patrols to stop traffic only at places where "children cross roads on their way to or from school, or from one part of a school to another".

The words "children" and "school" are not defined. The interpretation of the law is a matter for the courts, but it would seem that the legislation would not prevent school crossing patrols from escorting children to or from an educational institution that provides education or instruction to children of no predetermined minimum age. This would include a nursery school or playgroup. It is, however, for appropriate authorities to decide their own policy in this matter, consulting their own legal advisers as necessary.

Minibuses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what mandatory tests he plans to introduce to prevent the sale or hire of unsafe minibuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I have no proposals to introduce mandatory tests to prevent the sale or hire of unsafe minibuses. There are already adequate safeguards.

It is an absolute offence under section 75 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 for any person to sell or hire out an unroadworthy vehicle. It is also an offence for any person to use, or cause or permit another person to use a vehicle which is unroadworthy.

There are also safeguards under the Sale of Goods Act 1979, the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 and the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the measures that he is taking to inform minibus operators of safety risks; and the cost involved.

Mr. Key: The Department funds the Community Transport Association's information and advice service which ensures that voluntary groups have a central source of free advice and information about all aspects of minibus operations. The budget for the financial year 1993-94 was £41,000.

A video and information pack about good practice in the transport of elderly and disabled people by minibus is available on free loan from the Department's mobility unit.

The Department issues a free guide on passenger transport provided by voluntary groups, which includes advice on recommended maintenance arrangements and requirements on equipment and use applying to permit minibuses.

European Passenger Services Ltd.

Mr. Wilson: to ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what the cost to the Exchequer will be of fully writing off the debt of £1·4 billion incurred by European Passenger Services Ltd. in order to incorporate it into a joint venture company with the private sector to build the channel tunnel rail link;

(2) whether it is his intention to reduce or write off the capital debt of assets belonging to European passenger Services Ltd. before its incorporation as a Government-owned company.

Mr. Freeman: European Passenger Services Ltd. will be established as a Government-owned company, and eventually transferred to the private sector promoter of the new channel tunnel fixed link, free of the long-term debt which it currently owes to the British Railways Board. The liability to repay these loans will remain with BR or Railtrack.

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many managerial and clerical staff have been hired to deal with rail privatisation by his Department; and if he will list their positions and salaries;

(2) how many managerial and clerical staff have been hired to deal with rail privatisation by British Rail; and if he will list their positions and salaries;

(3) if he will list the number of staff that have been recruited by British Rail to deal with the restructuring of BR in preparation for privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: Four staff, filling two full-time posts up to December 1993, and one thereafter, were hired specifically for rail privatisation work. All were administrative assistants in the full-time salary range £7,247 to £9,499 per annum.

At present, approximately 40 full-time equivalent staff work on rail privatisation matters.

BR staff matters are for them.

Greater London Regional Passengers Committee

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the stations covered by the Greater London regional passengers committee.

Mr. Norris: The London regional passengers committee covers all stations on the London underground and the docklands light railway, and all British Rail stations within the area bounded by and including the following stations: Stevenage, Bishops Stortford, Chingford, Harold Wood, Upminster, Ockendon, Purfleet, North Woolwich, Dartford, Swanley, Otford, Sevenoaks, Oxted, Caterham, Gatwick Airport, Dorking, London Road Guildford, Worplesdon, Woking, Virginia Water, Windsor, Slough, Bicester North, Aylesbury, Tring and Harpenden.

Marsh Mills Roundabout

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on which date the improvement works at Marsh Mills, Plymouth roundabout are likely to be completed.

Mr. Key: The present work is being carried out under an agreement with a store developer and is due to be completed by 25 March. However, improvements under an agreement with another developer are expected to start soon and be completed by the end of May. We are also currently evaluating tenders for a major reconstruction of the defective slip road viaducts east of the Marsh Mills roundabout. This work should start this spring and be completed by early 1996.

Oil Pollution and Salvage

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when Her Majesty's Government will ratify the 1990 international convention on oil pollution preparedness, response and co-operation to provide a framework for international co-operation for combating major oil pollution incidents; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the ratification of the 1992 protocol to the international convention on civil liability for oil pollution damage and the international compensation fund for oil pollution damage convention;

(3) if he will make a statement on the ratification of the 1989 international convention on salvage.

Mr. Norris: Enactment of the Merchant Shipping (Salvage and Pollution) Bill, introduced by my hon. Friend for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 16 December 1993, would permit the ratification of these instruments.

Ships (Sewage Discharge)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when Her Majesty's Government will ratify the International Maritime Organisation's regulations controlling the discharge of sewage from ships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Government will consider ratification of annexe IV of MARPOL when the findings of a comprehensive survey of United Kingdom reception facilities, including those for sewage, are available later in the year.

Aerodromes (Noise Control)

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce legislation to give local authorities powers to enforce noise control arrangements at aerodromes.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 4 March 1994]: We will introduce legislation when parliamentary time permits.

Channel Tunnel (Fire)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what day staff of the railway inspectorate first visited the channel tunnel to inspect the site of the electrical fire in the channel tunnel on 13 November.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive, including a railway inspector, first visited the site of this incident on 16 November 1993.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received reports on the electrical fire which occurred in the channel tunnel on 13 November 1992 from (a) Eurotunnel or TML and (b) the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

The Employment Department has been briefed on the incident by the Health and Safety Executive. HSE notified the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority of the incident and the investigation.

Eurotunnel also gave a report on the incident to the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority.

SCOTLAND

Women (Statistics)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of women between the ages of 16 and 59 years, and the percentage of those that is economically active, in the regions of Borders and Lothian.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is shown in the table:

Women aged between 16 and 59 years, 1991

	Number (Thousands)	Percentage who are economically active
Borders	29·7	72·4
Lothian	225·1	71·8

Source: 1991 Census of Employment.

Dental Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which health boards (a) have and (b) have not established emergency dental services since October 1990.

Mr. Stewart: Under regulations, emergency dental services consist of treatment provided out of hours, at weekends and on public holidays. Health boards may set up such formal emergency dental services where necessary using general dental practitioners and/or community dental staff. General dental practitioners are responsible for providing emergency dental treatment for their own registered patients. In some areas, dental emergencies may also be treated in hospital or on an ad hoc basis. The table shows which Scottish health boards operate formal emergency dental services and when these services were established.

Dunbartonshire Enterprise Council

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the recipients of all grants over £40,000 made by Dunbartonshire Enterprise Council for each year since its inception.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many outstanding management agreements for Scottish Natural Heritage for sites of special scientific interest protection there have been in 1993-94; what is the estimate of their cost; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: At present there are 523 management agreements for sites of special scientific interest in Scotland. Scottish Natural Heritage estimates that the cost of these in 1993-94 will be £2,666,000.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions have been taken under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Scotland in each year since 1982 for (a) carrying out a potentially damaging operation to a site of special scientific interest and (b) contravening a nature conservation order under section 29; how many of these were successful; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The information requested is not separately identifiable in the Scottish Office classification of crimes and offences.

Housing (Dampness and Condensation)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the impact on the prevalance of dampness and condensation in the public sector housing stock in Scotland of the imposition of VAT on fuel.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The results of the first Scottish house condition survey were published last year and show that 122,000 houses are affected by dampness in the public sector stock and 202,000 affected by condensation. There is an overlap between the two groups and the severity of the problem varies. There is no reason to suppose that the introduction of VAT on domestic fuels will have a direct bearing on the incidence of either condition.

Benefits have been uprated to take account of the introduction of VAT on domestic fuels. Additional resources have been allocated to the home energy efficiency scheme in 1994-95 which provides assistance for works of insulation and also advice on other energy conservation measures that can be applied.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will undertake a survey of statutory housing authority areas to determine the prevalence of dampness and condensation in the public sector housing stock in Scotland;

(2) if he will consult with statutory housing authorities in Scotland in order to agree an action plan to eliminate dampness and condensation in the public sector housing stock in Scotland;

(3) what research his Department is currently undertaking to eliminate the prevalence of dampness and condensation in the public sector housing stock in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The report of the 1991 Scottish house condition survey published in July 1993 provides an assessment of dampness and condensation in the public sector housing stock. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

Condensation and dampness are identified as national priorities for the use of resources and are being addressed by local authorities under the housing plan system. Authorities have been asked to prepare strategies for dealing with these problems. Research on dampness and condensation is carried out on a United Kingdom basis by the Building Research Establishment and provides the basis for regulatory standards.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what extra resources he proposes to allow local authority housing departments to spend in order to eradicate dampness and condensation in public sector housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Substantial resources totalling almost £426 million were announced on 24 February for investment in public sector housing in 1994-95. Under the housing plan system introduced on 30 April last year local authorities were asked to give priority to tackling condensation and dampness, as well as below tolerable standard housing and homelessness, within their capital programmes. It is for authorities to determine how to utilise the resources made available to them.

Scottish Defence Initiative

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made by the Scottish Enterprise national defence initiative, established on the instructions of the Secretary of State for Scotland, to alleviate the negative impact of defence expenditure reductions on the Scottish economy and to explore defence diversification issues.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish defence initiative was established by Scottish Enterprise in November 1991, at the request of my right hon. Friend, as a strategy to deal with the effects on businesses and employment of contraction in defence-related industries. A number of programmes and activities have been implemented as a result of the initiative. Since these are essentially operational matters, Scottish Enterprise is best placed to provide details of progress so far. I have therefore asked the chairman of Scottish Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

Public Bodies

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the additional non-departmental public bodies to which he will make appointments as a result of the implementation of his proposals set out in "Scotland in the Union: a Partnership for Good".

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 February 1994]: I will be responsible for appointments to the Scottish Arts Council as from 1 April 1994 and to Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. when ownership transfers to me from the Civil Aviation Authority.

Osteoporosis

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding has been made available in each of the past five years to health boards for screening of osteoporosis; how many women in Scotland have been screened for osteoporosis in each of the past five years: how many clinics in health board and trust board areas exist for the specific purpose of screening for osteoporosis; and how many women have been diagnosed as suffering from osteoporosis in each of the past five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 March 1994]: Information about screening of osteoporosis and funding for this is not held centrally.

It is for health boards as purchasers of care to secure from provider units or trusts an appropriate level of osteoporosis services based on assessment of local need.

The table identifies the number of females discharged from hospital over the last five years with a diagnosis of osteoporosis.

Number of females discharged from NHS hospitals in Scotland with a diagnosis of "Osteoporosis" for the years 1988 to 1993

Year	Discharges (Females)
1988	1,056
1989	1,215
1990	1,478
1991	1,793
1992	1,960

[1]1993 data are provisional.

Sheilton Peatlands Nature Conservation Order

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now put back the public local inquiry into the Sheilton Peatlands Nature Conservation Order, scheduled to commence on Wednesday 16 March, to the week commencing 21 March.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 March 1994]: No. The order will cease to have effect after nine months of its being made unless my right hon. Friend gives notice of his decision.

It is likely that any delay now would preclude adequate consideration of the report of the inquiry within the statutory timetable.

Scottish Economy

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss the regeneration of Scotland's economy; when he next plans to meet them to discuss this topic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 February 1994]: My right hon. Friend last discussed the Scottish economy with the Scottish Trades Union Congress on 14 December 1992. He will consider sympathetically any requests from the STUC for further discussions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Light Bulbs

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what progress has been made in the conversion to the use of energy-saving light bulbs in each parliamentary building.

Mr. Ray Powell: As part of a continuing programme of energy-saving measures in the Palace of Westminster and the parliamentary estate, low-energy light fittings have been installed in many areas. Where these have been installed they have contributed over the past three years to savings of some 65 per cent. in the consumption of electricity. During the same period, over 300 "occupancy sensors" have been installed, which automatically switch off lights when areas are vacated.

Norman Shaw South

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what plans there are to upgrade communal areas of the Norman Shaw South building; and for how long it is estimated the building will continue in parliamentary use.

Mr. Ray Powell: There are no plans for an immediate upgrade of the communal areas of Norman Shaw South building. Following the completion of the phase II building in about six years' time, a major upgrade of the whole of Norman Shaw South will be undertaken. It is envisaged that the building will continue in parliamentary use for the foreseeable future.

Television Cameras

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what considerations underlie the prohibition of television cameras from hon. Members' offices.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The regulations which prohibit filming in Members' rooms were agreed in order to address potential problems of access, intrusion, and possible disturbance to the fellow occupants of Members' rooms. They are to be considered again in the near future by the Administration Committee in the context of a comprehensive review of the rules governing filming and photography in the House.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many statutory instruments have been made since 1 November 1993; and how many of them were made by Home Office Ministers.

Mr. Newton: Five hundred and twenty-seven general and 505 local statutory instruments have been made since 1 November 1993 up to the end of February, of which 16 were made by Home Office Ministers.

EDUCATION

Schools Reorganisation, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will announce his decision on Doncaster local education authority's proposal for phase 3 of its reorganisation of schools programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend expects shortly to announce decisions on these proposals.

Dr. Bill Mallinson

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to initiate an independent public inquiry into the case of Dr. Bill Mallinson following the report by Sir Michael Davies.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend does not have powers to intervene in the internal administration of universities which are independent corporate institutions.

Technology Colleges

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each of the 12 schools listed in his announcement of 28 February, (a) the date when it will become a technology college, (b) its current pupil roll and character, (c) whether he has received an application for approval to a change in its admissions arrangements, (d) how many sponsor governors are being appointed, (e) what is the term of office of each sponsor governor and (f) which of the sponsors are represented by a sponsor governor.

Mr. Robin Squire: The 12 schools announced on 28 February each plan to operate as technology colleges from 1 September 1994. A statutory proposal to increase the capacity of St. George's grant-maintained technology school is currently under consideration. None of the other schools has applied to make a change in its admission arrangements constituting a change of character within the meaning of the Education Act 1993. Each school has confirmed its intention formally to apply to take on between one and four sponsor governors before September 1994. Which of the sponsors are represented by sponsor governors will be determined at that stage. The term of office for sponsor governors is required under the Education Act 1993 to be between five and seven years, with the exact term being specified in the instrument of government. The current pupil roll and character of each school is summarised in the table.

Chalvedon grant-maintained school	1,397	11 to 19 non-selective mixed

[1] Provisional at January 1994 as returned to the Department for Education and subject to validation.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications have been received from schools seeking to become technology colleges; and if he will list them.

Mr. Robin Squire: The 12 schools announced on 28 February submitted full applications to become technology colleges. Other schools are at varying stages in preparing their applications.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what bids were submitted for initial capital grant for each of the 12 schools listed in his announcement of 28 February; what allocations have been made; and what level and nature of additional annual funding has been agreed.

Mr. Robin Squire: The self-governing schools listed in the announcement have each been invited to submit a bid for a capital project which involves a capital grant of up to £100,000. The voluntary-aided school has been invited to submit a bid for a capital project which involves expenditure of up to £117,500 on which capital grant may be claimed at a rate of 85 per cent. of expenditure. Accordingly, no allocations have yet been made. Additional annual funding for each of the schools in financial year 1994-95 is expected to be at the rate of £60 per pupil, for the purposes of support, equipment and training for the teaching of technology, science and mathematics.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each of the 12 schools listed in his announcement of 28 February, and for each sponsor's contribution, how much of the value is in the form of (a) cash, (b) goods and (c) services; and whether the value of each of (b) and (c) is based on (i) the retail or normal commercial value and (ii) the cost to the sponsor.

Mr. Robin Squire: The value and nature of sponsorship pledged by the main sponsors for each of the 12 technology colleges are listed. Information on the retail or normal commercial value of goods and services and the cost to the sponsor is commercially confidential.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library a copy of the management plan of each of the 12 schools listed in his announcement of 28 February.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. Applications under the technology colleges initiative were prepared by individual schools and their sponsors for submission to the Department. Management plans were not necessarily prepared with any expectation that they would become public documents.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance has been given to schools regarding funding under the technology college initiative; and what assessment he has made as to the consistency with this of the letter of 11 February from the governors of Prospect school, Berkshire, to parents.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend issued a prospectus to head teachers and chairmen of governors of all maintained secondary schools in September 1993 setting out the principles of the technology colleges initiative. More detailed information was circulated to head teachers, on request, in October and November 1993. Both the prospectus and subsequent information included guidance on funding likely to be available to technology colleges. My right hon. Friend has not seen a copy of a letter of 11 February from the governors of Prospect school, Berkshire, to parents.

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make it his policy to instruct the Higher Education Funding Council to make restructuring funds available to university institutions which are in financial difficulties and where redundancies are likely;

(2) by what authority the Higher Education Funding Council may fund early retirement packages for university staffs when these include the commitment to re-employ at the same university those staff as consultants fulfilling comparable duties to those they carried out prior to their retirement;

(3) if the Higher Education Funding Council has made funds available for early retirement packages for senior employees at the university of London;

(4) if his Department was consulted by the Higher Education Funding Council about the reorganisation of the management structure of the university of London regarding the posts of principal, director of administration, and director of finance.

Mr. Boswell: Universities and colleges are autonomous bodies responsible for the management of their own financial and administrative affairs, including the deployment of staff.

Should a university experience financial difficulties, the Higher Education Funding Council for England would take action to monitor the position of the institution concerned to ensure public funds were not at risk.

The HEFCE does not allocate funds for early retirement packages. It is for the institutions themselves to determine staff salaries and any early retirement payments they choose to make from within the funds at their disposal.

The Department was not consulted about the reorganisation of the university of London's senior management, nor would we expect this. Any such reorganisation is a matter for the institution concerned.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what scrutiny his Department gives to the conduct and funding arrangements of each university following the creation of the Higher Education Funding Council.

Mr. Boswell: The Department for Education does not scrutinise the conduct and funding arrangements of individual universities. This would not be consistent with the Government's limited role of providing the general framework for an efficient higher education system nor with institutional autonomy which is enshrined in law.

The Higher Education Funding Council for England is responsible for the allocation of public funds to individual universities; the terms and conditions for use of the considerable public funds at its disposal are clearly specified in the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 and in a financial memorandum agreed with the Department. The HEFCE is required to ensure all appropriate steps are taken to safeguard the use of public funds.

London University

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education to which public offices he has appointed the vice-chancellor-elect of London university.

Mr. Forth: Professor Andrew Rutherford has not been appointed to any public office by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education to which public offices he has appointed the current vice-chancellor of London university.

Mr. Robin Squire: None, although the current vice-chancellor was appointed to the post of Her Majesty's chief inspector by the Queen in Council at my right hon. Friend's recommendation.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the operational budget of the Funding Agency for Schools under each budgetary heading.

Mr. Robin Squire: Subject to parliamentary approval of the main estimates, the Government propose to make provision of up to £12 million for the funding agency's running costs in 1994-95. Actual costs will depend on a number of factors, including growth in the number of GM schools. The detailed split of the total between different budget heads will be a matter for the funding agency.

Teachers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many newly qualified teachers were appointed to permanent teaching posts in each local education authority in 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not yet available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many people (a) graduated or qualified and (b) failed in teacher training in each of the teacher training colleges and universities in 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not yet available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many inquiries have been received by the Child Support Agency from hon. Members on behalf of their constituents since it was set up; and how many inquiries have received a full reply (a) within a fortnight, (b) a month, (c) two months and (d) three months and over.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the chief executive of the Child Support Agency on 4 March 1994, Official Report, column 897.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances and on what conditions single mothers can withdraw authorisation once given to the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: If a parent who has given her authorisation makes representations to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, they will be considered in the same way as representations made at the time of the original application. If the Secretary of State considers that there is a risk of harm or undue stress to the parent with care or any child living with her, he will withdraw the requirement to authorise action. Once he has done this, the parent with care may request that action to pursue child support maintenance ceases and the Secretary of State must comply with the request.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency to date have resulted in absent parents requesting that their case go before an appeal tribunal; if there is a target time for dealing with appeals; what is the average length of time required to complete the appeal process; and in how many cases the appeal process has exceeded the target time.

Mr. Burt: The responsibility for hearing appeals against child support decisions lies with the independent tribunal service. The president of ITS informs me that during the period April 1993 to 25 February 1994 it received 1,132 appeals. Information is not available on how many of these appeals were made by the absent parent. No target for dealing with these appeals has been set by the president, as in his view there is as yet insufficient information on which to base any target. The average time from lodgment of appeal to issue of the tribunal decision is currently 17 weeks.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time taken by the Child Support Agency to respond to letters from hon. Members; and what action he intends to take to reduce this time.

Mr. Burt: The first year of the agency's operations has stimulated a great deal of correspondence and the chief executive of the Child Support Agency has received over 3,700 letters from hon. Members. By 25 February, she had replied to over 1,900. Targets for answering letters are not currently being met, but necessary steps are being taken to ensure that letters to hon. Members are answered as promptly as possible. The average clearance times for such correspondence are in the table.

Cleared	Per cent.
1 to 15 days	16·61
16 to 20 days	8·66
21 to 40 days	26·76
Over 40 days	47·98

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single mothers have stopped applying for income support after receiving a maintenance application form from the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: Information is currently being collected on such cases, but figures are not available in a reliable form.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many absent parents who have no contact agreement with their former family have demanded contact or residence after receiving maintenance assessments from the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The arrangement of child maintenance is a separate matter from that of contact or residence with former families, which remains with the courts. Consequently, the Child Support Agency does not routinely collect figures on this subject and information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Offices, Lewisham

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his latest estimate of the total amount of money allocated to each benefit office in Lewisham for 1993-94 that is so far unclaimed for (a) family credit and (b) disability working allowance; and how many people he estimates are failing to take up their entitlement to the above benefits of each such benefit office;

(2) what is the total amount of money allocated to each benefit office in Lewisham for 1993-94 for (a) family credit and (b) disability working allowance; and what is the planned allocation to each benefit office in Lewisham for each benefit for (i) 1994-95 and (ii) 1995-96.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mrs. Kennedy) on 23 February, at column 238.

Domestic Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement detailing the circumstances in which pensioners will not receive the full allowances to help with the cost of value added tax on fuel.

Mr. Hague: Taking a "pensioner" as a person receiving a state benefit who is aged 65 or over in the case of men and 60 or over in the case of women and "full allowances to help with the cost of VAT on fuel" as the additional 50p per week for single people and 70p per week for couples payable from April, the circumstances will be as follows.

Where Income Support, Housing Benefit or Council Tax Benefit is not in payment[1] and:

(a) basic retirement pension, invalidity benefit or widows' benefit is in payment at less than the standard rate, the additional amount will be a proportion of 50p or 20p, as appropriate, corresponding to the level of award in accordance with the contributory principle underlying these benefits,

(b) only non-contributory retirement pension or invalid care allowance is in payment the additional amount will be 20p per week,

(c) only graduated retirement benefit is in payment, or an award of retirement pension, invalidity benefit or widows' benefit consists solely of additional pension, the rate of benefit will not be increased beyond normal price indexation.

Note 1—Pensioners receiving income support, including men aged 60 to 64, will be entitled to 50p per week, 70p for couples. These increases will feed through into housing benefit and council tax benefit.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the (a) maximum and (b) minimum amount of weekly housing allowance paid to a single unemployed person in the Doncaster area during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The maximum and minimum amounts of housing benefit paid to single unemployed persons in the Yorkshire and Humberside region, as at May 1992, the latest date for which information is available, were £55·59 and £4·44 respectively.

Data Source:

The housing benefit and community charge benefit management information system and the income support annual statistical inquiry. The inquiries are a 1 per cent. sample of cases in Great Britain in May 1992.

Notes:

1. The number of sample cases of the single unemployed in receipt of housing benefit from any individual local authority is likely to be very small. Therefore we cannot provide reliable figures for the minimum and maximum amount of housing benefit paid in Doncaster.

2. The data have been obtained from a 1 per cent. sample of cases, therefore, the figures are the maximum and minimum in the sample and the lowest and highest amount payable may not have been included.

3. "Housing allowance" has been assumed to mean housing benefit.

4. "Unemployed" has been defined as those in receipt of unemployment benefit.

5. 100 per cent. of eligible rent is paid for those with incomes at or below income support levels. Housing benefit is withdrawn on a tapered basis for each additional £1 of income above income support levels. This is reflected in the range of housing benefit in the sample.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secret ary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) of 3 February, Official Report, columns 837-38, regarding housing benefit, if he will give similar information for each region in Great Britain;

(2) if he will provide for Scotland similar information to that provided by the Secretary of State for Social Security, in his answer of 3 February, Official Report, columns 837-38, regarding housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

Details for May 1992, the latest date for which information is available, are in the table.

A benefit unit may be a couple in receipt of housing benefit or a single person in receipt of housing benefit.
3. Case load is recorded at a particular point in time and will not record successful claims which start and finish between quarterly reporting periods.

Local Offices (Cold Weather)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of his Department's offices were temporarily closed for the day, or part of the day during the period 14 to 16 February due to the cold weather; if he will list the location of the offices involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The following offices were closed in the period 14 to 16 February.

District	Office(s)	Dates	Times	Reasons
Euston	Highgate	15 February 1994	From 2 pm	Adverse weather conditions affecting travel (AWCAT)
Hackney and Islington	Hackney	14 February 1994	All day	Heating failure
	Hoxton	14 February 1994	From 2 pm	AWCAT
	Companies House	14 February 1994	From 2 pm	AWCAT

	Sheffield South West	14 February 1994	From 2.30 pm	AWCAT

The decision to close an office to the public is the responsibility of each individual manager. Such decisions are not taken lightly and are only made where it is felt that there may be a risk to the health or safety of the staff involved. Where there is any disruption to public service, this is kept to a minimum.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the information provided on 8 February 1993, Official Report, column 502, for estimated average earnings in 1994-95, excluding the estimated effect of extending home responsibility protection to state earnings-related pension scheme entitlements, and including the effect of that proposed change.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

As explained in the earlier reply, the amounts of additional pension quoted related to an individual who had average earnings in each year of his or her working life. In these circumstances extension of home responsibilities to SERPS would have no effect.

	1994-95 Per cent.	1994-95 £	2015-16 £	2025-26 £	2035-36 £	2045-46 £
Basic Pension	17·1	57·60	42·15	36·30	31·30	26·95
Average additional pension (women)	11·5	38·75	46·10	43·25	42·10	41·25
Average additional pension (men)	18·7	63·10	68·50	56·95	48·60	43·75

Notes:—

The amounts of additional pension are based on the amounts of SERPS payable in each respective year to an individual who had average earnings in each year of his or her working life. They are not based on average additional pension awards to new pensioners as these cannot be estimated.

Assumes real terms earnings growth of 1·5 per cent. per annum.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for the Doncaster area the number of people who will be affected by the decision to reduce the entitlements to unemployment benefit from 12 months to six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: This information is not availble. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ealing, Southall (Mr. Khabra) on 18 January, at column 559.

Maternity Benefits

Mrs. Angel Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce proposals for bringing maternity benefits in line with the EC directive on the protection of pregnant women at work.

Mr. Lilley: In August last year, I issued a consultation document which described options available for adapting our maternity benefits schemes to the requirements of the EC directive on the protection of pregnant women at work.

I am grateful to all those organisations and individuals who responded. Their contributions proved very valuable in helping us to reach our final decisions.

The main proposals of the new scheme are:

Any woman who has been continuously employed in the same job for 26 weeks will be entitled to statutory maternity pay. This simple test replaces the present three tests which currently result in different rates of maternity pay depending on whether a woman has worked for 26 weeks, two years or five years in the same job.

All women who qualify for SMP will now receive the higher rate—90 per cent.—of earnings for the first six weeks of their maternity leave, and for the remaining 12 weeks, the standard rate of SMP, which is increased by £3·70 per week to £52·50 in line with statutory sick pay.

Maternity allowance is increased to £52·50 for qualifying employees; other recipients not covered by the directive will continue to receive £44·55.

Women claiming MA will have a longer period before their baby is due to satisfy the 26-week contribution conditions —66 weeks instead of the present 52.

Maternity leave and pay can begin at any time after the start of the 11th week before the week the baby is due. However, if a woman is on sick leave because of her pregnancy and there are fewer than six weeks before the baby is due, she will be deemed to be on maternity leave and entitled to maternity pay.

To pay for the additional cost of around £55 million a year, the rate by which employers are reimbursed for the SMP they pay out is to be reduced to 92 per cent. from 4 September 1994. However, small employers will be completely protected. They will continue to be fully reimbursed for the cost of any SMP they pay. The definition of "small employer" will be the same as the improved SSP definition from April—employers who pay £20,000 or less annually in gross national insurance contributions. Two thirds of employers—approximately 750,000 businesses—will be helped.

As a whole, employers will not be out of pocket. The reduction in employers' national insurance contributions announced in the Budget will more than compensate employers for the abolition of SSP reimbursement as well as the reduction in SMP reimbursement. The result of this package is a net gain for employers of some £125 million.

Allowing women to receive SSP in the later stages of pregnancy if they are sick for reasons other than pregnancy will also add an extra £10 million in SSP costs. The combined cost of these changes means a total cost for industry of £65 million a year—less than 0·03 per cent. of the national wage bill, or approximately £230 per expectant mother receiving maternity benefits.

The new arrangements will apply to women expecting a baby on or after 16 October 1994. The first payments for these women under the new rules will be made from the end of July—since women can take maternity leave up to 11 weeks before their baby is expected.

These improved maternity payments will benefit 285,000 women. At the same time we have simplified the scheme to make it easier for employers to administer and women to understand.

I will shortly be laying regulations to give effect to these proposals.

Job Seeker's Allowance

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 691, how many people in (a) Nottingham city, (b) Nottinghamshire and (c) nationally would be affected if the proposed job seeker's allowance came into operation on 1 March, or the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested. Nationally, when job seeker's allowance is fully operational, it is estimated that at any one time around 250,000 people could be affected.

Notes:

1. Estimates rounded to nearest 10,000 cases.
2. Estimates assume:
   (a) 2·75 million unemployed.
   (b) 1994-95 benefit rates.
3. Estimates relate to a point in time rather than the number who could be expected to be affected at some point during a year.

Income Support

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women have had their benefit cut for failure to attend a restart course.

Mr. Burt: Since December 1990, approximately 31,000 unemployed claimants received a reduced personal rate of income support after the adjudication officer decided they had failed to attend or complete a restart course without good reason.

Details of the respective numbers of men and women affected are not held.

Child Support Legislation

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 31 January, ref. 6/3644/72 on a child support legislation.

Mr. Burt: I replied to the hon. Member today.

(2) if he or his Department have now received a copy of the agreement between the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) and Mr. Gerry Adams.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 7 March 1994, Official Report, column 24.

Tourism

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those private companies whose tourism marketing expenditure is partly financed by grants from the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Development Board for Rural Wales has not given any grants towards the tourism marketing expenditure of private companies.

The board does, however, work in partnership with the Wales tourist board, the British Tourist Authority, Mid Wales Tourism Ltd., the region's local authorities and the Welsh Rarebit-Welsh Gold Collection consortium, and promotes the region through its own brochure "Welsh Country Holidays" which is itself supported by the British Tourist Authority. All these activities benefit the tourism marketing of private companies by the increased promotion of mid-Wales.

Health Care

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is proposing to take to improve the quality of health care in (a) Dyfed and (b) Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The health service in Wales has seen a significant improvement since 1979. By June 1993, the number of inpatients and day cases treated in our hospitals had increased by 71 per cent. and the number of out-patients had risen by 36 per cent. At the same time, the length of time people have to wait for treatment has never been shorter.

Next year, the spending on the NHS will increase by 5·1 per cent. in cash terms, a figure well in excess of inflation for the economy as a whole.

The NHS in Wales is committed to building on this impressive performance, and Dyfed will play its full part in providing better health care for patients.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prosecutions have been taken under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Wales in each year since 1982 for (a) carrying out a potentially damaging operation to a site of special scientific interest and (b) contravening a nature conservation order under section 29; how many of these were successful; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There have been three prosecutions taken under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Wales since 1982 for carrying out a potentially damaging operation. One, in 1985, was unsuccessful; the other two, in 1990 and 1991, were successful. There have been no prosecutions taken under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Wales since 1982 for contravening a nature conservation order under section 29.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many outstanding management agreements for Countryside Council for Wales for sites of special scientific interest protection there have been in 1993-94; what is the estimate of their cost; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: At 28 February 1994 there were 424 management agreements in force on SSSIs in Wales at a total cost of £1,113,227 in 1993-94 up to that date.

Teachers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people (a) graduated or qualified and (b) failed in teacher training in each of the teacher training colleges and universities in Wales in 1993.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of United Kingdom students who successfully completed an initial teacher training course, leading to qualified teacher status, at each colleage of the university of Wales in 1992-93 is shown in the table. The information for courses completed at colleages of higher education in Wales is not yet available for 1992-93. Information on the number of students who failed to complete an initial teacher training course is not available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many newly qualified teachers were appointed to permanent teaching posts by each local education authority in Wales in 1993.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not yet available.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many officers of local community health boards appointed by him are able to speak Welsh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym: Jones: I do not appoint the officers of community health councils or health authorities. Information on the linguistic ability of health service staff is not held centrally.

NHS Managers

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which NHS trusts in Wales have changed the contracts of employment of any managers or executives to cash in annual leave not taken.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for NHS trusts.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on managers in the NHS cashing in annual leave not taken.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the general Whitley council agreement which applies to NHS managers employed on centrally prescribed terms and conditions of service, payment in lieu of annual leave may be made in only two circumstances:

(i) where the manager is prevented on account of ill-health from taking his or her normal leave entitlement in the final year of service, and

(ii) where the manager dies in service.

NHS trusts have the freedom to set local terms and conditions of service for their staff.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the monthly taxable emoluments of the five highest paid managers in each of the district health authorities in Wales in (a) March 1990, (b) July 1990, (c) March 1991, (d) July 1991 and (e) March 1992.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the monthly taxable emoluments of the five highest paid managers or executives in each of the district health authorities and NHS trusts in Wales in (a) July 1992, (b) March 1993, (c) July 1993 and (d) January 1994.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which national health service trusts have established remuneration committees to establish local salary levels for managers and executives.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally. Under new codes of conduct and accountability which my right hon. Friend proposes should come into effect from 1 April 1994, all NHS boards will be required to establish remuneration and terms of service committees.

Health Services, Pembrokeshire

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many staff were employed by the Pembrokeshire NHS trust in (a) April 1992, (b) September 1992, (c) March 1993, (d) September 1993 and (e) January 1994;

(2) how many staff were employed by the Pembrokeshire district health authority in (a) July 1990, (b) March 1991, (c) July 1991 and (d) March 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information available is given in the table. Information for March 1991 is not considered reliable.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the Pembrokeshire district health authority needed his permission to transfer capital resources from the 1991-92 accounts to revenue expenditure in the 1992-93 financial years for the Pembrokeshire NHS trust.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Revenue funds were carried forward by the Pembrokeshire health authority from 1991-92 to 1992-93 by making an advance payment into the bank account of the shadow Pembrokeshire NHS trust. This arrangement subsequently came to the Department's attention when the authority's accounts for 1991-92 were being prepared. The Department has since made it clear that the accounts of shadow NHS trusts are to be regarded as accounts of the parent health authorities and cannot be used as a means of providing working capital for the trusts when they come into formal effect.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was, in cash and percentage terms, the rate of return on capital for the Pembrokeshire NHS trust in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; and what rate is projected for 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows:
1992-93—£1,438,000 or 4·7 per cent.
1993-94—£1,955,000 or 7·0 per cent. (projected)
1994-95—£1,688,000 or 6·0 per cent. (planned)
For each year, the achieved rate of return is identified through the formal annual accounts process.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings his officials have had with officers of Pembrokeshire NHS trust, Pembrokeshire health authority, Clwyd health authority and Marlow hospital trust to discuss the service review report.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. The director of the NHS in Wales has been sent a draft copy of the report in the light of his responsibilities as the accounting officer.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Pembrokeshire NHS trust achieved its target rate of return on capital in 1992-93.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1992-93 Pembrokeshire NHS trust achieved a pre-interest return of 4·7 per cent. against the initial planned target of 6 per cent.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he expects the service review report on the health service in Pembrokeshire to be published.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As the service review was commissioned jointly by Pembrokeshire NHS trust and Pembrokeshire health authority, this will be a matter for those two bodies.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the report jointly commissioned by the Pembrokeshire health authority and the Pembrokeshire NHS trust and the Welsh Office on the service review will be presented to the commissioning bodies.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for Pembrokeshire NHS trust and Pembrokeshire health authority as the joint commissioning bodies for the service review.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given to the Welsh Development Agency in the preparation of its 1994 corporate plan; and whether he will set targets for the agency.

Mr. Redwood: I have today written to the chairman of the agency setting out the ways in which I expect the agency to contribute to the wider objectives of economic development in Wales. I have included targets for inward investment, the development of industrial and commercial floorspace, leverage for private sector investment, and the clearance of derelict land.

There are changes to some of the targets following discussions with the chairman and the WDA board. I have also given the WDA a specific target for inward investment within its overall inward investment plans. I have arranged for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he will take to assist those national health service trusts that do not achieve their target rate of return on capital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: NHS trusts are currently required to achieve a 6 per cent. pre-interest return on their assets; break even, taking one year with another, and stay within the external financing limit set on an annual basis. Failure to meet any of those obligations will require appropriate action by the trust concerned, the extent of which will depend on the underlying causes of the variances from planned targets.

Patient Treatment Numbers

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if it is his policy to limit the numbers of patients treated by health providers to that contained in the contracts with health purchasers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: These arrangements are intended to ensure that all patients meant to be treated within the currency of a contract are treated within that time and, additionally, all urgent patients are to be treated without any delay.

HEALTH

Long-stay Hospital Beds

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many long-stay hospital ward beds have been closed nationally and in the Wirral since the introduction of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mr. Bowis: The first full year of data following the introduction of the national health service aspects of the Act was 1991-92. These data exclude long-stay places provided by the NHS in the community or purchased from independent providers. It shows that between 1991-92 and 1992-93 there was at net increase of four long-stay hospital ward beds in the NHS in the Wirral and a net decrease of 6,832 in England.

Asthma

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her assessment of the effect upon asthma sufferers of air pollution in London.

Mr. Sackville: On the few occasions when levels are high, those who suffer from respiratory disease such as asthma may experience some effects including respiratory irritation, some coughing and possible pain on deep inspiration when taking exercise out of doors. Advice and information is provided on the freephone helpline: 0800 556677.

Minor Injuries Unit

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of (a) a full-time general practitioner and (b) an accident and emergency specialist in a minor injuries unit.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1992-93, general practitioners in Great Britain received an intended average net income of £40,010 for the provision of general medical services. The average earnings of a consultant, whose pay is agreed nationally, were £53,450 in the same year. Accident and emergency consultants may have their pay negotiated locally if they work in a national health service trust.

Public Health

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has on which groups of people have experienced (a) an improvement and (b) a deterioration of health since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The available data indicate that there have been improvements since 1979 for almost all groups. Examples are life expectancy, which has increased from 70 to 74 in males and from 76 to 79 for females, between 1979 and 1992 in England and Wales; and infant mortality rates which have almost halved in this period, falling from 12·8 to 6·5 per 1,000 live births in England.

There are, however, some instances of negative trends: for example, the general household survey shows an increasing percentage of people reporting longstanding illness—from 27 per cent. of persons questioned in 1979 to 32 per cent. in 1992—although slightly fewer said that their activities were restricted by illness in the previous two weeks—13 per cent. compared with 12 per cent. in 1979.

Such trends are reported in the first chapter of the chief medical officer's annual report "On the State of the Public Health", copies of which are available in the Library.

The strategy for health launched by the Government in July 1992 has the overall aim of further continuing improvement in the health of the nation. This requires better monitoring of the health of the population, and we have initiated a major new health survey for England. Its expansion to 17,000 subjects in 1993 will, when the results are available, greatly increase the information about groups within the population, including regional variations and trends over time.

Dentistry

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists in practice in south-east Northumberland (a) take NHS patients and (b) took private patients only but took NHS patients until 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 30 September 1993 the number of dentists in the general dental service in the Northumberland family health services authority area, which includes south-east Northumberland, was 101. The comparable number at 30 September 1990 was 103. Dentists are independent contractors who make their own decisions about whether to accept patients under national health service arrangements.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many dental surgeons in the Bristol area provide treatment under Denplan and other dental care schemes, for the last three years for which figures are available;

(2) how many dental surgeons were operating exclusively within the NHS in the Bristol area for the last three years for which figures are available;

(3) what percentage of dental costs in the Bristol area have been met (a) privately and (b) publicly for the years 1979, 1984, 1989 and each year since.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. Dentists are independent contractors and free to choose whether or not to accept an individual patient, or category of patients, for national health service treatment and to review their decisions at any time.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the deregistered dental patients failed to get reregistered in the last year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not possible to identify whether particular patients have sought reregistration but overall the number of adult patients registered has increased significantly since July 1992. All family health services authorities report that patients approaching them for help in obtaining national health service treatment can be assisted.

Wansbeck Hospital

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the number of job losses in Wansbeck hospital in south-east Northumberland.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. This is a matter for the local health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. J. R. Baker, chairman of Northumberland health authority, for details.

Prescribed List

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the value to the NHS of the savings made in 1992-93 from the removal of drugs from the NHS prescribable list.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

National Neurological Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning the national neurological hospital, Queens square, London and its proposed closure.

Dr. Mawhinney: Up to 3 March 1994 there have been 28 representations from hon. Members and 49 from members of the public.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are employed at the national neurological hospital, London.

Dr. Mawhinney: As at 30 September 1992, the latest date for centrally held data, there were 950 whole-time equivalent staff employed by the National Hospital for Neurology and Neurosurgery.

NHS Supplies Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of the PE Consultancy report on the NHS Supplies Authority.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 10 February, at column 423.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of hospital supplies are purchased through the NHS Supplies Authority.

Mr. Sackville: About half, on the basis that the total full-year value of National Health Service Supplies contracts on behalf of NHS hospital and community health services in 1992-93 was about £1·7 billion and the outturn total NHS HCHS spend on supplies in 1991-92, the latest year for which a figure is available, was about £3·5 billion.

Glasses and Lenses

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what she estimates is the total number of people eligible for receiving assistance towards the purchase of glasses or lenses through the NHS low-income scheme in each year from 1991-92 to 1996-97.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table.

Estimated total number of national health service low-income scheme beneficiaries in Great Britain entitled to help with the cost of glasses or lenses 1991-92 to 1995-96

Year	Number[1]
1991-92	5,992,060
1992-93	6,738,032
1993-94	7,242,933
1995-96	7,872,347

[1] Figures are families (individuals or couples) receiving income support or family credit, holders of AG2 and AG3 certificates and the members of their families named on the certificates. Figures for 1995-96 include recipients of disability working allowance with capital of £8,000 or less and their partners.

Manchester University Health Services Management Unit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds were provided for the health services management unit at Manchester university in the last three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The health services management unit at Manchester university is not funded by the Department of Health. It is known that the unit received £211,330 in 1993-94 for specific projects carried out for the Department, and may have received such funding on other occasions. However, information on this is not separately identifiable.

Corticosteroids

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist for doctors prescribing corticosteroids to pregnant women; and what research has been undertaken into the health effects of corticosteroids on pregnant women and their babies.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has not issued specific guidelines on the prescribing of corticosteroids to pregnant women. The Department is aware that both the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and a joint working group of the British Association of Perinatal Medicine and the research unit of the Royal College of Physicians have published guidelines about prescribing corticosteroids to pregnant women for the prevention of neonatal respiratory distress syndrome. The Department has also funded a review of research into this matter which was published in "Effective Care in Pregnancy and Childbirth". Attention has been drawn to these guidelines through EL(93)115 which was sent to all national health service managers and directors of public health. Extensive clinical trials have shown that administration of corticosteroids, to women who are about to deliver prematurely, reduces the risk of respiratory distress syndrome in the infant. Copies of "Effective Care in Pregnancy and Childbirth" and EL(93)115 are available in the Library.

Travellers

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she was consulted in the drafting of sections 58 to 61 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill on the effect of providing health care to the children of travellers following any repeal of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Bowis: Yes.

Head Injuries

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list hospitals in England which employ multidisciplinary rehabilitation teams for treating local patients who have suffered severe head injuries.

Mr. Bowis: The Department is providing funding of over £1 million per year to the following hospitals and units to develop rehabilitation services for people with head injuries:

Regional rehabilitation centre, Hunters Moor hospital, Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Leeds head injury team, St. Mary's hospital, Leeds
Derbyshire royal infirmary and Derby City hospital, Derby City hospital, Nottingham
Central Sheffield university hospitals
Regional neurological rehabilitation unit, Homerton hospital, London
Rivermead rehabilitation centre, Oxford
Rayners Hedge physical rehabilitation service, Aylesbury
Stroke and rehabilitation unit, Royal Cornwall hospital (City), Truro
Frenchay healthcare trust, Bristol
Neurobehavioural rehabilitation unit, St. Edward's hospital, Cheddleton, and Neurorological rehabilitation unit, Haywood hospital, Burslem
Community unit, Worcester district health authority

Other national health service trusts and health authority units are also developing services.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement concerning the initiatives her Department has taken to assist those in the medical profession who are pioneering treatment for those suffering from multiple sclerosis;

(2) if she will make a statement concerning her future policy development as it affects neurological matters.

Mr. Bowis: The Department is providing funding for a study being carried out at the university of Cardiff entitled "Walking and Mobility in Patients with Multiple Sclerosis —Is Modification by Physiotherapy Effective". The study is due to finish in June 1995. Research is primarily a matter for the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In addition to research directly on multiple sclerosis, the Medical Research Council also supports research on a number of related topics, in particular muscle and neuroscience research, which may shed light on the causes and mechanisms and potential therapies.

The treatment and management of multiple sclerosis, as for other neurological conditions which result in physical disability, are primarily a matter for the medical practitioners concerned. It is for the district health authority or general practitioner fundholder to enter into arrangements with hospital and community units to ensure that the necessary range of services is available. The National Health Service Management Executive priorities and planning guidelines—EL(93)54—for 1994-95, copies of which are available in the Library, require regional health authorities to ensure that services for people with physical disabilities meet local standards in all districts based on the assessment of need and consultation with disabled people and carers.

Research Units

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 2 February 1993, Official Report, columns 721-22, what decisions have been taken about the renewal of contracts of research units whose site visit reports have been completed; and, for each the decisions which have been taken, whether new contracts are being offered and their nature and period of time for which they will apply.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 26 November 1993 at columns 242-44. We have not yet completed the series of site visits.

Health Authorities and Trusts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the names of the chief executives and general managers of each of the regional and district health authorities in England with the correspondence addresses of each of the authorities and the parliamentary constituencies covered by each of the health authorities;

(2) if she will list the NHS trusts currently operating in England and the parliamentary constituencies within which each trust lies; and if she will list the names of the chief executives of each of these NHS trusts and the correspondence addresses of each of the trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the address of each health authority and trust in England and the name of each chief executive and general manager is published annually in the national health service yearbook. Information on the relevant constituencies can be obtained from the House of Commons Public Information Office.

Pharmaceutical Drugs

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of pharmaceutical drugs returned for destruction were (a) over-the-counter products, (b) time expired pharmacists' stock and (c) prescription medicines in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: No data about medicines returned to pharmacies for destruction have been collected to date.

Transport, London

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) in 1981 and (b) in 1991 (i) the mode of travel to work of residents by London borough, (ii) the mode of travel to work of employees by London borough of employment, (iii) the location of employment of residents by London borough and (iv) the level of car ownership by London borough.

Mr. Sackville: This information has been, or is soon to be, published in census reports to Parliament, copies of which are in the Library. The following list gives references for the figures requested.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 1 March, Official Report, columns 681-82, who was present at the meeting held between her Department's officials and representatives of the Tobacco Manufacturers Association on 23 February; what was the outcome of the meeting; and when the next meeting will take place.

Dr. Mawhinney: The meeting was attended by Department of Health officials and representatives of the Tobacco Manufacturers Association. The content of the meeting is confidential. A further meeting was held on 4 March.

Incontinence Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the statutory responsibilities of (a) district health authorities, (b) trusts and (c) family health services authorities for the provision of incontinence services;

(2) what requirements exist in respect of minimal standards of provision of incontinence services;

(3) what requirement is placed on district health authorities, trusts and family health services authorities to publicise the availability of incontinence services.

Mr. Bowis: Where there is shown to be a medical need for health services, health authorities, national health service trusts and family health services authorities have a general duty to provide them, subject to priorities set for the use of the resources available. The NHS planning guidelines for 1994-95—EL(93)54—issued on 29 June 1993 require district health authorities to ensure that continence services conform to the guidelines in the departmental report "An Agenda for Action on Continence Services" which was issued to the chairmen of NHS authorities in 1991. Copies of both documents are available in the Library. The report lists the key features of an effective local service including active publicity work. The 1994-95 planning guidelines also require health authorities to set specific challenging targets for reductions in the prevalence of treatable incontinence.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is made within fundholding general practice budgets for incontinence services.

Mr. Bowis: No specific provision is made but all general practitioners advise their patients on problems of incontinence.

Day Surgery

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each region, for each of the last four quarters, the number of patients waiting for day surgery (a) under 12 months and (b) over 12 months.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on waiting lists for hospital day case treatment by regional health authority and in annual time bands is shown in the table. There has been a rise of around 7,000 since March 1993 in the number of patients waiting more than a year for day case treatment. However, the fact remains that the number fell dramatically from nearly 33,000 in December 1989, to less than 11,000 in March 1993.

It is the time people wait that matters not the number waiting. Half of all admissions to hospital are immediate. Of those admitted from waiting lists almost half are admitted within five weeks, nearly 75 per cent. within three months and 98 per cent. within a year.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region and name each proposed hospital closure notified to her Department for each year since 1988; whether the hospital closed, merged, changed its function or was downsized; and what was the number of beds each hospital had at its closure date.

Mr. Sackville: The Department requires formal notification only where proposed closures are contested by the community health councils. The detailed information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Social Workers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of social workers based in hospitals for each year since 1979.

Mr. Bowis: For 1979 to 1992 this information is not available centrally. The information for 1993 is still being validated.

Care Packages

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy in respect of care packages for individuals or their relatives who refuse to accept discharge arrangements from hospital into independent sector residential or nursing care.

Mr. Bowis: Where an individual does not want, for whatever reason, to be discharged to a nursing home or residential care home the local and health authorities should seek to work together with the individual and their family or carer to find a satisfactory alternative solution.

Health Information Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many calls the health information service has received since it was set up;

(2) how many people are employed to answer calls in the health information service;

(3) what was the cost of setting up the health information service, including publicity; and what are the running costs of the service.

Mr. Sackville: The information, in the form requested, is not available centrally. A special trawl of regions has produced the information set out below.

The number of calls received by the health information service in the period April 1992 to December 1992 was 51,252. In the period between 26 January 1993, when the freephone facility was set up, to 31 December 1993 the number of calls was 136,293, making a total of 187,545.

The number of staff employed to answer the telephones is 31·5 whole-time equivalent personnel.

The total setting-up costs for the regions for 1992-93 were £379,182 and £209,257 for publicity, totalling £588,439, and for 1993-94 £287,686 and £156,701 for publicity, totalling £444,387.

The total setting-up costs for the Department of Health were £397,000. The running costs of the health information service operated by all regions were £899,113 for 1992-93 and £1,401,127 for 1993-94.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued to regulate extra-contractual referrals; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Current guidance is contained in FDL(93)07—"Consolidation of Guidance on Extra-Contractual Referrals, Tariffs and Invoicing"—and HSG(93)8—"Guidance on Operation of Notification Arrangements for Tertiary Extra-Contractual Referrals"—copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department undertakes of the rate of extra-contractual referrals.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Management Executive quarterly monitoring system collects information by regional health authority on their forecast outturn spend on extra-contractual referrals compared with their planned levels of spend.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 24 January, ref. 4/4593/21 and originally written to the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Mr. Bowis: I replied to the hon. Member's letter on 3 March.

Patient Waiting Times

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each divisional health authority area, for each of the last four quarters, the number of patients waiting for treatment (a) less than 12 months and (b) more than 12 months.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on waiting lists for in-patient and day case treatment by district health authority is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", which is published twice yearly. In addition, provisional figures are published quarterly but only on a regional health authority basis. Copies of both are available in the Library.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) acute and (b) non-acute beds were available in each region, each district, each special health authority and for the nation as a whole for each year from 1987.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in "Bed availability for England, Financial Year 1992-93", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Emergency Admissions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of state for Health if she will provide a table showing the number of emergency hospital admissions by region for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The number of finished consultant episodes that are non-elective admissions by regional health authority for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94—forecast and subject to revision—are shown in the table. Directly comparable information for earlier years is not available. The information is for the general and acute specialities and has been compiled on a purchaser basis in order to reach regional totals. It is estimated that over 80 per cent. of non-elective admissions are emergencies.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Royal Palaces (Security)

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of the cost of security arrangements at the royal palaces fell on the Exchequer, including police and Army wages, in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) who is operationally responsible for overseeing security at royal palaces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Operational responsibility for overseeing security at the royal palaces and residences rests with the chief officer of police concerned. Within the Metropolitan police district all aspects of royalty protection are the responsibility of a deputy assistant commissioner who reports directly to the Commissioner. The effectiveness of the arrangements made for royalty protection is examined regularly by the standing group for monitoring royalty protection which was established in 1982 and reports to me from time to time. For security reasons, it would not be right to give a breakdown of the costs involved, but I can confirm that nearly all the costs incurred fall to the Exchequer.

Private Clubs

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his definition of a private club; and how many private clubs are operating in each standard region of England.

Mr. Maclean: The term "private club" has no particular legal significance. It could be applied to a wide range of associations and establishments, such as political clubs, sports clubs and philatelist clubs. There is no requirement for private clubs to be registered as such, and the Government have no information as to their numbers.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review present legislation governing inspection and enforcement of fire regulations at private clubs; and what assessment he has made of the changes necessary as a result of the recent tragedy in London.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The fire safety scrutiny set up by the Government, which began its work on 17 January 1994, is looking at the operation and effectiveness of all legislation dealing with fire safety, and with the organisational arrangements of all bodies responsible for enforcing it.

Any decision about the need for changes to the legislation must await the outcome of that scrutiny and of the inquiries which are currently being conducted into the tragic fire at the Dream City Club.

Passports

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department has spent, and is planning to spend in the next year, on market testing for the issue of United Kingdom passports.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Estimated expenditure on the three United Kingdom Passport Agency projects which were included in the Department's 1992-93 market-testing programme is about £5,000. The extent of future spending on market testing will depend on the outcome of the current review of the agency's framework document which includes an examination of the scope for market testing.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average fine imposed on individuals found guilty of possession of cannabis.

Mr. Maclean: In 1992, the latest year for which figures are available, the average fine for the offence of unlawful possession of cannabis was £74.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the proposal to increase the maximum fine for possession of cannabis.

Mr. Maclean: Apart from several general inquiries from members of the public, we have had forwarded by hon. Members nine letters on the proposed increase in fines for the illegal possession of class B and class C drugs.

Identity Cards

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the EU member states and the states about to join the EU which use identity cards or unique personal reference numbers, outlining the degree of obligation to produce evidence of identity in each state.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following European Union member states use national identity cards:

Belgium
France
Germany
Greece
Italy
Luxembourg
The Netherlands
Portugal
Spain

With the exception of the Netherlands, we understand that the police are able to request proof of identity in each of these member states. We understand that new legislation will come into effect in the Netherlands on 1 June 1994 which will oblige Dutch nationals to provide proof of identity in certain defined circumstances.

In Denmark all citizens are issued with a "central person register" number. This is used for administrative purposes. The police may request proof of identity although we understand that the CPR number is not accepted as such proof.

Information about those states about to join the European Union is not readily available.

Firearms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the increase in firearms imported illegally from eastern Europe since 1988.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no doubt that the breakup of the former Soviet Union and the demise of the Warsaw pact has led to a greater availability of firearms on the world market. I know that HM Customs is aware of this increased risk and is taking steps to counter it.

Anti-drug Policies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the report "The Use of Drugs by Young People in Newcastle"; and what assessment he has made of the outcome of Government anti-drug policies in the light of the report.

Mr. Maclean: The research reported on in "The Use of Drugs by Young People in Newcastle", by Dr. Leslie Gofton of the University of Newcastle, was funded with a grant from the Newcastle drugs prevention team. Publication will be arranged by Dr. Gofton.

The research consisted of some group interviews with young people about their leisure activities and drug use and a survey of the self-reported drug usage of 263 18 to 25-year-olds. The research provided insights into the nature of local drug use, and of young people's leisure preferences, which the Newcastle drugs prevention team has taken into account in the development of its local work, including "Take Notice", a local drugs prevention information campaign aimed at young people. But the samples demographic profile was not representative of the general population of young people, in Newcastle or elsewhere.

Police Resignations

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have resigned from each police force since January 1993; how many of the resignations since January 1993 are attributable to debts payable to the Child Support Agency; and how many of the resignations since January 1993 cite the Child Support Agency as the reason for the resignation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The numbers of resignations for the period January to December 1993 are shown in the tables. Information on the reasons for an officer's resignation is not held centrally.

Women's Organisations

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what grants have been made to the National Alliance of Women's Organisations from the Home Office voluntary services unit since 1979; what assistance will be available in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No grants have been made by the voluntary services unit to the National Alliance of Women's Organisations. As I made clear on 2 February, column 703, in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms Anderson), there are insufficient resources to fund this organisation in 1994-95.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from women's voluntary organisations regarding reductions in core funding from the voluntary services unit for the National Alliance of Women's Organisations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The voluntary services unit has not provided the National Alliance of Women's Organisations with any core funding. Since 1 February, seven letters about the funding of this body have been received in the Home Office from other women's voluntary organisations.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy with regard to the funding of voluntary organisations representing women's issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Women's issues are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 634, how many (a) men and (b) women fine defaulters in prison on 31 January had failed to pay fines valued at between (a) less than £50, (b) between £50 and £100, (c) between £100 and £250, (d) between £250 and £500 and (e) in excess of £500.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Crime (Street Lighting)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has carried out into the effect of street lighting on levels of crime.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The most recent Home Office research on street lighting and crime and the fear of crime was published in August 1991—crime prevention unit paper 28 "The Influence of Street Lighting on Crime and Fear of Crime" and crime prevention unit paper 29 "The Effect of Better Street Lighting on Crime and Fear: a Review". Copies of both are in the Library of the House.

Charities

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the legal powers of the Charity Commission to investigate malpractice within charities; and what is the range of penalties open to the Charity Commissioners to penalise trustees if malpractice is found.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under section 8 of the Charities Act 1993, the Charity Commission, or a person appointed by it, may institute inquiries with regard to charities or a particular charity or class of charities, either generally or for a particular purpose.

If malpractice is found, the commission can:

(a) suspend and, if necessary, remove trustees;
(b) appoint additional trustees;
(c) freeze bank accounts;
(d) prohibit all further fund raising;
(e) stop further actions by the trustees in dealing with the charity's property;
(f) refer the matter to the appropriate authorities for them to consider legal proceedings for the recovery of charity property or to compensate the charity for any loss;
(g) refer the matter to the police.

In less serious cases, the commission may simply give charities a warning and ensure that faults are put right. If necessary, the commission will monitor the activities of the charity.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the legal obligations of the Charity Commission to publish details of its investigations into malpractice among charities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The commission is not legally obliged to publish details of investigations it undertakes. The commission does, however, have discretion, where it thinks appropriate to publish the investigator's report in full or to publish extracts from, or statements about, the report.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the legal powers of the Charity Commission to compel charities to hand over lists of their donors; and what is the range of penalties open to the Charity Commission to penalise charities if they refuse to do so.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Charity Commission has the power to require any person to provide it with information or documents which relate to a charity and which it is necessary for the commission to have in order to discharge its functions properly.

If a person refuses to provide information sought by the commission using this power, the commission may apply to the High Court to have the person dealt with as if he had disobeyed a court order.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 948, how many people were interviewed during the course of the Charity Commission's investigation into the relationship between the Foundation for Business Responsibilities and Aims of Industry; who they were; and how much money had been paid to Aims of Industry in each year between 1988 and 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Charity Commission that no personal interviews were held during the inquiries made into the relationship between the Foundation for Business Responsibilities and Aims of Industry.

The published accounts of the Foundation for Business Responsibilities do not show details of payments made to Aims of Industry as expenditure broken down other than into the categories of accommodation, service charges and research. Charities are not required to provide further detail in their accounts.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints of unlawful political activity by charities have been investigated by the Charity Commission since 1990; and in how many cases the commission found against the charity concerned.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 1990 a total of 76 complaints about improper political activity have been investigated. Of these, 24 were upheld.

Mediation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy actively to promote the wider use of mediation by providing appropriate funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The role which mediation might play in the criminal justice system was examined by an inter-departmental working group in 1992. Within the sphere of the Home Office's responsibilities, it was concluded that mediation or reparation might usefully complement a caution. The efficacy of a number of schemes which link mediation with a caution is being examined. Victim-offender mediation has been taken forward by individual probation services and funding has been provided to local mediation schemes under 10 of the safer cities projects.

European Community

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist for the representation of the European Commission on the body known as steering group I which reports to the article K4 committee under the intergovernmental co-operation procedures; and what opportunities will exist for the examination of the work of steering group I by the European and United Kingdom Parliaments.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The European Commission is fully associated with work under title VI of the treaty on European Union, and its representatives attend all meetings of steering group I.

The Government have put forward proposals for parliamentary scrutiny by the United Kingdom Parliament of the work carried out under title VI which includes that carried out by steering group I.

Article K6 of the treaty sets out the basis on which the European Parliament will be informed and consulted on the work carried out under title VI.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if articles of the main agreement establishing the European Economic Area which extend the right of free movement to nationals of Austria, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden are directly enforceable; and what plans he has to allow them to be relied upon as a basis for legal actions in the United Kingdom courts.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since 1 January 1994, when the European Economic Area agreement came into force, nationals of Austria, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden have been treated in the same way as European Community nationals for immigration purposes. An Order in Council section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972, the Immigration (European Economic Area) Order 1994, will shortly be laid before Parliament in order to transpose into United Kingdom law the relevant European Community directives relating to the rights of free movement and residence for European Economic Area nationals.

Police Pay

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take action to ensure that the assessment bonuses part of future police pay is directed to those who most effectively serve their community;

(2) if the payment of housing allowances, which will be discontinued for police officers recruited after September, will still be payable to policemen currently serving but who do not purchase their own house until after that date;

(3) if he will ensure that all police officers whose duties require them to work in plain clothes and not a uniform continue to receive adequate tax-free allowances.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland have asked the police negotiating board to make recommendations on police pay, overtime and allowances by Easter.

Dogs

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individual Acts of Parliament contain legislation relating to dogs; if he will list their titles; and if he will consider introducing a single consolidated Dogs Act.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following legislation relates exclusively to dogs:

Dogs Act 1871
Dogs Act 1906
Dogs (Protection of Livestock) Act 1953
Breeding of Dogs Act 1973
Guard Dogs Act 1975
Dangerous Dogs Act 1989
Breeding of Dogs Act 1991

There are references to dogs, or provisions relevant to dogs, in a number of other Acts, including general animal welfare legislation. We have no current plans to seek consolidation of the law in this area.

Prisoners (Provisons Costs)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons for the variation of provisions cost per prisoner varying from £9·03 to £12·11 per week.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 8 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the variation in the costs of inmates' food.

Costs per head will vary for a number of reasons, which will include the mix of religious and cultural backgrounds of inmates in a particular establishment which will influence the number of ethnic and religious diets to be provided.

The regime of an establishment will also have some impact upon food costs; for example, the provision of packed meals for inmate working parties, whether bread is produced in-house or purchased and the use of frozen meals where inmates return late to the establishment.

Establishments with large health care facilities may have a higher requirement for more expensive medical diets.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the full results of the first stage of the joint Home Office-university of Salford study on the settlement of refugees in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The report on the first stage of this study is currently being examined. A date for publication has not yet been decided.

DTELS

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the sale of DTELS on 28 February with specific reference to the issue of employee consultations over the pension scheme of National Transcommunications Ltd.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The sale of DTELS to National Transcommunications Ltd.—NTL—was completed on 1 March. Staff and unions were aware throughout the sale process that it was a requirement that the purchaser should provide a pension scheme which was broadly comparable with that provided by the principal civil service pension scheme.

Unions were informed on 26 January that the Government Actuary's Department—GAD—had confirmed that NTL's intended arrangements met this requirement.

A GAD representative attended a meeting with the unions on 10 February. There were then GAD presentations to staff in the week beginning 14 February, in which the benefits available under the NTL scheme were explained and compared with the PCSPS. Union representatives were sent copies of the GAD certificate of pension comparability on 16 February. Further information on the safeguards within the existing scheme and the further benefits negotiated by the Department were sent to the unions on 23 February together with answers to a number of questions which they had raised at an earlier meeting. Arrangements were made on 24 February that each member of DTELS staff should receive a copy of the GAD certificate of pension comparability together with answers to questions which had been raised in the course of the earlier presentations.

Murder Victims

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide financial assistance to the families of murder victims, whose bodies cannot be released by coroners for cremation, to meet the costs of storage.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought by the police relating to animal welfare in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993; and how many were successful.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1991 and 1992 is given in the tables. 1993 data will not be available until autumn 1994.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1988 to 1992 is given in the table. 1993 data will not be available until the autumn 1994.

Mobile Phones (Theft)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his estimate of the number of mobile phones stolen each year;

(2) what representations he has received from manufacturers and retailers of mobile phones about the theft of their products; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make the rechipping of mobile phones illegal.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are aware of estimates that between 10,000 and 12,000 mobile phones are stolen each month; however, no information on the number of such thefts is recorded centrally and we have no reliable means of making any estimate.

Nevertheless, we share the concern that the number of thefts seems to be increasing, and have received a number of representations on this subject from hon. Members and others, including the Federation of Communication Services. The Home Office is supporting the Department of Trade and Industry in its discussions with the mobile phone industry on what measures can be taken to reduce the theft of mobile phones, but we have no plans to make rechipping a criminal offence. Not all rechipping is carried out in relation to stolen telephones, and it would not be appropriate to criminalise what may be an entirely legitimate activity, for example in connection with the repair of mobile phones, or the legitimate sale of second-hand mobile phones. Those who steal mobile phones, or handle stolen goods are, of course, already guilty of criminal offences under the law as it stands.

Fire Deaths

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will produce a table showing the deaths by fire of (a) infants, (b) adolescents, (c) adults and (d) the elderly for the latest 20 years.

EMPLOYMENT

Young People

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new measures he plans to help young people in the North West region to find employment.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Tuesday 22 February, Official Report, column 198.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest official figures for the numbers of unemployed; and what the corresponding figures were for 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: On the consistent seasonally adjusted basis, claimant unemployment in the United Kingdom stood at 2,787,600 in January 1994 and 1,100,100 in January 1979.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest unemployment figures for the North West.

Miss Widdecombe: In the North West region, seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment stood at 308,100 or 10·3 per cent. of the work force in January 1994. This is a fall of 26,400 compared with a year ago.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees were employed in manufacturing industry a year ago and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: In December 1993, there were 4,176,000 employees in manufacturing industries in Great Britain. This compares to 4,190,000 employees in December 1992—a fall of 14,000 jobs over the year. The changing distribution of employment away from manufacturing and towards services is a trend shared by all western industrial nations. However, the output of United Kingdom manufacturing industry in the December quarter showed an annual increase of 2·2 per cent. This reflects a substantial improvement in productivity, up by 3·2 per cent. over the same period.

Careers Service

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the projected number in each of the 13 careers service pathfinder areas of local education authority careers service staff to be (a) made redundant or (b) given early retirement in 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available. It is for careers service providers to decide how best to manage their resources to deliver the highest quality of service.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by each of the 13 careers service pathfinder areas, the total numbers of bids received per area and the name of each successful bidder to run each of the pathfinder services from 1 April.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on organisation tendering to provide careers services is commercial in confidence. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce those organisations with whom he will contract when negotiations are finalised.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the number of people in employment in the area covered by the Leeds development corporation on (a) 1 April 1990 and (b) the latest available figures.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available for the area requested. The most detailed geographical area for which information is published is the electoral ward. The Leeds development corporation area cannot be approximated from any combination of these wards.

Employment estimates for individual wards within Leeds local authority district are available from the periodic censuses of employment, the most recent of which was conducted in September 1991. These can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Business Start-up and Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have participated in (a) business start-up and (b) the enterprise allowance scheme in each year since their inception.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the following table. I expect the business start-up scheme to continue to help those people wishing to set up in business and that the additional funding announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the March 1993 Budget will help more people in 1993-94.

Learning for Work

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have participated in learning for work.

Miss Widdecombe: At 10 February 1994, the latest date available, 5,506 men and 1,607 women were receiving the learning for work allowance.

Job Plan Workshops

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many (a) men and (b) women have participated in job plan workshops in each month since their inception;

(2) what evidence he has of positive outcomes for those who attend job plan workshops.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about Jobplan workshops. You have asked about the number of men and women who have participated in Jobplan workshops since they were launched in April 1993 and what evidence there is of positive outcomes for those attending.

It may be helpful if I explain that Jobplan workshops are for people who have been unemployed for a year who decline or fail to take up a job or a place on an Employment Department programme at their Restart interview. It aims to help people compete more successfully for jobs and opportunities by allowing them to review their strengths and skills, establish clear job goals. This will help them draw up a comprehensive Action Plan, which maps out the steps they need to take to get back to work.

Jobplan workshops were launched in April 1993 and the figures in the table attached show the number of men and women who have taken part in the workshops in the period April 1993 to January 1994.

Since April 1993, 93 per cent. of workshop completers were referred to a job or an Employment Department employment or training programme or another option to help them back to work. Research into the positive outcomes of those who attend Jobplan workshops has been commissioned but is not yet completed.

I hope this is helpful.

Workstart

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the workstart pilots; and what plans he has to extend this scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have not yet completed our assessment of the pilots. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total cost of the workstart pilots.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Sir R. Howell) on 3 March 1994, Official Report, column 868.

Restart

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have participated in restart in each quarter since its inception.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the number of men and women who have participated in Restart Courses in each quarter since its inception.

It may be helpful if I explain that Restart Courses are short courses normally lasting for one week. They are targeted at people who have been unemployed for two years or more who are having the most difficulty in getting back to work. The courses provide people with the opportunity to explore all the options open to them and give them the confidence and motivation to take the next step back to work.

The number of people participating in Restart courses from their inception in 1986 to quarter ending December 1993 is set out in the attached table.

Since December 1990, people who have been unemployed for two years or more who refuse to take up a place on an Employment Department employment or training programme at their Restart interview, have been asked to attend a Restart Course. You will see that this led to a large increase in the numbers of people attending.

You will see that because of changes in the collection of management information, we can not supply some of the detailed information in the form requested.

I hope this is helpful.

Community Action

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many (a) men and (b) women have participated in community action in each month since its inception;

(2) how many (a) men and (b) women who have participated in community action have found work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the numbers of men and women who have participated in Community Action and the numbers of men and women who have found work as a result of participation.

Community Action provides people who have been out of work for 12 months or more with the opportunity to gain recent work experience combined with individually tailored help in looking for jobs. This enables them to compete for jobs more effectively.

The attached table gives the numbers of men and women who participate in Community Action during each month since the programme began on 27 July.

By the end of January a total of 6,995 men and 1,573 women had received help through Community Action. Of these, 5,916 men and 1,362 women were still participating in the programme, 153 men and 27 women left the programme and went directly into paid employment.

I hope this is helpful.

Job Programme Costs

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the total cost per annum to his Department of running job research seminars in 1993-94 prices and in cash terms in each year since their inception;

(2) what was the total cost per annum to his Department of running job review workshops in 1993-94 prices and in cash terms in each year since their establishment;

(3) what is the total cost per annum to his Department of running the job interview guarantee scheme in 1993-94 prices and in cash terms, in each year for which figures are available;

(4) what is the total cost per annum to his Department of running job plan workshops in 1993-94 prices and in cash terms in each year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief exective. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the annual costs of runnning Job Search Seminars; Job Review Workshops; Job Interview Guarantee; and Job Plan Workshops.

The attached table shows the expenditure for each of these programmes in both current prices and constant 1993-94 prices. The 1993-94 figures are planned allocations although for other years I have used actual expenditure. The main identifiable area of expenditure is for the programme itself which, in most cases, is contracted out to separate providers. However, one of the key elements of the Job Interview Guarantee programme is 'matching and screening' of clients to vacancies, which is delivered by ES staff and it is therefore possible to provide you with the salary costs associated with this.

The other three programmes are made available to clients through our claimant advisory service but it is not possible to attribute the cost of this to individual programmes.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many (a) men and (b) women have participated in the job interview guarantee scheme in each year since its inception;

(2) how many (a) men and (b) women have found a job within three months and six months of attending the job interview guarantee scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the number of men and women who have been helped by Job Interview Guarantee.

The information available is set out in the attached table and shows the total number of people who have taken part in and been placed into jobs through Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) since it began in September 1989.

We collect statistical information on the total numbers of people participating in JIG but this is not broken down by gender. However, a survey carried out in May 1992 showed that 71 per cent. were males and 29 per cent. female.

Whilst we collect details of how many people go into a job through JIG, there is no follow up at the three and six month stages. To do so would necessitate expensive tracking mechanisms at a disproportionate cost.

I hope this is helpful.

[2] From September 1989 to March 1991, JIG was piloted in 20 inner-city areas only.

Training for Work

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have attended a training for work course.

Miss Widdecombe: In the second quarter of 1993-94, the latest period available, there were 66,400 entrants to training for work in England and Wales and of these 69 per cent. were men and 31 per cent. women.

Youth Credits

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women were using youth credits to obtain training in each month since the scheme's inception.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table:

Job Clubs and Job Search

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many (a) men and (b) women have participated in job clubs each year since the scheme started;

(2) how many (a) men and (b) women have attended job search seminars in each quarter since their inception.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Employment has asked me to reply to your questions about the number of men and women participating in Jobclub and job search seminars since the programmes started.

This breakdown is not available for Jobclubs for the year 1985-86, the first year that the programme was running. From April 1986 details of males and females are based on survey information and evaluation reports. Since April 1990 we have collected information on male and female participants on a sample survey basis and this has been used to calculate the annual totals in Table A. The sample survey for 1993-94 is taking place this month.

Table B shows the number of attenders in job search seminars for each quarter since the programme began in August 1991. We do not keep statistics on male and female job search seminar attenders. However a survey in September 1992 showed that approximately 70 per cent. of job search seminars attenders are male and 30 per cent. female.

I hope this is helpful.

Job Review Workshops

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have attended job review workshops in each month since their inception.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of men and women who have attended Job Review Workshops.

Job Review Workshops were launched in October 1991 to help newly unemployed people review their career path and set clear job goals suited to their skill, experience and preferences. The programme is particularly suitable for professional, managerial and executive jobseekers who want to consider alternative careers.

Statistical data was collected monthly until March 1993. From April 1993 information has been collected on a quarterly basis.

I attach tables which show the number of men and women attending the workshops since its inception until December 1993.

I hope this is helpful.

Minimum Wages (United States)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 227, what is the current national minimum wage rate for the United States of America provided under the Fair Labour Standards Act 1938.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The current rates above which individual states in the USA are free to set minimum wages are set out in the fair labour standards amendments of 1989. A copy of this legislation is available in the Library.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 7 March 1994]: The sum of £430,000 in 1993-94 across the Employment Department group as a whole. This includes net expenditure on nursery places and holiday play schemes and financial help with additional child care costs incurred through attending training courses or other work-based functions. About 2,500 children are estimated to have been helped through this expenditure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

School Milk Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many children were direct beneficiaries of the school milk scheme in (a) the 12 school weeks prior to and 12 school weeks after the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the school milk scheme and (b) the 12 school weeks before and 12 school weeks after the reduction in funding for the school milk scheme was effected.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information on the number of school children benefiting from the school milk scheme is not held on a weekly basis. During the academic years 1992-93 and 1993-94, 8,139,417 and 8,048,510 school children respectively were eligible beneficiaries of the school milk scheme.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of EC funding available for the subsidy of milk and dairy produce in schools was accounted for by the United Kingdom before and after each reduction in funding for the school milk scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The United Kingdom accounted for 24·29 per cent. of total EC expenditure on the school milk scheme in the 1992 FEOGA year and for 22·62 per cent. in 1993. This reduction reflects the removal of cheese and buttermilk from the scheme, in the United Kingdom, in April 1993. There is no information yet available on United Kingdom expenditure on the scheme following the 25 per cent. cut in the rate of subsidy and the technical amendments adopted in October 1993. The new arrangements came into effect only on 1 January 1994.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will provide a figure for the value of European Community support lost to the United Kingdom as a consequence of the reduction in European funding for the school milk scheme since (a) 1 April 1993 and (b) 4 October 1994.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Based on claims covering the 12-month period prior to the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the scheme, on 1 April 1993 the value of EC subsidy lost to the United Kingdom for those products totalled £9,245,245·97. Buttermilk accounted for expenditure of just £599·99. No information will be available on the value of support lost to the United Kingdom as a result of the 25 per cent. cut in the school milk subsidy, which was adopted on 4 October 1993 and came into force on 1 January 1994, until claims for the period have been received.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ready-packaged one third pint containers of subsidised milk were distributed by local authorities in the United Kingdom six months before and after each reduction in funding for the school milk scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No information is held by the Intervention Board executive agency, which administers the school milk scheme, on the number of one third pint containers of milk distributed by local authorities.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what quantity and value of milk and milk products which would formerly have been distributed through the school milk scheme have since 1 April 1993 instead been redirected; and to where they have been redirected;

(2) what quantity and value of milk and milk products formerly distributed under the school milk scheme have been redirected since 1 April 1993; and what have been their destinations.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: No definitive information is available on the quantity, value or use to which the milk and milk products no longer utilised under the school milk scheme have been put.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the change in spending in actual and real terms on the school milk scheme after (a) the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the school milk scheme and (b) the reduction in funding.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: The change in spending by local authorities in actual terms since the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the scheme on 1 April 1993 has amounted to a reduction of £5,549,137·98 when comparing the cost of subsidised products in the term before, spring 1993, and the term after, summer 1993, the removal of cheese and buttermilk from the scheme on 1 April 1993. No information will be available on the reduction in funding resulting from the 25 per cent. cut in the rate of subsidy and the technical amendments to the scheme until claims for the period have been received.

It would be inappropriate to express the reductions in expenditure on the school milk scheme in real terms because the changes to the scheme have been single events rather than the result of changes over a period of time.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in real terms what was the average cost of each local authority school meal in (a) the 12 school weeks prior and 12 school weeks after the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the school milk scheme and the 12 school weeks prior to and 12 school weeks after the reduction in funding for the school milk scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: No information is collected by the Intervention Board executive agency, which administers the school milk scheme, on the cost of school meals.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the relationship between the cost trend for local authority school meals and change in the availability of ingredients formerly subsidised as part of the school milk scheme and the reduction of funding for the scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No assessment has been made of the relationship between the costs of school meals provided by local authorities and the changes in the products covered by the school milk scheme. Furthermore, neither MAFF nor the Intervention Board executive agency, which administers the scheme, has any information which would enable such an assessment to be carried out.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost to the local authorities in terms of the funding allocated for the purpose of making up the deficiency in their accounts arising as a consequence of cuts in the value and scope of the school milk scheme since (a) 1 April 1993, (b) 4 October 1993 and (c) in total.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Neither MAFF nor the Intervention Board executive agency, which administers the school milk scheme, have any information on how local authorities have covered the deficiency in their accounts created by the reduction in funding following the 25 per cent. cut in the rate of subsidy.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the administrative costs of (a) distributing milk through the school milk scheme and (b) alternative provision for disposing of milk.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The administrative costs for the Intervention Board executive agency and the Department of Education for Northern Ireland in distributing milk through the school milk scheme were £134,871·80 for the financial year 1993-94. There is no information available on the administrative costs incurred by local authorities. The costs of alternative provisions for disposing of milk not taken up under the school milk scheme would depend on the products into which this milk was manufactured, the volumes involved and the disposal method used. The cost of disposing of one tonne of milk in the form of butter or skimmed milk powder is estimated at around £96.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who is responsible for the disbursement of funds for the school milk scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Responsibility for the disbursement of funds for the school milk scheme rests with the Intervention Board executive agency in Great Britain and the Department of Education for Northern Ireland in the Province.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of milk and other products eligible for the school milk scheme were consumed in (a) the 12 school weeks prior to and (b) 12 school weeks after the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the scheme, (c) the 12 school sitting weeks before and (d) the 12 school sitting weeks after the reduction in funding for the scheme was effected.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There is no information available on a 12-weekly basis on tonnages of milk and milk products consumed under the school milk scheme after removal of buttermilk and cheese. 30,608,186·49 tonnes of eligible milk and milk products, for which subsidy was claimed, were consumed in the school term, spring term 1993, immediately prior to the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the scheme on 1 April 1993. A total of 30,621,821·121 tonnes of eligible milk and milk products, for which subsidy was claimed, were consumed in the school term, summer term 1993, immediately following the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the scheme on 1 April 1993.

Similarly, there is no information available on a 12 weekly basis on changes in consumption before and after the 25 per cent. cut in the subsidy and the technical amendments were introduced. No information will be available until claims for the period have been received.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will chart any changes in the local authority spending on milk and other products eligible for the school milk scheme in (a) the 12 school sitting weeks before and 12 school sitting weeks after the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the school milk scheme and (b) the 12 school sitting weeks before and 12 school sitting weeks after the reduction in funding for the school milk scheme was effected.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No information is available on a 12-weekly basis to enable changes in local authority spending before and after removal of buttermilk and cheese from the school milk scheme to be monitored, nor on the changes following the 25 per cent. cut in the subsidy and the technical amendments introduced on 1 January 1994. Local authority spending on eligible milk and milk products during the term, spring 1993, prior to the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the scheme on 1 April 1993 and the term after, summer 1993, decreased by £4,360,333·99. No information on changes in spending before and after 1 January 1994 will be available until claims for the period have been received.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the local authorities which since 4 October 1993 have (a) increased, (b) reduced and (c) left unchanged their provision of subsidised school drinking milk and other eligible products under the school milk scheme as part of a school meal.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No information will be available on changes in uptake by local authorities under the school milk scheme following the 25 per cent. cut in the subsidy and the technical amendments to the scheme, introduced on 1 January 1994, until claims for the period have been received.

Set-aside

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps she is taking to encourage the positive management of set-aside to benefit the countryside environment.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I support the positive environmental management of set-aside. I have today placed in the Library of the House a handbook entitled "Managing Set-Aside Land for Wildlife". This publication is the result of work commissioned by my Department from the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology to investigate the possibilities of using set-aside land to create or restore wildlife habitats. We have drawn on many of its conclusions in setting the management conditions for set-aside under the arable area payments scheme, and I hope that farmers and conservation advisers will find it equally helpful.

Vintners Company

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who are the members of the wine standards board of the Vintners Company.

Mr. Jack: The members of the wine standards board of the Vintners Company are:

Mr. P. J. Purton (Chairman)
Dr. A. T. Woodrow
Ms C. Kent
Mr. A. Foster
Mr. P. M. Boyling
Brigadier G. Read CBE

The board is funded jointly by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Vintners Company.

Regional Flood Defence Committees

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations she has consulted to seek nominations for membership of regional flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority of people who have expertise in hydrology, coastal processes, town and country planning, emergency planning, financial management, fisheries, recreation and the built heritage.

Mr. Jack: The following organisations were invited to submit nominations:

Association of Drainage Authorities
Confederation of British Industry
Country Landowners Association
National Chambers of Commerce
National Farmers Union
Transport and General Workers Union

In addition English Nature and the Countryside Commission were asked to submit a joint list after consultation with other environmental and conservation bodies. Candidates were also sought from the central list held by the public appointments unit of the Cabinet Office.

The objective is to reflect a range of interests in the ministerial appointments to each committee, having regard to the expertise provided by those committee members appointed by local authorities and by the National Rivers Authority.

Baby and Infant Milks

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the definition of independent person, name of preparatory infant formulae and brand name as used in European Commission directives 91/321 and 92/52.

Mr. Soames: Neither Commission directive 91/321 nor Council directive 92/52 on infant formulae and follow-on formulae define such terms. Any interpretation of these terms where used in the law would be a matter for the courts.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will extend the ban on advertising of baby milks and the giving of free samples to include follow-on milks and specialised baby formulae for infants under one.

Mr. Soames: The Government are currently reviewing the comments received during the consultation exercise on the proposed United Kingdom regulations on infant formulae and follow-on formulae to implement the relevant EC directives. Our decision on the final form of the regulations will be announced as soon as possible.

Wine

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy wine per 75 cl bottle, (b) what she estimates the price of wine per bottle would be in a free market without European Community price intervention, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of wine, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on wine subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the wine sector.

Mr. Jack: The price at which British wholesalers buy wine is a matter for commercial negotiation and varies by consignment.

It is not possible to estimate the price of wine without European Community price intervention for the reasons given in my reply to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 11 January at columns 65-6.

The European Commission estimates that European Community wine production in the 1992-93 wine year was 184 million hectolitres—mhl—that 127 mhl was consumed as wine in the EC, net exports were 7 mhl and other uses—for example, vinegar, vermouth and eaux de vie—15 mhl.

Total common agricultural policy expenditure in 1993 on the wine regime was 1,510 million ecu—£1,186 million —provisional outturn.

The Exchequer cost of CAP support for wine in the United Kingdom is estimated at £591,000 for the 1993-94 financial year. The United Kingdom also contributes to the European Community budget as a whole, which funds the cost of the wine support system in other member states.

Flood Defence Committees

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many MAFF-appointed members of regional flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority receive direct or indirect pecuniary benefits from the flood defence operations of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Jack: The terms of appointment of ministerial members draw attention to the provisions referred to in paragraph 14 of schedule 4 to the Water Resources Act 1991 whereby if a member or his or her spouse has any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, in a contract, proposed contract or other matter which is to be considered at a meeting of the committee at which the member is present, the member must disclose the fact and refrain from taking any part in the proceedings relating to that contract or other matter. In addition, members are requested to avoid any conflict of interest between their RFDC responsibilities and any personal or business interests.

Soil Erosion

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice her Department gives to farmers to avoid soil erosion in flash floods.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My Department published the code of good agricultural practice for the protection of soil in December last year.

The code provides practical guidance to help farmers and growers avoid causing long-term damage to the soil and specifically deals with techniques to combat soil erosion caused by water.

Copies of the soil code have been placed in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Helicopters

11. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effects of low-flying helicopters on animal livestock in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Low-flying helicopters have been accepted as the cause of claims from farmers for dead or injured livestock, resulting on a number of occasions in the payment of compensation.

Ceremonial and Guard Duty

17. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much ceremonial and guard duty is required of how many horses and troops; at what average annual cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Ceremonial and guards duties are currently undertaken primarily on a full-time basis by 824 Army and Royal Air Force personnel at an estimated cost in 1993-94 of £18,650,000. Included in this sum is the cost of 362 horses involved in mounted duties.

Bosnia

18. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to revisit Bosnia to examine the conditions of British troops.

Mr. Rifkind: I maintain a close interest in the conditions under which British forces are deployed in Bosnia. I make regular visits there, most recently last month, and I was particularly impressed, as are we all, by the dedication and courage demonstrated by our forces in carrying out their work under difficult and dangerous conditions.

Ferranti

19. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consequences Ferranti's decision to call in the receiver has had for Britain's armed services.

Mr. Aitken: The receivership of Ferranti International has had no consequences of any significance for the armed forces. The receivers are continuing to trade, and my Department has co-operated fully with them to avoid disruption to MOD contracts.

Women Personnel

20. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the defence relationship with the American armed forces and on the implications of their policy on women personnel for the United Kingdom services and on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom's defence relationship with the American armed forces is wide ranging and involves frequent contacts at all levels. The American armed forces' policy on the employment of female personnel is unlikely to have any material implications for the United Kingdom armed forces.

Expenditure

21. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the difference in real terms between the planned level of defence spending in 1994-95 and the actual expenditure in (a) 1985 and (b) 1990.

Mr. Hanley: Details of previous and planned defence spending between 1978-79 and 1996-97 are contained in table 3.3 of the statistical supplement to the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", 1994-95, Cm 2519, which was published on 25 February.

Contracting Out

22. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards contracting out RAF engineering and maintenance work.

Mr. Aitken: Engineering and maintenance activities in support of the Royal Air Force are currently being drawn together as part of the new RAF Logistics Command, which will come into being with effect from 1 April 1994.

However, as the House knows, the defence costs study "Front Line First" is examining the whole of the defence support area to ensure that current plans provide the most cost-effective approach to supporting the front line, and its recommendations are awaited.

D-day

23. Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role his Department is playing in planning the celebration of the 50th anniversary of D-day.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence is chairing the steering group responsible for co-ordinating the United Kingdom's involvement in the D-day commemorations.

Personnel Reductions

24. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the percentage cut in the regular armed forces and in the reserves since "Options for Change"; and what reductions are planned for the next five years.

Mr. Hanley: Between 1 April 1990 and 1 January 1994, the total strengths of the regular and volunteer reserve forces reduced by 15·6 per cent. and 14·5 per cent. respectively. On current plans, a further reduction of 5·1 per cent. in the strength of the regular forces will be made by 1 April 1995. These figures exclude the former Ulster Defence Regiment, which was part of the volunteer reserve forces until it formed the home service battalions of the Royal Irish Regiment on 1 July 1992 and became part of the regular forces. At the present time, it is not possible to forecast any further changes in the manpower levels in the regular or volunteer reserve forces.

Space-based Missiles

25. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts on space-based missile defence.

Mr. Hanley: There have been no recent NATO ministerial discussions on space-based missile defence but the overall issue of ballistic missile defence remains under regular review and this includes regular discussion at official level within NATO.

Battle Tanks

26. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many main battle tanks will be in service with the British Army by the end of the century.

27. Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many main battle tanks will be in service with the British Army by the end of the century.

Mr. Aitken: One hundred and twenty-seven Challenger 2 tanks are already on order from Vickers Defence Systems. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced to the House of Commons Defence Committee on 1 December, subject to the negotiation of satisfactory contractual terms we intend to place a further order for up to 259 more of these tanks. The number of main battle tanks that will be in service with the British Army by the end of the century will therefore be up to 386.

Yugoslavia

28. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed services personnel are currently serving offshore and on the ground in former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently some 2,260 armed forces personnel serving in the Adriatic and some 2,450 on the ground in the former Yugoslavia. In addition, some 650 Royal Air Force personnel are based in Italy in support of United Nations and NATO air operations in theatre.

Peacekeeping Forces

29. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of Britain's peacekeeping forces worldwide; and what proportion of this cost is reimbursed from the United Nations.

Mr. Hanley: United Kingdom military personnel have been involved in five United Nations peacekeeping operations during the financial year 1993-94; the additional cost is likely to total between £100,000,000—£110,000,000. Reimbursement from the United Nations for the same period so far amounts to £23,000,000. The United Kingdom stands to claim up to a further £25,000,000, subject to other member states paying their assessed contributions.

10 Squadron

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 January 1994, Official Report, column 347, if he will place in the Library copies of the criteria used for determining repayment charges for non-defence tasks carried out by 10 Squadron; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Rosyth Naval Base

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the cost involved in the change of task at Rosyth naval base in terms of redundancies and associated costs for civilians and the transfer of naval personnel;

(2) what are the numbers involved in the change in task of Rosyth to a minor war vessels operating base for both civilian and royal naval personnel as at (a) July 1991, (b) January 1994 and (c) completion of change of task to a minor war vessels operating base;

(3) if he will provide an update on the annual savings over five years expected from the change in task at Rosyth naval base;

(4) if he will make it his policy that the social and economic implications of changes at Rosyth will be taken fully into account during the current review;

(5) if he will place in the Library a copy of the terms of reference for the studies regarding minor war vessel base porting being carried out at Rosyth, Plymouth Devonport and Portsmouth.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Lady to my letter of 3 March 1994; a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual value for the past five years of refit, docking and essential defects and other work carried out by Rosyth royal dockyard on minor war vessels based at Rosyth and elsewhere; and what percentage this represents of the total shipwork expenditure on minor war vessels.

Mr. Aitken: The annual value of refit, docking and essential defects and other work carried out by Rosyth royal dockyard over the past five years on minor war vessels is set out:

£ million

	At outturn prices
1989-90	26·57
1990-91	27·18
1991-92	25·73
1992-93	21·54

[1]Estimate.

Some minor war vessel work is undertaken by the fleet maintenance groups at the naval bases. Since these organisations are capacity funded, not all costs arising out of minor war vessel work are attributed to this task. It is, therefore, not possible to establish a meaningful percentage comparison with the total shipwork expenditure on minor war vessels. However, broad indications are that in 1992-93 the figure was around 60 per cent. and the estimate for the current financial year is around 80 per cent.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's assessment of the resulting unemployment rates in Dunfermline and Fife if the Rosyth naval base were to be closed as a result of the current review.

Mr. Aitken: No decisions on the defence costs study have been taken, nor will they be until Ministers have been presented with the findings of the study as a whole. It is too early to speculate about the outcome of this work.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many redundant personnel formerly employed at Rosyth naval base have used the redundancy counselling and relocation service provided by British Coal Enterprise; and how many of these have gained employment as a result.

Mr. Hanley: Between 12 October 1992 and 28 February 1994, of the 92 employees who registered with British Coal Enterprise, 81 subsequently attended outplacement training. Of this number, 75 decided to pursue full-time employment in the area. To date, 41 have found new jobs and four, who were provided with additional specialised training, are now self-employed. Of the 30 still seeking employment, 15 remain employed at Rosyth naval base.

Defence Costs Study

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has to establish an overall strategy for dealing with the restructuring process arising from the defence costs study; and if he will make it his policy to take into account the social and economic impact on the communities involved;

(2) what mechanisms are in place for the restructuring of military establishments and the use of redundant assets: and what assessment he has made of the work done to date.

Mr. Aitken: The defence costs study is examining all aspects of support to the front line. One aim of the study is to develop proposals for change that will ensure that assets employed in defence support areas are not under-utilised.

It is too early to speculate about the outcome of this work, but all relevant factors will be taken into account.

Recruitment

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of current levels of naval recruitment from Scotland and the north of England; and what were the expressed first base preferences for (a) Rosyth and (b) Faslane.

Mr. Hanley: During the recruiting year 1993-94 the Royal Navy has recruited 40 officers and 223 ratings from the North region.[1] Information on applicants' preference is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

[1] Note: The North region is defined as the area from Cumbria to Cleveland northwards, including Northern Ireland.

Civilian Establishments

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's civilian establishments, their locations, their functions and the number of people they each employ.

Mr. Hanley: In the interests of security, it is not my Department's practice to publish complete lists of all its civilian establishments and their functions.

Home Military Bases

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the United Kingdom's home military bases, their locations and the number of service personnel based and civilian staff employed at each of them.

Mr. Hanley: In the interests of security, it is not my Department's practice to publish complete lists of all the United Kingdom's military bases.

Submarines and Fishing Vessels

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the internal investigation into the incident between HMS Valiant and the fishing vessel Audacious to be made available to members of the Department of Transport's fishing industry safety committee sub-group dealing with submarine and fishing vessels matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The investigation into the incident between HMS Valiant and fishing vessel Audacious has now been completed and the findings are being examined. As I indicated in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 18 January 1994, Official Report, column 506, the findings of the investigation will shortly be made available to the members of the Department of Transport's fishing industry safety group sub-group on submarine and fishing vessel interaction, which includes representatives of the fisherman's federations.

Regimental Boards of Inquiry

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the notice required to be given to witnesses or persons appearing before a regimental board of inquiry about their right to be represented.

Mr. Hanley: There is no set period of notice required to be given to persons appearing before regimental inquiries or boards of inquiry. Reasonable steps are taken to ensure that those witnesses who are likely to be affected by the outcome of the board of inquiry, and are therefore entitled to be legally represented, have the opportunity to seek legal representation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has commissioned within his Department, or from outside consultants, any study on the long-term safety of the high-level liquid nuclear waste storage tanks at Sellafield; and what is his policy in regard to evaluating independent expert reviews of nuclear waste storage safety.

Mr. Eggar: No, this is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc subject to the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate's views as to safety. Where appropriate, the NII considers factors such as studies by independent experts in its assessment of operators' safety cases.

Miners (Employment)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many miners were in employment in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) the United Kingdom in each year since 1964.

Mr. Eggar: The numbers of wages earners on colliery books at 31 March each year since 1964 were as follows:

Thousands

1964	373·0	79·4	52·9	505·3

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many public interest immunity certificates he, or his predecessors, have been asked to sign in each year since 1979; how many he or his predecessors decided not to sign; and if he will make a statement of his policy on signing public interest immunity certificates.

Mr. Heseltine: No central record is kept of public interest immunity certificates signed since 1979.

The use of public interest immunity certificates is currently an issue before Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. I have already given my evidence to the inquiry.

Newsagents

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he plans to introduce to the current arrangements for retailing newspapers following the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on newsagents.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) on 1 March 1994, Official Report, column 623.

Research and Development

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the Government's assistance for exceptional projects scheme of financial support for investment and research and development projects.

Mr. Sainsbury: I announced on 26 January 1993 the suspension of the assistance for exceptional projects scheme from 1 March 1993 until April 1994. I have decided to maintain this suspension until at least the end of June 1994.

Regional Challenge

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to introduce a regional challenge as part of the way in which the European regional development fund will be deployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: It is my intention to introduce, consistently with the council regulations, a new competitive element in the way that ERDF money is allocated in objective 1, 2 and 5b areas of England. Under this regional challenge, modelled on the city challenge concept, a proportion of ERDF money, to be determined in agreement with the Commission, would be allocated separately by competition on the basis of local regeneration or development proposals submitted by local partnerships.

Competition would take place only within each community support framework area. The distribution of the structural funds between the regions would not be affected.

I believe that this initiative will stimulate local communities to work together to produce imaginative proposals, encourage a more coherent overall approach to local issues, lever in significantly increased private sector funding and enhance value for money. Relevant United Kingdom public expenditure programmes, including the single regeneration budget, will in principle be available within existing public expenditure provision to contribute towards successful bids alongside the ERDF and other resources. The arrangements will be administrated in each region by the integrated regional offices.

Regional challenge should enhance the effectiveness of the structural funds in each community support framework area. The initiative will be worked up in consultation with the local partnerships and with the agreement of the Commission, with the aim of introducing it when the community support frameworks are adopted later this year.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales intends to open discussions immediately on the introduction of a separate regional challenge scheme in the Principality.

Inertia Address Listing

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the regulations governing inertia address listing.

Mr. McLoughlin: Persons who do not wish to receive unsolicited mail can have themselves removed from most mailing lists by registering with the mailing preference service. I see no need for additional regulation in this area.

Communication on Superhighways

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department is currently sponsoring research into communication superhighways.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department sponsors a diverse range of activities at European and national level which underpin the developments of advanced information highways.

At the European level, the Community has so far spent over 1 becu—£700 million—through the research in advanced communications for Europe—RACE—programme. The research carried out will assist the development of integrated broadband communications.

At a national level, my Department jointly sponsors with the Science and Engineering Research Council, the following relevant link programmes: personal communications, £20 million, higher performance interfaces and protocols, £8 million, computer supported co-operative work, £13 million, and optoelectronic systems, £30 million.

A recent study conducted for the Department of the international competitiveness of the United Kingdom telecommunications infrastructure concluded that the United Kingdom's existing information infrastructure can stand comparison with the best in the world. The work referred to will help to ensure that United Kingdom maintains this position.

Patent Office

Mr. Mills: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he plans to announce the recommendations of his consultants and his conclusions on the consultation period on the proposed privatisation of the Patent Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am still considering the report by the consultants on the review of the Patent Office, along with the views which have been put to the consultants and direct to my Department during the course of the review. I shall announce my conclusions as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Rover Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 828-30, what was the estimated percentage United Kingdom content of the cars manufactured in the United Kingdom in 1973; what is his estimate of the content in 1993; and if he will estimate the number of each category of cars produced by Rover and the overall United Kingdom content, including the operating profit but excluding licence payments.

Mr. Sainsbury: This question can be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 319, what are his reasons for expecting the takeover of Rover by BMW to make Rover more competitive than it would have been under the pre-existing arrangements with Honda; and whether his expectation includes (a) overseas markets as well as the United Kingdom market, (b) cars as well as utilities, (c) medium cars as well as small cars and (d) contract suppliers as well as Rover itself.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my statement to the House, on 31 January, Official Report, columns 615-16.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, columns 615-16, if he will make a statement on the reasons why the number of fraudulent trading convictions submitted by bodies other than the Insolvency Service fell from five in 1992-93 to two in 1993-94.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of cases submitted by bodies other than the Insolvency Service which contain allegations of possible offences of fraudulent trading, and the number of prosecutions arising from such referrals, is small. The variations from year to year are erratic.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement as to how his consultants on the privatisation of the Insolvency Service should compare the efficiency of the Insolvency Service with that of insolvency practitioners with regard to mechanical processing work in the absence of data on the number of voluntary liquidations completed in any year.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The consultants' work will involve a comparison between the value for money offered by private sector contractors with that provided by official receivers in performing those mechanical, processing tasks carried out by official receivers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the current proposals being drawn up by the Insolvency Service agency for major information technology expenditure where the proposals have not yet been quantified or approved.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Insolvency Service continues to explore the possibility of productive investment in information technology across the range of its functions and in the light of its likely business needs.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much of the expenditure on information technology during the last five years and the expected expenditure during the next five years by the Insolvency Service relates to (a) mechanical processing work and (b) investigation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The bulk of the service's information technology expenditure over the last five years and during the next few years has been and will continue to be made in three areas. These are:

(i) development and support for the Insolvency Service information system mainframe system;
(ii) development and installation of the service's local office information system—LOIS—which will replace ISIS in due course; and
(iii) the development of a new computer system for central accounting unit.

Both ISIS and LOIS supports the range of the service's functions.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, columns 419-20, what assessment he has made of the reasons why authorising bodies have struck off only one unfit insolvency practitioner since the introduction of the Insolvency Act 1986 where the initial complaint did not originate with the Insolvency Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Many complaints about the conduct of insolvency practitioners are made initially to my Department's Insolvency Service, notwithstanding that the particular practitioner concerned is authorised by one of the recognised professional bodies. This may be because the complainant is not aware of the authorisation procedures introduced by the Insolvency Act 1986 or, alternatively, he does not know by which of the bodies the practitioner is authorised.

The Insolvency Service refers such complaints to the appropriate authorising body to take such action as may be appropriate.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many trials for fraudulent trading resulted in an acquittal for each of the past five years; and how many of those trials were instituted by the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The figures for trials in proceedings brought by my Department where any defendant pleaded not guilty to one or more charges of fraudulent trading are set out in the following table. Records are not kept in such a form that information about the origin of all these cases is readily available, but I can say that in 1992-93 seven of the unsuccessful trials arose from investigations by the Insolvency Service and that in 1993-94 all of the unsuccessful trials arose from such investigations.

Fraudulent trading cases 1 April 1989-4 March 1994

Note:
"Trials" means contested cases where one of the main counts is fraudulent trading.
"Successful" means a conviction is secured for fraudulent trading against one or more defendants in the trial.
"Unsuccessful" means no conviction for fraudulent trading was secured against any defendant in the trial. It includes cases where one or more convictions were secured in other counts, for example for Theft Act offences or for failure to keep proper accounting records.
The figures are for cases prosecuted by the DTI. Other agencies, such as the Crown Prosecution Service, also prosecute offences of fraudulent trading.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost of employing consultants on the privatisation of the Insolvency Service; and if the cost will be met from the Insolvency Service budget.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The purpose of the review of the future of the Insolvency Service is to examine the ways in which official receivers may concentrate more on their investigatory role by involving the private sector more in the mechanical processing work in insolvencies. The cost of the review, which is commercially confidential, will be met from Insolvency Service resources.

Insolvency

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many compulsory insolvencies distinguishing between companies and personal bankruptcies were dealt with by insolvency practitioners in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of compulsory insolvencies passed to insolvency practitioners and the number of final accounts received from them on conclusion of their administration were as follows:

	1991-92 Cases to Final		1992-93 Cases to Final		1993-94 Cases to Final
	IPs	a/c's	IPs	a/c's	IPs[1]	a/c's[2]

Disqualification

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many directions to proceed with disqualification were issued in official receiver cases in 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if he will make a statement as to the reasons underlying the change in numbers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In 1992-93 there were 164 directions to proceed with disqualification proceedings in official receiver cases. In 1993-94 there were 50 directions for the nine months ended 31 December 1993.

The decline in the number of proceedings issued is a consequence of the reduced investigative time available to official receivers in the light of recent high levels of compulsory insolvencies.

EC Assistance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those areas in the United Kingdom originally designated for European Community objective 5b assistance but subsequently removed from such designation, giving the size and population of each area.

Mr. Sainsbury: In its announcement of 21 December 1993, the European Commission proposed an objective 5b population for the United Kingdom of 2·816 million. It did not designate precise areas but invited the Government to define in detail areas within the population total. The Commission subsequently increased this total to 2·841 million.

In order to accommodate a small number of additional areas originally proposed by the Government for objective 2, and in order to express the population of all the areas concerned on a different statistical basis requested by the Commission, it was necessary to propose a marginal adjustment to many of the areas originally proposed for objective 5b.

Where an adjustment led to a net reduction in the proposed population for an area it was in the range from 2 to 11 per cent. The sum of these adjustments led to a total net reduction of 136,000.

There were no implications for the United Kingdom's financial allocation under objective 5b.

Post Office

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the implications of the introduction of optical character recognition equipment in sorting offices for employment levels in the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has made no assessment of the implications of the introduction of optical character recognition in sorting offices for employment levels in the Post Office as this is an operational matter for the Post Office board. I understand from the Post Office that any reduction in staffing levels to date has been achieved without compulsory redundancies and that it hopes to continue on this basis.

British Telecom

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact of the regulatory regime in the United Kingdom on the ability of British Telecom to be a major player in global telecommunications.

Mr. McLoughlin: Current telecommunications regulation achieves a good balance between the need to ensure real and effective competition and the need to avoid over-burdensome restrictions on companies. BT has benefited from its experience in the liberalised United Kingdom environment. This has been in large part responsible for its development into an internationally successful company.

Advertising

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 513, if he will make a statement on why Classic FM was used by his Department in its advertising campaign regarding the submission of company accounts; and what other media outlets his Department considered, or employed.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Responsiility for the subject has been delegated to the chief executive of the Companies House executive agency for which my Department is responsible. I have, therefore, asked Mr. David Durham to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. David Durham to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 March 1994:

On 2 March you tabled the following Parliamentary Question:

> "To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his Answer of 18th January, Official Report, column 513, if he will make a statement on why Classic FM was used by his Department in its advertising campaign regarding the submission of company accounts; and what other media outlets his Department considered, or employed."

Following the answer given by Mr. Neil Hamilton MP, I am replying as Chief Executive of Companies House.

I have made use of Classic FM because it was an appropriate radio station for a national filing awareness campaign, having the most appropriate demographic profile of the national commercial stations.

As I commented in my previous letter, the introduction of Late Filing Penalties in July 1992 has provided a major boost to the completeness of the company register. However, many companies appear to remain unsure of their filing obligations and continue to file late.

Companies House does recognise that awareness of the legal obligations, which include dates by which company accounts must be filed, is an important aspect of the process of enabling companies to meet their obligations under the Companies Acts. We were deeply disappointed to learn from independent research that 55 per cent. of company directors did not know what their due dates were. We see it as our duty to ensure that we use all reasonable means to make the business community aware of the deadlines for filing all accounts and the mandatory penalties which apply.

A variety of media are considered to ensure that company directors are aware of these facts and the penalties that apply. These include commercial radio, inserts in technical press, national press and direct reminders, all of which have been used at various times to good effect. In addition, as indicated in our winning Charter Mark submission, we attend roadshows, exhibitions, hold customer days, issue Notes for Guidance and provide a central enquiry unit.

Independent market research is commissioned to monitor the effectiveness of our communications. Recent results indicated that 75 per cent. of accountants and 49 per cent. of companies thought it was important that Companies House should advertise to inform and remind companies of their due dates for filing.

I hope this is helpful.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 February 1994]: From records currently available there have been no such occasions in the Department of Trade and Industry, but formal directions have been issued to ECGD on three occasions, all of which have been reported to Parliament —Official Report, 8 July 1981, columns 125-26; 16 October 1990, columns 771-72, and 30 June 1993, column 511.

Legal Advice

Mr. Winnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade from what sources he receives outside legal advice for his departmental duties.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 7 March 1994]: In the first place I look to the solicitor to the Department of Trade and Industry and his staff. I also have access, where necessary, to advice from the law officers. In cases where special expertise is required or where the effective use of resources makes this desirable, I make use of the services of the Treasury Solicitor's Department and of the Bar or solicitors in private practice.

Investigating Accountants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of whether present arrangements are sufficient to ensure that no conflict of interest arises when investigating accountants are appointed as receivers of a company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 7 March 1994]: This issue has been brought to my attention many times but a convincing case for statutory intervention has yet to be made.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to review the arrangements whereby investigating accountants can be appointed as receivers of a company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 7 March 1994]: My Department has already contributed to a review of ethical guidance initiated by the insolvency profession which covered, amongst other things, the issue of investigating accountants being appointed receivers and I do not believe further action is appropriate at the moment.

Royal Mail

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made about value added tax exemption being removed following the possible privatisation of the Royal Mail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 4 March 1994]: The EC sixth VAT directive requires the supply of services by the public postal services to be VAT exempt. A privatised Royal Mail would continue to provide public postal services. The Government are therefore satisfied that VAT would not be charged on stamps sold by a privatised Royal Mail.

Fire Safety

Mr. Michael: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now extend the current review of the enforcement of fire safety legislation to allow further consultation with fire service authorities and with particular reference to the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 4 March 1994]: The review of fire safety enforcement and legislation involves consultation with all interested parties. These include representatives of all the various fire service bodies, including the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority.

Companies Legislation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the SRU report on the options for changing the structure of Companies House and company registration.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 4 March 1994]: We are currently considering the SRU report and have yet to take any decision on its publication.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Shalfleet Bridge

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the Shalfleet bridge was first placed on the draft list of listed buildings; and when the county council was advised of the draft listing of this structure.

Mr. Brooke: Shalfleet bridge was included in the draft resurvey list which was submitted to my Department by English Heritage on 9 July 1993. A copy of the draft list was sent to South Wight borough council on 12 July 1993, and I understand that the Council passed it on to the Isle of Wight joint planning technical unit, which serves South Wight and Medina borough councils and the Isle of Wight county council.

My Department does not send copies of draft lists to county councils: copies are sent only to district planning authorities.

Arts Council of England

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will announce the members of the new Arts Council of England.

Mr. Brooke: Shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on Child Support Agency case reference no. 1001953851, dealt with at the Longton agency; and on what grounds the agency cancelled the child maintenance order concerned.

Mr. Burt: The case was taken on under section 6 of the Child Support Act 1991 and the maintenance order was subsequently superseded and ceased to have effect by virtue of regulation 3(6) of the Child Support (Maintenance Arrangements and Jurisdiction) Regulations 1992.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the policy of the Child Support Agency regarding using first-class post rather than second-class post;

(2) how many letters on average are sent by the Child Support Agency to each person who is the subject of a claim prior to the statement of the new contribution required;

(3) what was the overall cost of administration and the cost of the postage bill for the Child Support Agency in the last available year.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Mike O'Brien, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the overall cost of administration, the cost of postage and the number of letters issued by the Child Support Agency before a maintenance assessment is completed.

As the Agency has not completed its first year of operation, the actual full year's costs are not yet known. The total budget allocation for the Agency's capital and running costs for the year 1993-94 is £116 million, of which £2·2 million has been allocated for postage.

Figures are not collected centrally on the total number of letters issued to individual clients before a maintenance assessment is made. Our records indicate, however, that in addition to the initial letter, reminders are currently required in 50 per cent. of cases, and further verification required in 40 per cent. of cases.

All correspondence issued by the Agency's computer system and payments are sent by first class post. Clerically issued correspondence will normally be sent by second class post.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions are given to the Child Support Agency to protect single mothers who have disabilities or children with disabilities from a possible £8·80 a week income support reduction or withdrawal of their benefit book.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Mildred Gordon, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the instructions given to the Child Support Agency to protect single mothers with disabilities, or single mothers with children who have disabilities from a possible £8·80 reduction in their income support.

The instructions given to child support officers (CSOs) on dealing with reduced benefit directions are contained in the Child support Manual, a copy of which is contained in the Library. There are no specific instructions concerning single mothers who have disabilities or children with disabilities, but the decision to implement a reduced benefit deduction is made only after the CSO has considered the impact on the welfare of the children.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many assessments the Child Support Agency has made; how many assessments are being challenged by parents with care; and how many assessments are being challenged by absent parents.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Mildred Gordon, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the numbers of maintenance assessments issued by the Child Support Agency which have been challenged.

During the period 5 April 1993 to 31 December 1993 the Agency assessed 121,600 cases, and received 16,600 requests for second tier reviews of assessments. A breakdown of how many requests for review were initiated by absent parents, and how many by parents with care is not available.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many cases have been dealt with by the Child Support Agency to date;

(2) how many of all the cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency to date have involved absent parents who are in receipt of income support.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Rachel Squire, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for the numbers of cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency.

From 5 April 1993 to 31 December 1993 the Agency took on 711,000 cases.

In the same period, over 200,000 cases were cleared, and more than 121,600 resulted in a maintenance assessment. Of these 24,300 cases involved absent parents receiving income support.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases to date the Child Support Agency has used earnings deduction orders to obtain maintenance payments.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Rachel Squire, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of deductions from earnings orders issued by the Child Support Agency.

To the end of February 1994, the Agency had issued deductions from earnings orders in an estimated 1,400 cases.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what target time the Child Support Agency has for completion of assessments of new child support claims; how many of the claims made after April 1993 have been assessed within the target time; and in how many cases the Child Support Agency has exceeded the target time by (a) four weeks, (b) eight weeks and (c) 12 weeks.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Rachel Squire, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the target time for completion of a child maintenance assessment by the Child Support Agency.

The Agency does not have a target time for completion of assessments. The original expectation was that it would take between 6 to 12 weeks to clear a straightforward case once the Agency was fully operational. To date, the process has been more time consuming than had previously been expected. Information for the period 5 April to 31 December 1993 shows that 45·5% of assessments have been cleared in under 40 days, 12 % in between 40 and 100 days, and 42% in over 100 days.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency to date have resulted in absent parents requesting a review of maintenance assessment; if there is a target time for dealing with reviews; what is the average length of time required to complete the review process; and in how many cases the review process has exceeded the target time.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Rachel Squire, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about reviews of child maintenance assessments.

During the period 5 April 1993 to 31 December 1993 the Child Support Agency received 16,600 requests for second tier reviews of assessments. Information on clearance times is being collected but, because of the relatively low volumes, it is too early for reliable information to be available. At this stage we are, therefore, unable to estimate how long it should take to complete a review.

A breakdown of how many requests for review were initiated by absent parents, and how many by parents with care is not available.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much, on average, it costs the Child Support Agency to access and collect £2·20 from an absent parent on income support.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Mildred Gordon, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the cost to the Child Support Agency of administering the collection of £2·20 from absent parents on income support.

The assessment and collection of the £2·20 deduction from an absent parent on income support is part of the Agency's overall assessment and collection services and, as such, is not costed as a separate item, being part of the total costs of administration. Given, however, that the process involves automated transfers of multiple payments, the marginal cost attributable to each individual case will be very small.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, (1) pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 695, when estimates will be available of the amount of money the Child Support Agency will be expected to recover in (a) 1994-95 (b) 1995-96 and (c) 1996-97;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 695, what is the estimated shortfall between the Child Support Agency target of £530 million to be recovered in 1993-94 and the actual amount now expected to be recovered.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ross Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Mike Hall, dated 8 March 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about the estimated shortfall in benefit saving recoveries for 1993-94 and when estimates will be available of recoveries for future years.

We are not yet able to provide an assessment of the level of benefit savings that the Agency will achieve in 1993-94 because of uncertainties caused by the effect of the recent policy changes.

Targets for the Agency, including that for benefit savings, are set annually. The 1994-95 target will be announced in due course.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases the Child Support Agency has pursued to date when there is in existence a court agreement regarding maintenance.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Tim Renton, dated 8 March 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State about the number of cases the Child Support Agency has pursued where there was an existing court order.

Up to 31 December 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, the Agency had issued maintenance application forms to 344,000 absent parents, of which 121,600 have resulted in the assessment of maintenance. Figures are not kept on the number of cases in which a prior court agreement existed. It is estimated, however, that 45 per cent. of cases taken on will have an existing maintenance arrangement, a proportion which includes court agreements.

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

Child Poverty

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list research commissioned or undertaken by his Department since 1979 into the causes and effects of poverty, material deprivation and very low family income among children in any part of the United Kingdom, specifying the year and cost of each project; and whether he has any plans for such research.

Mr. Burt: Research is regularly conducted into the role of social security and its impact on those in low-income households. A list of research projects sponsored by the Department is published in the social security research yearbooks, formerly the DHSS handbook of research and development, copies of which are in the Library.

In addition, the Department sponsors a number of long-running statistical surveys to monitor change in the composition and circumstances of households and the level and nature of their income. These provide the basic data for research and analysis by other interested researchers.

World Summit

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 691, if he proposes to prepare a report on poverty for the world summit on social development planned to take place in Copenhagen in March 1995; and if he will specify which other memberes of the European Union have already issued such reports in preparation for that summit.

Mr. Burt: I have no such plans, and am not aware of any reports on poverty that have been issued by European Union countries in preparation for the world summit on social development.

Funeral Payments

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he plans to make to the rules governing funeral payments from the social fund.

Mr. Scott: Amendments to the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Payment (General) Expenses Regulations 1987 have been laid before Parliament today. They aim to ensure that help will be focused more accurately on those who have good reason to take responsibility for funeral costs. People in genuine nerd of help will not be affected.

Housing Benefit

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants living in private rented accommodation had their housing benefit reduced in the last year; and what was the average level of reduction.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available. Decisions on the level of housing benefit paid in individual cases are matters for local authorities, which may restrict payments on the basis of a rent officer's determination or may choose to pay benefit exceeding that amount.

Crisis Loans

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many crisis loans were paid for rent in advance for the last year.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is published in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's annual report on the social fund for 1992-93, which is in the Library.

Family Credit

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time taken to process an application for family credit.

Mr. Burt: The assessment of family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Tessa Jowell, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the average length of time taken to process an application for Family Credit.

Firstly, I should explain that the Benefits Agency's 1992-93 target, set by the Secretary of State is to clear 60 per cent. of claims to Family Credit within 13 days.

The average clearance time for the latest month, February 1994, is 12·11 working days. I am also able to inform you that over the last six months, claims to Family Credit have been cleared in an average of 11·72 days.

I hope my reply has been helpful.

Income Support

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received from Coventry concerning undue delay in the payment of income support;

(2) what standard is set for the time to be taken to process and pay income support to a woman who is within 11 weeks of her expected date of confinement;

(3) what information is required of an income support claimant who is within 11 weeks of expected date of confinement in order to evaluate their claim;

(4) what representations he has received from Coventry concerning the Benefit Agency asking unnecessary and irrelevant questions of income support claimants;

(5) to what explanation an income support claimant is entitled in a case of extensive delay in processing and paying a claim;

(6) what investigations are currently being conducted into the processing and payment of income support from the Coventry office.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Robert Ainsworth, dated 8 March:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about claims to, and the payment of, Income Support (IS) in Coventry.

National targets for the 1993/94 year for IS claims are that 71% should be decided within 5 working days and 90% within 13 working days. Coventry District Office has achieved clearance rates of 74·1% within 5 working says and 89·7% within 13 working days in the year to date.

The Benefits Agency Customer Charter, a copy of which I have enclosed, is freely available in any of the Agency's District Offices and states clearly that, where a delay occurs, the customer should contact the person dealing with their claim who will explain clearly the reason for it. If they are not satisfied with this explanation, they can contact the Customer Service Manager, who will then deal with the complaint. The name and address of the Customer Service Manager is displayed in all public areas of the Agency's offices and is also given on request to customers.

Complaints addressed personally to the Manager of the Coventry office are not broken down to record the specific subject. I should also explain that no record is kept of the number, or nature of complaints, answered by IS staff, which were not referred to either the Customer Service Manager or Office Manager at Coventry.

A customer who claims IS must supply any information necessary for an independent Adjudication Officer to decide entitlement to benefit. In addition, customers who are pregnant must also provide a certificate of Expected Date of Confinement provided by their GP or hospital.

Peter Light, the Manager at Coventry District Office has informed me that he has no complaints under investigation concerning the processing of IS, or delays in making payment by his staff. However, if you have received a specific complaint or allegation, Mr. Light can be contacted and he will investigate it as a matter of priority and provide you with a full written report of his findings.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving (a) attendance allowance, (b) disability allowance, (c) family credit, (d) income support, (e) invalidity benefit and (f) sickness benefit in the Doncaster area.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 8 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about benefit recipients in Doncaster.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because Benefits Agency District boundaries do not correspond with county or borough boundaries. A small part of the Doncaster area falls within that covered by the Mexborough Branch Office of the Agency's Rother and Dearne District.

Statistics relating to the Mexborough customers living in the Doncaster area receiving Sickness Benefit, Invalidity Benefit, Income Support and Family Credit could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, I have provided details for the area covered by the Doncaster District only.

Statistical data for each of the benefits is collected and collated over different periods and timescales. The latest available figures show that on the last working day of January 1994 there were 14,728 people claiming Invalidity Benefit and 3,160 people claiming Sickness Benefit; on the last working day of February there were 30,800 people claiming Income Support, and at 18 February 1994 there were 3,010 people claiming Family Credit.

Attendance Allowance and Disability Living Allowance are centrally administered benefits. A clerical trawl would be necessary to ascertain the number of Attendance Allowance beneficiaries residing in Doncaster. To obtain the same information for Disability Living Allowance recipients would necessitate a scan of the DLA computer system. Both these exercises could only be carried out at a disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many landowners claiming full exemption from inheritance tax have been found not to have made appropriate arrangements to publicise the right of public access to their land.

Mr. Dorrell: Landowners who breach the undertakings they have given to secure conditional exemption are liable to an inheritance tax charge on the current value of the land. To date there has been no need to raise any such charge. Any questions which have arisen have been resolved in discussion.

Council Tax

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the initial cost of the valuation of properties for council tax.

Mr. Nelson: The cost of the initial valuation banding of domestic properties for council tax was £36,067,401.

Paris Club

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his current policies within the Paris Club; which countries are in consultation with the club; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom's policy is to work with other creditors in the Paris Club to negotiate sustainable reschedulings of bilateral claims that will maximise recoveries. For severely indebted, low-income countries, the United Kingdom's view is that more concessional relief is required, along the lines proposed by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in Trinidad in 1990, and the Government are working to achieve a consensus for this.

At its latest meeting, which ended on 4 March, the Paris Club agreed concessional reschedulings for Senegal and Niger. The world bank's publication "World Debt Tables 1993-94", a copy of which is in the Library, contains details of earlier multilateral debt relief agreements.

Banknotes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of banknotes will be printed by the Bank of England for each financial year from 1994-95 to 1996-97.

Mr. Nelson: The Bank of England expects to print approximately 1,400 million notes of all denominations in each of the next three years. This is the same as it will print in 1993-94.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the breakdown of the PSBR in this fiscal year between central and local government.

Mr. Nelson: A detailed breakdown of the forecast for the PSBR for 1993-94 was given in table 6.11 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report published last November. The table gives a summary of this information.

	£ billion
Central Government borrowing requirement on its own account	50·2
Local authority borrowing requirement	–0·8
Public corporations borrowing requirement	0·4
PSBR	49·8

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made regarding the revenue derived from air passenger duty per annum in respect of (a) scheduled passenger flights and (b) charter flights to and from (i) Leeds-Bradford airport and (ii) Humberside airport.

Sir John Cope: CAA statistics for 1992 show terminal passenger traffic by individual airports. Assuming that all flights are return flights and that the proportion of EC to non-EC flights is the same as nationally, it is estimated that the air passenger duty revenue per annum for flights departing from these airports will be of the order of magnitude shown below.

	(£ million)
	Scheduled	Charter
Humberside	0·2	0·2
Leeds/Bradford	0·9	0·8

Building Societies (Pre-tax Profits)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table giving the pre-tax profits for each financial year from 1978-79 for the following building societies (a) Halifax, (b) Nationwide, (c) Woolwich and (d) Abbey National now plc.

Mr. Nelson: These figures are not collated by the Treasury, but they are in the public domain. I suggest that the hon. Member approaches the institutions directly.

Betting Duty

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the loss of betting duty caused by the cancellation of horse race meetings due to bad whether during the last year.

Sir John Cope: Receipts from general betting duty in the latest three months, November 1993 to January 1994, were 2·6 per cent. lower than in the same period a year earlier. This compares to an increase of 6 per cent. for receipts in the months May 1993 to January 1994. It is not possible to attribute the fall in receipts specifically to bad weather, but this is likely to have been a factor.

VAT Penalty Regime

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received since the November Budget on the VAT penalty regime; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: There was extensive and very helpful consultation about the VAT penalty regime before the Budget. There have been very few further representations since.

Sports Clubs (VAT)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total amount of value added tax wrongly imposed on sports clubs in respect of subscriptions and the hire of grounds and equipment for each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise estimates, based on information from the Department of National Heritage, are that repayments will amount to some £10 million for each calendar year since 1990.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury currently makes no use of freephone or freepost facilities and there is no record of it having done so since 1979.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 96, if he will provide whatever information is available of those occasions on which he, or other Ministers in his Department, have signed public interest immunity certificates, and for what reasons.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not signed any public interest immunity certificates as Chancellor of the Exchequer and no other serving Treasury Minister has ever signed such a certificate.

So far as I am aware, the only public interest immunity certificate signed by a Treasury Minister since 1979 was signed in January 1988 by my right hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Mr. Lilley) in his then capacity as the Economic Secretary to the Treasury. That certificate was issued in connection with civil proceedings in which the Bank of England was concerned, and related to Treasury and bank documents. Public interest immunity was claimed on the grounds that it was necessary that the documents in question be withheld from production, in the case of some, for the proper functioning of the public service, and in the case of others, for the proper exercise by the bank of its functions and responsibilities as a central bank and banking supervisor. The claim was considered by the court and upheld.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Departments spend on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 7 March 1994]: The information requested is set out for each of the Chancellor's Departments. The expenditure shown relates to the current financial year, unless otherwise stated.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where a 17-year-old alleged offender who is deemed to be category A would normally be held in the prison system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Jean Corston, dated 9 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about where a 17 year old alleged offender who is deemed to be category A would normally be held in the prison system.

For any alleged offender who, because of the nature and circumstances of their alleged offences, is placed in category A, security must be the first priority.

Unconvicted persons in prison custody who are placed in category A can only be held in Prison Service establishments with an appropriate level of security. In the case of a 17 year old alleged (ie unconvicted) offender the only YOI with a level of security appropriate to hold a category A is Moorland. Unless the courts to which a 17 year old would have to be taken for remand and trial appearances are within reasonable travelling distance of Moorland, such an individual would have to be held in a category A holding local prison.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the detailed rules of the revised criminal injuries compensation scheme, the tariff scheme.

Mr. Howard: The detailed rules of the tariff scheme, which comes into force on 1 April 1994, are being published today.

A copy of the text of the rules and the accompanying guide, which explains to claimants how the new scheme works and the criteria adopted for deciding applications, have been placed in the Vote Office and the Library. Copies of both documents may be obtained from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority, Tay house, 300 Bath street, Glasgow G2 4JR.

Bail Hostels

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 253, relating to the expected savings in 1994-95 in respect of bail hostels, what directions have been given to the West Midlands probation service as to the savings to be made in 1994-95.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office has not given directions to the West Midlands probation committee on this matter. The committee has been asked to identify two approved hostels for closure so that the necessary savings in public expenditure may be made.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he had received about his decision to close 11 bail hostels.

Mr. Maclean: Representations have been received from a number of hon. Members, probation services, and others involved in the criminal justice system from the areas affected.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements will be made for offenders in the west midlands when there is no vacancy in a bail or probation hostel in the west midlands.

Mr. Maclean: There are over 100 approved hostels in England and Wales, a number of which are located in probation areas neighbouring the west midlands. All are available to the west midlands courts and it is the responsibility of the probation service to bring them to those courts' attention.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of those remanded on bail are remanded to bail hostels.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not held centrally and is not available.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the total reduction in funding for bail hostels is being met from the west midlands.

Mr. Maclean: Some 16 per cent.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details of the rates charged by local authorities to other local authorities for accommodating those remanded on bail when there is no vacancy available in their own hostels.

Mr. Maclean: Local authorities are required to pay a standard flat rate charge for hostel residents for whom they have responsibility, irrespective of where that hostel is located. For 1993-94 the weekly charge is £65·03.

Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were sentenced to a prison term under each offence category in the latest year for which figures are available; and what numbers and percentage of the total were fine defaulters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 9 March 1994:

Arrests and Prosecutions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the number of (a) arrests and (b) prosecutions, (i) per officer and (ii) per 100,000 population by year for the last four years in the police authority areas covering (1) Humberside, (2) north Yorkshire, (3) south Yorkshire and (4) west Yorkshire.

Mr. Maclean: The readily available information is given in the table.

Police Capital Programmes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the capital programmes by year for the last four years for the police authority areas covering (a) Humberside, (b) north Yorkshire, (c) south Yorkshire and (d) west Yorkshire.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Total capital allocations for the forces concerned were:

Bail (Reoffenders)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were charged with criminal offences committed while already on bail in Plymouth in 1993.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available centrally.

Fraudulent Trading

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful fraudulent trading convictions were obtained in each of the last five years, excluding those obtained by the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Maclean: Court proceedings information held centrally on fraud cases cannot separately identify whether an offence was one of fraudulent trading.

West Midlands Probation Service

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations underlay the reduction of the funding to the West Midlands probation service; what estimate he has made of this on the Shard End drive training project in Birmingham; and what facilities for projects alternative to the Shard End drive project exist in the west midlands.

Mr. Maclean: There has been no such reduction in funding. The West Midlands probation service's revenue grant for 1994-95 is 5·4 per cent. higher than in 1993-94 and the funds allocated to it from the probation supervision grants scheme are 46 per cent. higher. The Shard End drive project has previously been funded under the scheme. It is for the West Midlands probation service to decide, in preparing its plans for partnerships with the independent sector, which individual projects to continue to support.

The service has decided to invite applications from any interested organisation in the area to run drive training activities in future. The response will show the service what alternative facilities are or might be available.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 704, if he will provide occupancy figures for each probation and bail hostel in the west midlands for each of the last four quarters for which figures are available after discounting those beds in hostels which are not available due to refurbishment under the non-availability was approved by his Department.

Mr. Maclean: The West Midlands probation service has provided the following occupancy figures, which exclude places taken out of use for refurbishment. In most cases the Home Office approval for temporary withdrawal of places was not sought or required.

Fines (Non-payment)

Ms Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of remanded or sentenced women received into custody in (a) Great Britain and (b) the west midlands for each quarter for the last five years for non-payment of fines imposed for not possessing a television licence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Lynne Jones, dated 9 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking if he will list the number of remanded or sentenced women received into custody in (a) Great Britain and (b) the West Midlands for each quarter for the last five years for non-payment of fines imposed for not possessing a television licence.

The available information is for England and Wales, 1991-93 and is given in the attached table. No females were held on remand for this offence during the period 1991 to 1993. No information is available for the period before 1991 as the offence of non-payment of fines for not possessing a television licence was not separately identified in the prison statistics.

Immigration

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people he estimates are in the United Kingdom illegally and how many have been here for more than five years; how many adults have children; and how many are self-sufficient in terms of housing and income.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Comprehensive information on the number of persons who have entered illegally or are in the United Kingdom in breach of the conditions imposed on their leave to enter or remain here is not available.

Moorlands Prison (Escape)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement in respect of the escape from Moorlands prison by remand prisoner, Craig Weekly; and if he has been recaptured;

(2) to which prison Craig Weekly, remand prisoner, escaped from Moorlands prison, will be sent when recaptured.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 9 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the escape of Craig Weekly from Moorland prison, whether he has been recaptured and the prison to which he will be sent when recaptured.

Craig Weekly escaped from Moorland prison on the afternoon of Saturday 5 February 1994. Mr. Weekly has been recaptured and is being held in Perth prison in Scotland pending the results of police investigations into whether there will be any criminal charges arising from his actions whilst unlawfully at large. Once any such charges have been dealt with he will be returned to Moorland prison to face a discipline adjudication resulting from his escape and to await any further court appearances.

Deportation

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what were the numbers and costs of deportations in each of the past three years and the numbers and costs of the enforced deportations in those years when those deported had not been convicted of a criminal offence;

(2) how many of those deported in 1991, 1992 and in 1993 were in family units of more than one person.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the numbers of people removed from the United Kingdom under the deportation process is given in the table. The other information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

People removed from the United Kingdom under the deportation process

	1991	1992	1993
Total people removed under deportation process[1]	2,616	2,583	[3]2,254
of which, a deportation order was enforced[2], excluding deportation action following a court recommendation	256	399	[3]449

[1] Including persons who departed voluntarily, but excluding illegal entrants removed. In total, some 6,100 people were removed as illegal entrants or under the deportation process in 1993.
[2] That is excluding voluntary and supervised departures.
[3] Provisional figure.

Prison Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the expenditure by each local education authority in respect of classes in prisons, detention centres or community homes with education for each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Payments made to local education authorities for the provision of education in prisons and young offender institutions in England and Wales since 1 April 1989 are as follows:

1989-90	20·2
1990-91	24·1
1991-92	26·0
1992-93	28·2
1993-94	[1]8·6

The payments in 1993-94 reflect the changeover this year to direct provision through further education colleges and other providers, rather than through local education authorities, consequent upon the provisions of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992.

Expenditure on education classes in community homes falls within the departmental responsibilities of the Department of the Environment. Details of such expenditure, and of payments made to individual local education authorities, are not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of quail used in scientific procedures under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 during 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not available. Changes which are being introduced to the system for the collection of the annual statistics of scientific procedures will make it possible from 1995 onwards to distinguish between different types of birds used in experiments.

Absences from Prison

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances those convicted of rape and other serious crimes are permitted to enjoy periods of absence from prison for social reasons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Patrick Nicholls, dated 9 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the circumstances in which those convicted of rape and other serious crimes are permitted to enjoy periods of absence from prison.

Under Prison Rule 6, prison governors have powers to allow temporary release to sentenced prisoners. Temporary release may be granted to a prisoner under Prison Rule 6(2) "for any special purpose or to enable him to engage in employment, to receive instruction or training or to assist him in the transition from prison life to freedom". Temporary release is not, however, available to unconvicted and convicted unsentenced prisoners; sentenced prisoners who are remanded on further charges; persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971; prisoners who are subject to extradition proceedings; prisoners who are considered to be mentally ill or suffering from mental disorder or have been committed to prison as a place of safety; and prisoners who are in Category A or on the escape list.

Before temporary release may be granted, governors must be satisfied that a prisoner can be trusted both to abstain from crime during a period of temporary release and to return to prison afterwards. In addition, governors are required to consult headquarters before temporary release may be granted to certain categories of prisoners. These include prisoners serving 10 years or more and not within 12 months of release and prisoners convicted at any time of a serious sexual offence.

A review of the present arrangements has recently been undertaken. The conclusions and recommendations are now being considered.

Crime (Street Lighting)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued as to the appropriate level of street lighting for inner-city areas for the purposes of combatting crime.

Mr. Key: Guidance has been published by the British Standards Institution, in BS5489 part 3: 1994: "Code of practice for lighting for subsidiary roads and associated pedestrian areas". A copy is in the Library. This standard classifies the lighting requirements for three categories of crime risk. The responsibility for lighting is with the appropriate local authority.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value in sterling of overseas aid forecast to be made in the current financial year for (a) famine relief, (b) other aid to improve immediate human conditions, (c) technical aid and assistance, (d) infrastructural projects, (e) debt relief, or assistance with prior contractual commitments and (f) consultancy; and if he will list figures within these categories by countries or regions of the world.

Mr. Goodlad: It is estimated that in financial year 1993-94 bilateral expenditure on overseas aid will be as follows:

	Africa £ million	Asia, Latin America and the oceans £ million	Other £ million
Food aid	19	—	—
Emergency and refugee relief	44	35	48
Debt relief	15	28	—
Country programmes, including aid and trade provisions	306	378	—

Provision for technical co-operation, infrastructure projects and consultancy is included in the country programmes.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value in pound sterling of overseas aid forecast to be made in the calendar year 1993 by the European Commission for (a) famine relief, (b) other aid to improve immediate human conditions, (c) technical and financial assistance, (d) infrastructural projects, (e) debt relief or assistance with prior contractual commitments and (f) consultancy; and if he will list figures within these categories by countries or regions of the world.

Mr. Goodlad: The European Community budget for 1993 includes provision for payments of up to the sums shown in the following table, at current exchange rates:

	Total £ million	UK Share £ million
Food Aid	444	73
Humanitarian Aid	118	19
Aid to Asia and Latin America	276	46
Aid to Mediterranean Countries	265	44
Other Aid Programmes (inc non-Governmental Organisations)	292	48
Aid to Eastern Europe/former Soviet Union	539	89
Emergency Aid Reserve	163	27
Aid for Scientific/Technological Research for Developing Countries	23	4

In addition, in 1993 the European Commission made calls on member states for contributions totalling £1,253 million—United Kingdom share around £208 million—in respect of the European development fund which cover aid to Africa, Caribbean and Pacific countries. The EDFs are not financed from the EC budget.

Figures are not available showing EC aid spending by the categories listed in the question.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what records the Government have of payments of aid made by United Kingdom-based charitable organisations to third world countries and the sources of funds for these aid payments;

(2) what is the value in pound sterling of overseas aid forecast to be made either in the current financial year or in the calendar year 1993 by United Kingdom-domiciled charitable organisations for (a) famine relief, (b) other aid to improve immediate human conditions, (c) technical aid and assistance, (d) infrastructural projects, (e) debt relief or assistance with prior contractual commitments and (f) consultancy; and if he will list figures within these categories by countries or regions of the world.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government do not keep records of the overall expenditure by United Kingdom-based charitable organisations on overseas aid. Our records reflect only the grants which the Overseas Development Administration has made available to these organisations.

In 1992-93, the latest year for which figures are available, the Government provided over £147 million to non-governmental organisations of which £79 million was for development work and £68 million for humanitarian relief. A further breakdown of this expenditure into the categories requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Charitable organisations receive funds from a variety of sources including Government donors, the private sector and the general public.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Malone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps he has taken or proposes to take to ensure payment of Zimbabwe public service pensions to those eligible in this country;

(2) if he will make representations to the Government of Zimbabwe regarding the payment of Zimbabwe public service pensions to those eligible in this country.

Mr. Goodlad: I am not aware of any current problems with payment. However, our high commission in Harare follows up any examples that come to light.

Consultants (Contracts)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, by value for contracts with a value of over £100,000, contracts made by the Overseas Development Administration with firms of consultants over the last year, giving (a) the value of the contract, (b) the nature of the consultancy and (c) the domicile of the contractor.

Mr. Goodlad: All consultancies let by the Overseas Development Administration in this financial year with a value of over £100,000 have been made with contractors with a business domicile in the United Kingdom. A list of such contracts has been placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION

Sex Education

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) when he expects to publish final guidance relating to the proposed circular on sex education in schools;

(2) what guidance will be given in the new sex education circular to ensure that homosexuality as the norm is not promoted in schools;

(3) what guidance will be given in the new circular on sex education to protect the young from homosexual proselytism;

(4) what guidance will be given in the new sex education circular to ensure that schools teach their pupils the basic facts of the law as it relates to sexual activity.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend hopes to issue the final version of the circular on sex education in schools in April. He is carefully considering the views expressed in the consultations on the draft circular, including those on the matters mentioned by my hon. Friend. The draft circular suggested that schools should be aware of the requirements of the law, and that pupils should be taught about the values and knowledge needed to enable them to behave responsibly and morally.

Nursery Education

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the value of and the contribution his Department makes to promote (a) nursery education and (b) pre-school play groups.

Mr. Robin Squire: Good nursery education and playgroup provision both contribute to the Government's policy of promoting choice, diversity, quality and cost-effectiveness of pre-school provision in the public and private sectors. One half of three and four-year-olds attend maintained nursery and primary schools, and two fifths attend playgroups. In addition to the funding by local education authorities of pre-school provision, my Department makes grants to a number of national bodies concerned with developing such provision, including the Pre-School Playgroups Association, the British Association for Early Childhood Education, and the National Children's Bureau.

Schools, Gloucestershire

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those schools in Gloucestershire whose status has changed from a grammar school to a comprehensive school in the last 20 years, together with the date of the change.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not available in the form requested. The Department's records indicate that in 1975 there were 11 grammar schools in Gloucestershire; now there are seven.

Performance League Tables

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on what form performance league tables will take this year and the probable date of publication.

Mr. Robin Squire: On 21 February my right hon. Friend launched the consultation on the content, format and distribution of the 1994 school and college performance tables. He proposed that two sets of tables should again be published, covering secondary schools and institutions catering for students in the 16 to 18 age group. The secondary tables would include data on authorised absence, together with data on unauthorised absence published for the first time in 1993, and information on the length of the taught week. The tables would also contain extra information on vocational qualifications. As in previous years, they would be published in November.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Forth: Freephone and freepost facilities are currently being operated by the Department for the following activities:

A self-governing—GM—schools information line which offers an information pack about GM schools. Estimated cost £20,830;

Requests for copies of the further and higher education charters. Estimated cost £38,123; and Requests for copies of the leaflet "National School Tests in 1994". Costs are unavailable as the campaign has not yet finished.

In 1993, a freephone was available to answer inquiries about GM schools and freephone and freepost were available to request copies of the leaflet on national curriculum testing "How is Your Child Doing at Schoool?" Costs amount to some £29,963.

In earlier years the Department has not directly arranged freephone and freepost facilities. The Central Office of Information has managed campaigns which have included freepost and freepost facilities on behalf of the Department. Figures for these costs are not available from the COI as they would incur disproportionate costs.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the salary of the chairman of the Grant Maintained Schools Mutual.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for the Grant Maintained Schools Mutual.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is the total cost of insurance for grant-maintained schools;

(2) how many grant-maintained schools are insured by (a) Sun Alliance and (b) Legal and General.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice is given to grant-maintained schools on insurance by the Grant Maintained Schools Mutual and the Funding Agency for Schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The advice given to grant maintained schools on insurance by Grant Maintained Schools Mutual is a matter for the mutual. No advice has been given by the Funding Agency for Schools as it does not become operational until 1 April 1994.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total budget for each grant-maintained junior, infant and secondary school for Sunderland City education authority and Wandsworth education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total budgets for the 1993-94 financial year are as follows:

Wandsworth education authority

Primary schools
Ethelburga Primary School	439,828
Hillbrook Primary School	925,909
Secondary schools
Burntwood School	4,487,358
Elliott School	3,870,951
Graveney School	5,244,434
John Paul II Roman Catholic School	1,633,050
Salesian College	1,653,473
Southfields School	3,645,574

The amounts shown for total budget include annual maintenance grant, special purpose grants for restructuring, development, premises, VAT, transitional grant, section 11 grant and capital grants payable to the schools in 1993-94.

There are currently no grant-maintained schools in the Sunderland metropolitan borough education authority area.

Pupil Costs

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the unit cost per pupil in each local education authority for 1992-93 for (a) nursery-primary and (b) secondary pupils.

Mr. Robin Squire: The provisional figures for recurrent spending per pupil in local education authority maintained schools in 1992-93, for those LEAs who have submitted returns of their expenditure, are as shown in the following table.

Notes:

1. Figures are derived from local education authorities' returns of their net institutional expenditure to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education. The expenditure figures are provisional and are subject to final checking by the Department of Environment and the Department for Education.

2. Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure. The figure also includes unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of schools schemes.

EMPLOYMENT

Statistical Accuracy

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes he plans to improve the accuracy of employment statistics.

Miss Widdecombe: We are satisfied with the accuracy of the unemployment claimant count. Nevertheless, we have introduced a number of major improvements over the last two years, including bringing out the labour force survey quarterly as opposed to annually, and the first full census of employers for 12 years. Work is in hand to deliver more timely employment statistics on completion of the interdepartmental business register in 1995. The Department will continue to assess the need for further improvements.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the use and costs of these services is not held centrally for the Department as a whole.

British Aerospace Redundancies

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for retraining staff recently declared redundant at British Aerospace, Lostock, Bolton, in skills suitable for employment in other manufacturing industry.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand that both the local training and enterprise council and the Employment Service continue to be closely in touch with British Aerospace about the services they can offer. This includes a range of Government-funded programmes to help redundant people find jobs, retrain or set up their own businesses.

Financial Sector Employees

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 201, what account was taken in the figures published in his answer of persons employed in Greater London but not resident in Greater London.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures were from the labour force survey, which is a survey conducted by interviewing people at their home address. They showed the numbers of people employed in banking, finance, insurance and business services who were resident in Greater London. People employed in banking, finance, insurance and business services who are resident outside Greater London are included in LFS analyses according to their area of residence.

Workstart

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those who participated in the workstart pilots have gone on to find jobs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 March 1994]: The pilots began last July, and we are currently evaluating them. However, since they provide subsidies to employers who recruit eligible long-term unemployed people for 12 months, their effectiveness in helping those people to remain in regular employment without the support of the scheme will not be clear for some time.

Channel Tunnel (Accidents)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department was first notified of an incident which occurred in the channel tunnel in January in which two channel tunnel workers were taken to hospital for treatment after a bolt of electricity arced across from the main cable; what is the standard procedure for notifying his Department of accidents in the channel tunnel; if he will publish a table giving a full list of accidents in or around the channel tunnel notified to his Department, including dates, nature and injuries sustained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1994]: I regret that the answer given in my reply of 18 February 1994, Official Report, column 1024, was incomplete and that the final paragraph was omitted. The correct information is as follows:

The Health and Safety Executive was notified of this incident on 18 January. It notified the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority on 19 January.

The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases, and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 apply to the United Kingdom side of the channel tunnel, and reportable accidents and dangerous occurrences must be notified to the HSE. The HSE informs the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority immediately of any fatal accidents or incidents with potential for major consequences. The HSE also reports regularly to the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority other accident information to assist accident prevention on the French side of the project.

The detailed accident information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, between March 1987 and September 1993, the latest date for which information is available, a provisional total of 1,386 accidents which occurred during work on the United Kingdom side of the channel tunnel were reported to the HSE.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

North Korea (Magnox)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have been requested by the International Atomic Energy Agency to provide details of the Magnox nuclear plant design from which the North Koreans developed its nuclear reactor design for the plant currently part of the nuclear inspection effort of the special IAEA safeguards inspection team presently in North Korea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information has been provided to the International Atomic Energy Agency on Magnox reactor design to allow it to validate a computer programme used for reactor physics calculations. Such calculations can be applied in the safeguarding of any graphite moderated reactor.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Oliver Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to challenge the European Commision's decision to reduce penalties on Italy, Spain and Greece for exceeding the milk quotas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have lodged challenges in the European Court of Justice against the Commission's decisions to reduce the penalties on Italy, Greece and Spain for exceeding their milk quotas in the late 1980s. The challenges affect the 1989 penalties on Italy and the 1990 penalties on all thre countries. We believe the Commission exceeded its powers by reducing penalties for these years and by announcing its intention to reduce them in the accounts for 1991-1993. The rules on milk quotas are rigorously implemented in the United Kingdom and we expect the Commission to ensure that they are properly enforced elsewhere in the European Community. Taxpayers in the Community should not have to shoulder the loss to the Community budget of some £2 billion which the Commission's actions could entail.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to a United Nations embargo on oil imports into Sudan; and what are the objections to such a move.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A global embargo on oil imports would require the passage of a United Nations Security Council resolution. We have not ruled out recourse to the UN Security Council but would not want to pursue this option unless we were sure that this was the right tactic.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will take action at the United Nations to insist that previously inaccessible areas of Sudan such as the Nuba mountains are opened up to human rights organisations and international aid organisations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We whole-heartedly supported the recent resolution of the United Nations General Assembly, which called upon all parties to the civil war to permit international agencies, including human rights organisations, and humanitarian organisations access to the civilian population throughout Sudan. We are pressing this point again at the present meeting of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries on the United Nations Security Council are resistant to any further moves being taken to increase pressure on Sudan to improve its record on human rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: China voted against the 1993 United Nations General Assembly resolution on the human rights situation in Sudan and was the only United Nations Security Council member to do so.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to approach the participants in the Sudanese civil war to see if they would agree to the establishment of safe havens in southern Sudan and in the Nuba mountains; and what was their response.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development leaders have yet to succeed in bringing all parties to the civil war to the negotiating table, and have therefore not had the opportunity formally to suggest confidence building measures of the sort suggested by the hon. Gentleman.

Armenia

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had about his country's application for membership of the Council of Europe with the President of Armenia during his recent visit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Armenia has not applied for Council of Europe membership and the issue was not raised during President Ter-Petrossian's recent visit.

Russian Army

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the strength of the Russian Army in Kaliningrad; what assessment he has made as to whether it conforms to the CFE treaty and other commitments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Russian ground forces in the Kaliningrad oblast number about 41,500 of which some 38,000 are Russian army personnel. The equipment and manpower ceilings imposed respectively by the conventional armed forces in Europe treaty and the concluding act of the negotiation on personnel strength of conventional armed forces in Europe do not come into effect until November 1995.

United Nations Human Rights Commissioner

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role and responsibilities of the new United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The creation in December 1993 of the post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, with a wide-ranging mandate, marked a significant step forward in the promotion and protection of human rights worldwide. The post will complement and reinforce existing human rights machinery.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freephone facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not entered into any agreement to subscribe to freephone or freepost number facilities. Staff can use the national freepost number, 0800, but are automatically barred by our telephone exchanges from using the premium rate numbers 0898 and 0891. Consequently there are no costs involved.

Azerbaijan

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had about his country's application for membership of the Council of Europe with the President of Azerbaijan during his recent visit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Azerbaijan has not applied for Council of Europe membership and the issue was not raised during President Aliev's recent visit.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will lift the embargo on trade with Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sanctions will not be lifted until Iraq complies with all relevant Security Council resolutions.

Israeli Settlers

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press the Israeli Government to disarm Israeli settlers, to commit itself to no further settlements in Palestinian-occupied territory and to see that existing settlements are effectively policed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is very important that the Government of Israel disarm extremist settlers. We welcome the actions announced so far by the Israeli Prime Minister including consideration of outlawing two extremist settler organisations. Our view remains that settlements are illegal and an obstacle to peace.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 21 and 22 February.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council on 21 and 22 February.

The Council discussed preparations for the Marrakesh ministerial meeting in April at which the final act of the Uruguay round will be signed. There was agreement that the final act should be signed by both the Commission and the member states and that member states should participate in the world trade organisation. It was also agreed that the European Parliament should be consulted under the assent procedure on the Community's acceptance of the world trade organisation agreement.

The Commission's proposal for a reciprocal agreement between the United States and the European Community on the mutual recognition of spirit designations was agreed by a qualified majority, with Greece and Italy voting against. The agreement will protect the designation of six EC spirits in the United States, including Scotch whisky, and two United States spirits in the EC.

Ministers discussed the safeguard procedures in the EEA internal regulation. No decision was reached. Ministers also discussed the recent Swiss vote to ban all HGV transit traffic within 10 years. The Commission was asked to prepare a report on how this vote would effect the proposed negotiations on EC-Swiss transport agreements.

The Council agreed an European Union position on structural funds for the accession negotiations with the four applicants. The Council was followed by ministerial negotiating sessions with the applicants. A package of secondary issues was agreed with the Finns. The applicants outlined their concerns on the agriculture and regional policy dossiers. Further discussion of these was left for the 25 to 28 February special ministerial meeting on enlargement.

Ministers discussed arrangements for financing costs arising under the intergovernmental pillars of the treaty on European Union and agreed to return to the issue at a future meeting.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Privatisation

6. Mr. Wray: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the privatisation of the coal industry.

Mr. Eggar: Both the President and I meet the chairman regularly to discuss the privatisation of the coal industry and other matters.

Electricity Industry

21. Mr. Maxton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he is meeting the Director General of Electricity Supply to discuss the agreement between OFFER and the two generators, National Power and PowerGen, on electricity prices and the sale of plant.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I meet the Director-General of Electricity Supply from time to time to discuss various issues.

Industrial Growth

22. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what forecasts he has made for industrial growth in the United Kingdom and other EU countries.

Mr. Heseltine: United Kingdom and Ireland are estimated to be the only EC economies where industrial production rose last year. Both the OECD and the European Commission are forecasting that the United Kingdom will be the fastest-growing major economy in 1994 and 1995.

Nuclear Industry

23. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the implications of the recent announcement of the part-privatisation of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for the nuclear industry's future.

Mr. Eggar: The AEA provides services to the nuclear industry and to a wide range of non-nuclear customers. I believe that privatisation will lead to a greater cost-effectiveness and better value for money for all the AEA's customers.

Land Mines

24. Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a further statement on his Department's policy on the export of land mines.

Mr. Needham: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton on 12 January, Official Report, column 168.

Business Confidence

25. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next proposes to meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss business confidence.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department has frequent contact with the CBI and its members to discuss a variety of matters of mutual interest. I regularly receive the results of the CBI quarterly survey, the most recent of which showed the fifth consecutive rise in business confidence.

Manufacturing Industry

26. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of United Kingdom manufacturing industry is now owned by foreign companies.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry on 23 February 1994, Official Report, column 230.

35. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his strategy to promote the growth of United Kingdom manufacturing industry including research and development.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department's refocused innovation policy seeks to promote manufacturing industry by putting more resources into helping companies—especially smaller companies—gain access to and exploit technology, whether from the United Kingdom or overseas.

Environmental Technology Exports

27. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the value of British exports in environmental technology, at the latest date for which figures are available; and what share this represents of world trade.

Mr. Needham: Exports of pollution control and monitoring equipment totalled some £480 million in 1992. Figures for world trade are not available on the same basis, but in 1991 exports from the United Kingdom are estimated to have accounted for approximately 10 per cent. of exports of this type of equipment from OECD countries.

Small Firms

28. Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to amend company law to safeguard small companies threatened as a result of the insolvency of larger companies who are their customers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such plans.

Pit Closures

29. Mr. Skinner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss pit closures.

Mr. Eggar: Both my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss a variety of coal industry matters.

Shipbuilding Industry

30. Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future prospects for the British shipbuilding industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is generally expected that there will be an upturn in demand for merchant ships in the second half of the decade, which will provide more opportunities for the shipbuilding industry.

Motor Car Production

31. Mr. Dykes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current levels of motor car production in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France and (c) Germany.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1993 the United Kingdom produced 1·376 million cars, France 2·836 million and the provisional figure for Germany is 3·753 million.

Companies (Political Donations)

32. Mr. Turner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek to amend the Companies Act 1985 to provide for more publicity to be given to political donations made by companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. The present law requires sufficient disclosure. The Companies Act 1985 requires companies to disclose, in their directors' reports, political donations exceeding £200.

Mobile Phones

33. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department is taking to lessen the possibility of theft and fraudulent use of mobile phones.

Mr. McLoughlin: The scale of mobile phone thefts, and their subsequent fraudulent use, is of considerable concern to the Government, the companies involved and the victims of these crimes. I met my hon. Friend and a delegation from the Federation of Communication Services recently to discuss what further steps could be taken to tackle this problem. I welcome the initiatives which the industry is already taking, including wider use of equipment marking schemes and improved control of electronic serial numbers. My Department, with the Home Office and Oftel, are discussing with the industry how these initiatives should be pursued further. The Government are considering the proposals from my hon. Friend and the FCS for introducing a new criminal offence of reprogramming a mobile phone. In doing so, we shall have particular regard to whether mobile phone users can be adequately protected if such an offence is created, and whether any new offence would in practice be at all effective in reducing the problem of mobile phone thefts.

Iron And Steel Scrap

34. Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next plans to meet representatives of the British Foundry Association to discuss iron and steel scrap prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I shall be meeting a delegation of hon. Members and representatives of the steel and foundry industries on 14 March.

Wide-bodied Large Aircraft

36. Mr. Eastham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department will give to the British aerospace industry towards developing the next generation of wide-bodied large aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: Any application for assistance towards developing new wide-bodied aircraft will be considered on merit and in the light of competing calls on public funds.

Environmental Protection Act 1990

37. Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to review the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Under the Government's deregulation initiative, Departments are reviewing all 3,500 regulations for which they are responsible which impose burdens upon business.

The document "Deregulation: Cutting Red Tape" published on 19 January sets out at pages 36 to 44 the deregulatory action my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has already taken and is considering taking to revise the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Energy Exports

38. Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to assist United Kingdom energy companies to win export orders.

Mr. Needham: The DTI and FCO's overseas trade services provide a broad package of support and market advice which is available to companies in the energy sector, as indeed it is to those in all sectors.

Special initiatives are also undertaken, such as outward missions to markets of particular interest to energy companies. Recent missions arranged by the projects export promotion division of the DTI visited China, Vietnam and India. In addition, the Minister for Energy, has visited south-east Asia, Kazakhstan and Algeria to promote the United Kingdom's wide-ranging expertise in the energy sector.

PEP also provides the secretariat for the power sector working group of the Overseas Projects Board; which is a working group of senior personnel from industries involved in power generation, including generators, manufacturers and distributors. Its aim is to support initiatives to improve the United Kingdom's performance in winning overseas power project contracts.

The DTI's oil and gas projects and supplies office, which provides support for United Kingdom industry's effort to win orders in international oil and gas markets in the upstream, downstream and petrochemical sectors, has increased the resources which it devotes to export promotion. OSO's support for United Kingdom involvement in overseas markets is being given the highest priority.

Motor Industry (Japanese Investment)

Mr. Michael: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to encourage an increase in the level of Japanese investment in the motor industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government welcome inward investment. Japanese automotive companies have brought jobs and helped transform United Kingdom technical and management practices. We believe that the Government's commitment to their success will lead them to make further investments in the United Kingdom.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his proposals for monitoring insolvency practitioners in the future; and how unfit practitioners will be struck off.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Following discussions between my Department's Insolvency Service and the professional bodies recognised to authorise insolvency practitioners, the professional bodies have begun putting in place programmes for the routine monitoring of their practitioners. This work was previously carried out by the Insolvency Service, which will continue to monitor the activities of practitioners authorised by the Secretary of State.

In addition to the routine monitoring programmes, the professional bodies will continue, as previously, to respond to complaints about practitioners and carry out inspections of practices where necessary. The Insolvency Service will assist the bodies in the early stages of their monitoring programmes and is taking a close interest in the development of standards and consistency of approach in this area.

Each of the professional bodies has disciplinary procedures in place to deal with complaints about practitioners and there is a range of sanctions available to the bodies including withdrawal of authorisation where it appears to the body that the practitioner is no longer fit and proper. Similarly, the Secretary of State has the power to withdraw the authorisation of a practitioner authorised by him subject to the practitioner's right to have the matter referred to the insolvency practitioners tribunal.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the 24,000 kg of plutonium in nuclear fuel rods awaiting reprocessing at Sellafield, listed on page four of his departmental press release P/94/121 of 1 March, comprising the seventh annual publication of plutonium figures, is (a) owned by foreign customers and (b) destined for reprocessing through the thermal oxide reprocessing plant; and if he will make a statement on the safeguards applied to this plutonium.

Mr. Eggar: All the material in question is subject to the terms of the United Kingdom—International Atomic Energy Agency—Euratom Safeguards agreement. The majority of it is owned by overseas customers and destined for reprocessing in THORP.

Japanese Inward Investment

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the levels of Japanese inward investment for 1995, 1996 and 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Future levels of inward investment are difficult to assess, however it is widely accepted that the current level of interest from Japanese investors is unlikely to increase until the economic situation in Japan improves.

The warm welcome which this Government and country have for long given to investment from Japan remains as positive as ever. It is therefore encouraging to note that, even though the level of investment from Japan has decreased in recent years, the United Kingdom has maintained its position as the preferred location for Japanese companies with over 41 per cent.—by value to March 1993[1]—of the total Japanese investment in the EC. Future investment from Japan is likely to come from small and medium sized companies, expansions by existing investors and research and development investment, including local research and development departments being set up by manufacturers already in Europe.

Charter Market Franchises

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many charter market franchises will fall to be abolished under the terms of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill; and what estimate he makes of their compensatory value.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None. The Government have no intention of abolishing the right of local authorities to hold markets and collect rents as they have done in the past. Clauses 21 to 23 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill would remove rights of local authorities with market franchises to object to proposals to set up competing markets within six and two third miles of their own.

British Coal

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's estimate of the cost of inheriting the historical liabilities of British Coal when the coal industry is privatised.

Mr. Eggar: Estimates of the cost of these liabilities are provided in the explanatory and financial memorandum of the Coal Industry Bill.

Child Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1994]: My Department aims to promote a culture where managers are understanding of the need for staff to balance work and child care responsibilities and is committed to exploring child care schemes which give value for money.

For the financial year 1993-94 the DTI, excluding its executive agencies has an allocated budget of £18,000 for the provision of school holiday playscheme places. Up to a maximum of 32 places are available on any one day that the playscheme is in operation.

United Kingdom Investment

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of United Kingdom investment in (a) the United States of America, (b) the other EC countries and (c) the rest of the world in each year since 1979; and what estimate he has made of the likely income in each case to the United Kingdom in the current year.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

A geographical breakdown of overseas direct investment by the United Kingdom is provided in the annual business monitor MA4 "Overseas Transactions". Figures for total overseas investment, including portfolio investment, bank and other lending are given in the annual "Balance of Payments Pink Book" which also includes some detailed figures for investment in other EC member states. Both of these publications, by the Central Statistical Office, are available in the House of Commons Library. No figures are published for total overseas investment by the United Kingdom in the United States of America.

Comparable figures on investment income are published in the same sources. No estimates of the likely income in the current year are available.

Mr. Aitken: Contracts for the site infrastructure and main construction of the Procurement Executive's new headquarters at Abbey wood, north Bristol have been

British Aerospace, Bolton

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what defence contracts his Department plans to place with the British Aerospace, Lostock, Bolton, factory.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place a copy of the "Permanent Secretary's Handbook" in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The handbook referred to is a compendium of guidance and other documents which heads of departments and others with similar responsibilities find useful to have collected together. Much of the material in it is already in the public domain—for example, "Questions of Procedure for Ministers", the "Armstrong Memorandum" on the duties and responsibilities of civil servants, the memorandum of guidance for officials appearing before Select Committees, guidance on Government publicity and advertising, the "Radcliffe Rules" on ministerial memoirs, and guidance on access by Ministers to documents of a previous Administration. NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment (Health Boards)

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total amount of legal costs incurred by each of the Northern Ireland health boards in defending cases involving sexual and religious discrimination.

Mr. Ancram: The total amount of legal costs incurred by each of the Northern Ireland health and social services boards in defending cases involving sexual and religious discrimination is not known since the majority of cases are still on-going and the costs incurred have not yet been established. The figures in the table represent only those legal fees which have actually been paid during the last three years.

Mr. Ancram: Health and social services boards each have an equal opportunities unit which is in regular contact with the FEC for advice and guidance on employment matters. Each board also has contact in relation to the monitoring of the composition of its work force.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money in total has been spent by each of the Northern Ireland health boards in settling legal cases taken against the board involving sexual discrimination.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Department of Health will order an investigation into the employment policies of the Northern Ireland health boards.

Mr. Ancram: Health and social services boards are subject to selection and appointment procedures which were issued by the Department of Health and Social Services in June 1991. The HSS boards then have detailed policies to supplement and clarify for their staff the application of the selection and appointment procedures. The Department is satisfied these purposes are fair to all staff.

The health and social services boards also have comprehensive policies in respect of other aspects of employment including equal opportunities, sexual harassment, job sharing, career breaks and employment of disabled people. These policies take into account guidance from other agencies such as the FEC and the EOC.

The Management Executive instituted a review of the selection and appointment procedures in November 1993 and all interested organisations—health and social services boards, health and social services trusts, staff, professional interests, the Fair Employment Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission were invited to contribute to the review.

The Department has looked carefully at existing practice. It is conscious that isolated problems have arisen in respect of the implementation of this policy but is confident that the procedures remain valid and therefore sees no requirement for an investigation.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money in total has been spent by each of the last Northern Ireland health boards in settling legal cases taken against the board involving religious discrimination.

Mr. Ancram: The total money spent by each of the Northern Ireland health and social services boards in settling legal cases taken against the board involving religious discrimination is shown in the table.

[1]Board dismissed.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the Eastern health board took to implement the recommendations laid down by the Fair Employment Commission in the remedies judgment following the Duffy case.

Mr. Ancram: The FEC did not make any recommendations in the remedies judgment following the Duffy case. However, the board's internal inquiry made a series of recommendations which were subsequently adopted by the board.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 58, for what period the field study for bovine tuberculosis was intended to run; whether that period has been extended; and when he now expects it to be completed.

Mr. Ancram: The sampling of herds to assist with the possible development of a blood test for bovine TB was completed as planned by December 1993. Arrangements for the purchase of all the animals which it was considered necessary to examine have now been completed. It is necessary to analyse and interpret the data before an assessment can be made of the effectiveness of a blood test and whether a fully substantiated case can be made to the European Community to obtain agreement to its use. This is expected to continue until late 1994.

Illegal Fishing

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether it was established by the RUC that Fishery Conservancy Board bailiffs and a scientist had been involved in the stripping of eggs from salmon on the Grillagh river in County Londonderry during the salmon seasons 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Sir John Wheeler: At the request of the Fishery Conservancy Board, the Royal Ulster Constabulary carried out an investigation into this matter in 1989. Following the police investigation a file was sent to the Director of Public Prosecutions who subsequently directed no prosecution.

Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1034, if he will publish the number of calls made to the freephones for the organ donor card and Keep Warm Keep Well winter warmth campaigns and the results from monitoring customer awareness and attitudes in relation to the innovation in research and development campaigns.

Sir John Wheeler: There have been 379 calls made to the freephone for the organ donor card and 88 freephone calls for the Keep Warm Keep Well winter warmth campaign.

Monitoring in relation to the innovation in research and development campaigns indicates that improved customer awareness, attitudes and actions are reflected in a 13 per cent. increase in the number of applications for, and a 70 per cent. increase in the numbers of companies participating in, the product and process development scheme in 1993-94 compared with the previous year. The figures also reflect a 79 per cent. increase in the number of first-time users of the scheme. Under the science and technology programme industrial participation has risen from 50 per cent. in 1992-93 to 100 per cent. in 1993-94.

Road Deaths Statistics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the number of road deaths in crashes where a driver or rider was above the legal alcohol limit.

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

Road deaths in accidents where driver or rider was estimated by the RUC to be above the legal alcohol limit

Year	Total deaths
1984	25
1985	19
1986	38
1987	33
1988	22
1989	27
1990	41
1991	26
1992	30
1993	25

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the road casualty fatalities and serious injuries in each year since 1984.

Sir John Wheeler: The information is set out in the table:

Road traffic accident casualties

Year	Total killed	Total seriously injured
1984	189	2,465
1985	177	1,148
1986	236	1,825
1987	214	1,885
1988	178	1,969
1989	181	2,014
1990	185	1,993
1991	185	1,648
1992	150	1,841
1993	143	1,725

Prison Service (Costs)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average cost to the prison service in Northern Ireland of admitting a male person to prison; and what is the difference in the cost of admitting a person who has been sentenced to a long period of imprisonment and a person who has been sentenced to seven days.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is not available.

Prison Sentences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons were given a prison sentence in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years for which figures are available for stealing cars and joyriding in such vehicles; what was the average sentence in each year; and how many cars were stolen in each of those years.

Sir John Wheeler: The number of cases where prison sentences were given for the theft and for the unauthorised taking of vehicles in 1990, 1991 and 1992 were respectively 72, 66 and 123. The average prison sentence in each of those years for those sentenced to immediate custody was 5·3, 5·1 and 5·2 months respectively. The number of vehicles reported stolen or otherwise taken and driven away without authority was 7,042 in 1990, 8,455 in 1991 and 9,376 in 1992.

SCOTLAND

Salmon Farming

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the Ernst and Young report on subsidies to the Norwegian salmon farming industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I have encouraged Scottish salmon producers to provide the European Commission with such information as is available on alleged unfair support for Norwegian salmon farmers. I have read the Ernst and Young report with interest, and I understand that the report is now in the hands of the European Commission which must decide whether it warrants full and formal investigation.

Limb Defects

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when Ayrshire and Arran health board expects to be able to produce the 1993 statistics relating to limb defects within the health board's area; and for what reasons there has been a delay in collating the information;

(2) what procedures are used by Ayrshire and Arran health board to collate information relating to the incidence of limb defects in children within the health board's area.

Mr. Lang: Statistics on the incidence of limb defects and other congenital anomalies are produced for all health board areas by the information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency. The data are compiled using three sources: the neonatal discharge record—form SMR11—the information on which is provided by each health board, the Scottish stillbirth and neonatal mortality study, and admissions to hospital in the first year of life —form SMR1.

Information on all congenital anomalies, including limb defects, is published on each calendar year's birth cohort. A provisional data set based on the first two sources is published in the summer following the calendar year, and a final data set on the same birth cohort a year later, when all hospital admissions have been added to the provisional data.

The provisional data for 1993 on reduction deformities of limbs by area of residence are as follows:

Board area of residence	Upper limb	Lower limb	Unspecified limb

Prison Visiting Committees

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to alter the composition and membership of prison visiting committees; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The draft revised Prisons and Young Offenders Institutions (Scotland) Rules issued for consultation last September included proposals to change the size of, and local authority representation on, the visiting committees for Scottish adult penal establishments. We are still considering all the comments received, but new rules will be laid before Parliament in the next few months.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the cost to Grampian, Tayside, Highland and Strathclyde regions in 1979, 1989 and 1992 and the latest available date for police involved in mountain area search and rescue activity;

(2) what is the cost per hour of police in Grampian, Tayside, Highland and Strathclyde regions when engaged in mountain search and rescue duty.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information relating to the cost of police involvement in mountain search and rescue is not recorded by Tayside, Highland and Strathclyde regional councils. The approximate, estimated costs for this activity in Grampiam are not available for 1979 and 1989. Those for 1992 and 1993 are estimated at £3,000—cost per hour £10·71—and £2,500—cost per hour £11·36—respectively.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of the prison visiting committees, the names of the appointing authorities and tenure of appointments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table. Tenure of appointment to the visiting committee is four years.

Cornton Vale Prison

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to relocate women prisoners from Cornton Vale to mixed sex prisons nearer their own homes.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 21 February 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter fromn E. W. Frizzell to Mrs. Maria Fyfe, dated 9 March 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about what plans there are to relocate women prisoners from Cornton Vale to mixed sex prisons nearer their homes.

There are no plans to relocate women prisoners from Cornton Vale. Some consideration has been given to the possibility of providing open prison opportunities for women prisoners elsewhere but the practical difficulties are such that it is not in prospect at present.

Public Bodies

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public bodies, appointed by himself, provide health care (a) at the present date and (d) in 1984; and what was the total bill for payment to their chairmen and members in 1993 and 1983.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 25 February 1994]: In 1984, 15 health boards were responsible for the provision of health care in Scotland. In order to increase responsiveness to patients' needs, health boards are now increasingly responsible for planning and purchasing health care and NHS trusts are responsible for its provision. There are currently 17 NHS trusts.

In 1984, only the chairmen of the 15 health boards received remuneration at a total cost of £88,163. Since 1991 non-executive directors have also received remuneration and the total cost for 208 chairmen and non-executive members of health boards and NHS trusts in 1993 amounted to £1,417,125.

Care of the Elderly

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given to the Management Executive of the Scottish health service requiring the health service purchasers to change the arrangements for provision of care to the elderly.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend has issued no such instructions. It remains for individual health boards to determine the care needs for their elderly client group and to purchase accordingly. In so doing, they are expected to have due regard to the Government's community care policy objective of seeking a move away from institutional to community-based care. However, patients who require specialist medical and nursing supervision will continue to be the responsibility of the NHS. This means the NHS will continue to be responsible for providing assessment and rehabilitation facilities, and for retaining long-stay facilities for those whose medical needs or patterns of behaviour would be difficult to manage in a community-based setting.

Those not requiring such hospital services will increasingly have their health needs met within the community, through general practitioners and other members of the primary health care team. Any other care needs will be a local authority responsibility. But in any event we expect shifting the balance of care, from hospitals to community, to be a matter for local discussion and agreement with the emphasis on joint working and joint assessments of needs.

New Local Authorities

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the new local authorities in schedule 1 to the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill as amended in the Standing Committee, giving the (a) population, (b) electorate, (c) area and (d) number of (i) secondary and (ii) primary schools for each of those authorities.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Information on population, electorate and area of the proposed new single-tier authorities is set out in the table. The information requested in relation to schools is not held centrally.

TRANSPORT

British Rail Stations

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Rail stations within the Greater London regional passenger committee area are totally unstaffed.

Mr. Freeman: Of the 462 stations which fall within the boundaries of the London regional passenger committees, 62 are unstaffed.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Rail stations in the Greater London regional passenger committee area staffed on the basis of less than two full shifts on any (a) week day, (b) Saturday and (c) Sunday.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not readily available in the form required and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 15 July 1993, Official Report, columns 583-84, which showed that of the 2,551 stations on the British Rail network, 977 were wholly unstaffed.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the timings of the shift rota for British Rail station staff in the Greater London regional passenger committee area.

Mr. Freeman: Comprehensive information cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost. The timings of the shift rota for British Rail station staff vary depending on the requirements of the station concerned.

Central Line

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what travelling assistance his Department is offering to the communities living on or near the Epping-Ongar section of the Central line should London Transport decide to close this section of its operations in March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The decision on this closure proposal is for the Secretary of State for Transport and I cannot comment further while closure procedures are under way.

Registration Plates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to what the current requirements are for Q registration plates to be issued.

Mr. Key: Q prefix registration marks are allocated to vehicles whose age cannot be established. Typically they are allocated to imported vehicles for which registration documents are not available—vehicles that have been extensively rebuilt and vehicles assembled from a kit, using parts from more than one donor vehicle.

Oil Discharges

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the annual volume of oil entering the Irish sea from shipping for each of the last three years; and in each year what proportion of that was intentionally discharged.

Mr. Norris: The annual volume of oil entering the Irish sea from shipping in each of the last three years—1991-93—is estimated as follows:

1991—1,500 tonnes—one incident involving a spill of approximately 1,450 tonnes vegetable oil and 50 tonnes engine oil.
1992—eight tonnes.
1993—figures not yet available.

These figures are based upon information extracted from the annual publication "Oil Pollution Survey Around the Coasts of the UK" produced by the Advisory Committee on Protection of the Sea. The 1993 figures are still being compiled.

There are no recorded figures for the legal operational discharges of oil from shipping traversing the Irish sea.

Railtrack

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many bids were received for the contract for legal work for Railtrack;

(2) whether British Rail was invited to bid for the legal work for Railtrack;

(3) what estimate he has as to the number of staff who will be made redundant as a result of the decision of Railtrack to outsource its legal work.

Mr. Freeman: While Railtrack remains a division of British Rail, these are matters for the British Railways Board.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the illustrative chart, "Financial Flows in the New Railway Industry", published by his Department, there is any statutory connection between the flow from Railtrack entering the box marked, "Public Expenditure Provision for Railways", and the flow which links that box with "Franchising Director".

Mr. Freeman: There is no statutory connection. The external finance limits for BR and for Railtrack and the resources available for passenger rail subsidy in 1994-95 will be published on 10 March. The prospective cash surplus of Railtrack is being taken into account in setting the franchising director's vote. The Government have said that the franchising director will have sufficient resources to meet the costs of existing passenger services.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the formula for the charges to be levied by Railtrack for access to the rail network.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 15 February, Official Report, column 716, which set out the basis on which Railtrack has calculated its charges.

Franchised and BR passenger operators will pay the direct costs that their services impose on Railtrack. Common costs will be specific sections of track, and those which can only be identified to a geographic area, will be recovered from operators in proportion to the number of passenger-vehicle miles they run in each area. Network costs—the core overheads of providing the network which cannot be broken down more specifically—will be recovered in proportion to operators' revenue from fares.

Charges to freight operators and non-franchised passenger operators will be subject to commercial negotiation, but must at least cover direct costs.

The application of these methods is a matter for Railtrack. The rail regulator will consider and approve all access agreements entered into after 1 April 1994.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state on the basis of valuation of assets, in cash terms at current prices, the minimum rate of return sought by the Treasury from Railtrack in each of the next five years.

Mr. Freeman: Railtrack will be set a target rate of return on capital of 8 per cent, to be achieved over its first four years of business. Discussions are continuing with Railtrack on the setting of initial financial targets, including the opening required rate of return on capital.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will describe the basis on which the assets passing to Railtrack have been valued.

Mr. Freeman: In common with other public sector undertakings, Railtrack's assets will be valued on a modern equivalent asset value basis. The valuation will reflect the existing condition of assets and the cost of continuing to provide capacity broadly equivalent to that provided now.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of reported incidents in the Irish sea involving marine pollution from shipping indicating (a) the number investigated, (b) the number involved in legal proceedings and (c) the number resulting in prosecution.

Mr. Norris: Over the last three years the Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit has received the following number of reports of pollution in the Irish sea:

	Number
1991	50
1992	42
1993	54

The majority of these reports will have been related to bilge or tank washings with no ship being identified.

All incidents were followed up by MPCU and investigated where appropriate. The following number of port state control inspections was requested.

1991	1
1993	2

In 1991, one vessel was referred to the flag state for further investigation by the relevant competent authority, who subsequently decided that there was insufficient evidence upon which to effect a prosecution.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to amend the regulations to allow traffic commissioners to take into account suitability of the immediate local road network before determining a heavy goods operators licence application.

Mr. Key: A licensing authority is able to take into account the suitability of the junction of an operating centre with a public road, and also the suitability of any private road between the operating centre and the public road. The suitability of any public roads in the vicinity is a matter for the local highway authority. In determining whether an operating centre is environmentally suitable, however, the licensing authority may also take into account the local environmental effect of vehicles travelling to and from the operating centre. We have no plans to change this.

Diesel Fuel Duty

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Bus and Coach Council regarding changes in the amount of rebate received in respect of dieseal fuel duty following the Budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has recently discussed with the Bus and Coach Council the initial impact of the changes in fuel duty rebate following the Budget and has undertaken to consider carefully its detailed analysis when it has been produced.

M25

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of traffic on the M25 is using that route in preference to the south coast route.

Mr. Key: About 2 per cent. of traffic on the M25 is estimated to be using that route in preference to the A27/A259 south coast trunk route.

A1

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statutory provisions on his Department's highways powers which would allow him to consider including a bypass for the villages of Wymondham and Thistleton in the A1 widening scheme adjoining the RamJam junction.

Mr. Key: It is expected that the up-grading of the A1 trunk road to motorway standard would generally follow the line of the existing road. Wymondham and Thistleton are some distance from the A1, they are served by local highways and the Department does not have statutory powers to promote bypasses for these villages.

Shipping

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when Her Majesty's Government will ratify the 1988 protocol relating to the international convention on load line 1966 establishing an international agreement on minimum freeboards for ships engaged on international voyages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Government will consider ratification of annex IV of MARPOL when the findings of a comprehensive survey of United Kingdom reception facilities, including those for sewage, are available later in the year.

Penalty Fares Regulations

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make penalty fares regulations under section 130 of the Railways Act 1993.

Mr. Freeman: The Railways (Penalty Fares) Regulations 1994 have now been laid before Parliament. The regulations give the rail regulator the power to make rules in respect of penalty fares, which have the same effect as if they were regulations. A draft copy of these rules, prepared by the office of the rail regulator, has been placed in the Library.

Road Safety

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the expenditure by each local education authority in respect of school crossings and road safety for each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fuel Duty Rebate

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of the impact of the decision of the Government to increase the fuel duty rebate in the Budget on (a) bus and coach passenger mileage, (b) bus and coach fares, (c) pollution caused by bus and coach, (d) car mileage and (e) pollution caused by cars.

Mr. Key [holding answer 8 March 1994]: The strategy of increasing fuel duty is designed to encourage reduction of carbon dioxide emissions from all road vehicles as part of our commitment, under the framework convention on climate change, to return such emission to 1990 levels by the year 2000. The increase in fuel duty for bus operators represents less than 1 per cent. of operating costs and therefore the impact on fares and services is likely to be small. The effect on bus and car mileage and on pollution will depend upon the actions taken by vehicle users in response to the measure but its intention is to cause all to think more carefully about the size, age, fuel efficiency, methods of operation and maintenance of such vehicles.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who are the members currently appointed to the Consumers Committee for Great Britain under the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958.

Mr. Jack: The members of the committee are:

Mrs. Janet Laurence, Chairman
Miss Beata Brookes
Mrs. Dorothy Cockrell
Mrs. Majorie Grimes
Mrs. Barbara Hawkins
Mr. John Murphy
Mr. John Tracy

Olive Oil

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy olive oil per tonne, (b) what she estimates the price of olive oil per tonne would be in a free market without European Community price intervention and (c) the cost to the consumer of taxes on imports of olive oil.

Mr. Jack: The price of extra virgin olive oil on Community markets in the week beginning 7 February 1994[1] ranged from 1,850 ecu/tonne—£1,400 per tonne[2] —to 2,430 ecu/tonne—£1,850 per tonne[2]. The EC accounts for approximately 75 per cent. of world production and consumption of olive oil. It is not possible to make precise estimates of the price at which oil would trade without Community support measures or the cost of those measures to the consumer without a large number of assumptions about how the EC and world markets would react if circumstances were to change.

[2] Exchange rate 1 ecu=£0·75958.

Tobacco

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy tobacco per tonne, (b) what she estimates the price of tobacco per tonne would be in a free market without European Community price intervention, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of tobacco, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on tobacco subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the tobacco sector.

Mr. Jack: The answers are as follows:

(a)(b) It is not possible to give a representative wholesale price for tobacco, since values vary significantly in relation both to variety and quality. Neither is it possible to make precise estimates of a potential free market price, without a large number of assumptions about current price levels on world markets and how they would react if circumstances were to change.

(c) The latest Commission estimate of EC tobacco production from the 1993 harvest is 364,219 tonnes. Community consumption amounts to some 630,000 tonnes per annum.

(d) The provisional outturn for Community expenditure for tobacco in 1993 is 1,165 mecu—£915 million[1].

(e) The United Kingdom contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of tobacco support in other member states.

[1] £1=1·2729 ecu.

Milk

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy milk per tonne, (b) the price at which the European Community sells milk per tonne on the world market, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of milk, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on milk subsidies, and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the milk market.

Mr. Jack: The answers are as follows: (a) The average price paid for milk by wholesalers in England and Wales is £230·65 per tonne; (b) there is not a world market for liquid milk; (c) I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 1 February, Official Report, column 555, which shows EC production of milk and consumption of liquid milk for 1991, the latest year available; (d) the 1993 provisional outturn of common agricultural policy expenditure in the dairy sector as a whole amounts to around £4 billion; (e) the Exchequer cost of CAP support in the dairy sector in the United Kingdom is estimated at £296·5 million for the 1993-94 financial year. The United Kingdom also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of support for the dairy sector in other member states.

Rice

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy rice per tonne, (b) what she estimates the price of rice per tonne would be in a free market without European Community price intervention and (c) the cost to the British consumer of the common agricultural policy in the rice market.

Mr. Jack: The answers are as follows: (a) Information on the price of rice to wholesalers is not gathered centrally. (b) It is not possible to make precise estimates about what prices might result if there were no market support in the EC. A large number of assumptions would be required in order to assess how domestic and world markets would react if commodity policy were to be changed. (c) I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 11 January, Official Report, columns 65-6. For the reasons given, it is not possible to estimate the effect of the CAP on the food bill for individual commodities.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total budget of the common agricultural policy in each year since 1973; what proportion of the EC's total budget it accounted for; and what proportion of the common agricultural policy was allocated to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The information is as follows:

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will estimate the cost to the United Kingdom of every acre farmed in the European Community.

Mr. Jack: This information is not available.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the budget forecast for the common agricultural policy in 1994; and what proportion of this fund will be allocated to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The 1994 CAP budget has been set at 36,465 mecu—£27,566 million. It is set in relation to forecast expenditure throughout the Community, and not on the basis of allocations to individual member states. The level of United Kingdom CAP receipts will depend on a variety of factors, such as production levels, quantities exported, and purchases in and sales out of intervention storage. It is forecast at £2,728 million for the 1994-95 financial year.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will raise at the next meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers the cost to member states of the report commissioned by the EC into the future of the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: This study, which has yet to be completed or its findings published, is a matter for the Commission, not the Council of Ministers. The next meeting of the Council of Agricultural Ministers will however be discussing the Commission's proposals for CAP prices for 1994-95 during which my right hon. Friend will be paying close attention to the overall cost of the CAP.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she has taken to obtain a copy of that analysis of the future economic viability of the common agricultural policy by EU economists; if she will place a copy in the Library; and if she will request the European Commission at the next Council of Ministers meeting to publish the report.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 March 1994]: I understand this is an internal European Commission study on which work is not yet fully complete. Eventual publication is a matter for the Commission. If the Commission does decide to make this study available then my right hon. Friend the Minister will seek to obtain a copy for the House Library.

Oilseeds

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy oilseeds per tonne, (b) what she estimates the price of oilseed per tonne would be in a free market without European Community price intervention, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of oilseeds, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on oilseeds subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the oilseeds market.

Mr. Jack: The average price for rapeseed on the United Kingdom market was £149 per tonne in 1993. Sunflower seed and soya beans are produced in insignificant quantities in the United Kingdom. EC average prices were £194 per tonne[1] for sunflower seed and £178 per tonne[1] for soya beans in 1993. Under the CAP oilseeds are traded within the EC at prices which are in line with those in world markets. The EC production and consumption of oilseeds—rapeseed, sunflower seed and soya beans—in 1992 was estimated at 11·3 million tonnes[2] and 26·3 million tonnes[2] respectively, the last year for which figures are available. The level of CAP expenditure for oilseeds in 1993 was estimated at £2,261 million[1]. The Exchequer cost of CAP support for oilseeds under the arable area payments scheme in the United Kingdom is estimated at £160 million—excluding the cost of oilseeds grown on set-aside land—for the 1993-94 financial year. The United Kingdom also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of oilseeds support in other member states.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy linseed per tonne, (b) what she estimates the price of linseed per tonne would be in a free market without European Community price intervention, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of linseed, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on linseed subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the linseed market.

Mr. Jack: The average price for linseed on the United Kingdom market was £111 per tonne in 1993. Under the CAP linseed is traded within the EC at prices which are in line with those in world markets. The EC production and consumption of linseed in 1992 was estimated at 380,000 tonnes[1] and 492,000 tonnes[1] respectively, the last year for which figures are available. The level of CAP expenditure for linseed in 1993 was estimated at £143 million[2]. The Exchequer cost of CAP support for linseed under the arable area payments scheme in the United Kingdom is estimated at £75 million for the 1993-94 financial year. The United Kingdom also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of linseed support in other member states.

Potatoes

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy potatoes per tonne, (b) what she estimates the price of potatoes per tonne would be in a free market without European Community price intervention, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of potatoes, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on potato subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the potato market.

Mr. Jack: The answer is as follows:

(a) The average price at which registered merchants[1] in Great Britain sold maincrop potatoes was as follows:

Crop year	Average price (£/tonne) (excluding sacks)
1988-89	62·51
1989-90	98·65
1990-91	78·17

1992-93	56·71

Northern Ireland recorded maincrop ware prices were as detailed:

1988-89	54·43
1989-90	104·07
1990-91	66·15

(e) there is no cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the potato market.

Dairy Quotas

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will estimate by how much the continued existence of dairy quotas raises market prices for dairy products above the intervention prices.

Mr. Jack: Prices for dairy products are currently close to intervention price levels.

Banana Trade Advisory Committee

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who are the members of the Banana Trade Advisory Committee.

Mr. Jack: The Banana Trade Advisory Committee was disbanded on 1 July 1993 following the introduction of the EC single market for bananas.

Set-aside

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will she list the June census set-aside figures for England for each year from 1989 to 1994.

Mr. Jack: The June census set-aside figures for England for each year from 1990 to 1993 are as follows:

Year	000 hectares
1990	72
1991	97
1992	130
1993	580

Set-aside was not separately identified in the 1989 census. The provisional results of the 1994 June census are expected to become available in August 1994.

Infant Food

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to alter the regulations on the promotion of infant formula and follow-on formula.

Mr. Soames: Draft regulations to implement two EC directives covering the composition, marketing and export of infant formula and follow-on formula have been the subject of a public consultation exercise. The closing date for the receipt of comments was 4 March. The Government will carefully consider all the comments received, before announcing their conclusions on what the regulations should include.

Agricultural Base Rates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the figures in hectares for (a) set-aside, (b) pulses and (c) oilseed rape and cereals for 1989, 1990 and 1991 which were used to calculate the base rate for England.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on Friday 3 December 1993 to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh), Official Report, column 850.

EC Fisheries Inquiry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the terms of reference for the European Commission's commission of inquiry into fisheries; whether the inquiry will address the availability of food for sea birds; and if he will list the membership of the inquiry team.

Mr. Jack: At the December Fisheries Council the Commission to establish a working group, composed of marine ecologists and fisheries biologists, to study the implications for the marine ecosystem of fishing in general and of industrial fishing in particular. The group will set priorities for future research work on the effect these have on the marine ecosystem, sea birds and small cetaceans. The Commission is responsible for the membership of the group. We have asked the Commission to ensure that the working group takes account of the recent sea bird deaths in the North sea.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, when she will consult on the Milk Marketing Board's amended scheme for reorganisation.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I and the Secretary of State for Wales have today invited comments from interested parties in England and Wales on the amended reorganisation scheme now before us.

The Milk Marketing Board has made a number of changes to the reorganisation scheme on which we consulted last October. The MMB now proposes a vesting day of 1 November 1994. Its new proposals also include the establishment of Genus as an independent company, with shares issued to eligible registered producers, and the retention of national milk records by the residuary Milk Marketing Board, which would determine its future ownership. The scheme continues to provide for the flotation of Dairy Crest and the issue to eligible producers of shares in Dairy Crest and certificates of entitlement in Milk Marque.

We have asked to receive comments by 8 April.

Copies of our consultation document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament and will be available for inspection at the Ministry's regional service centres and Welsh Office divisional offices.

Danish Sand Eel Fishing

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she is taking to ensure that Danish sand eel fishing operations off the east coast of Britain do not jeopardise stocks of sea fish and bird life; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Denmark has the major interest in industrial fishing in the North sea, but does not have access to fisheries which lie within the British 12-mile limit, nor to the sand eel fishery south of the Shetlands which has been closed for the last three years.

There is at present no conclusive evidence that current levels of industrial fishing are having an adverse effect on fish stocks. A study group of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea on sea bird-fish interactions last year indicated that there was unlikely to be much competition between sea birds and the sand-eel fishery. Nonetheless, I believe that the implications of industrial fishing should be considered in depth and, following pressure from the United Kingdom, the December Fisheries Council agreed to the establishment of a working group, composed of marine ecologists and fisheries biologists, to study the implications for the marine ecosystem of fishing in general and industrial fishing in particular. The group will set priorities for future research work on the effect these have on the marine ecosystem, sea birds and small cetaceans.

Fish

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has made to the European Commission in relation to subsidies paid to French fishermen.

Mr. Jack [holding reply 8 March 1994]: We have asked the Commission to consider urgently whether the package of aids announced by the French Government has been granted in accordance with EU legal provisions on state aids.

School Milk Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the change in local authority consumption in terms of value in actual and real terms of milk and other products eligible for the school milk scheme between (a) 12 school weeks before and 12 schools weeks after the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the school milk scheme and (b) 12 school weeks prior to and 12 school weeks after the reduction in funding for the school milk scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding reply 8 March 1994]: No information on changes in local authority consumption in terms of the value of milk and milk products eligible under the school milk scheme is available on a 12-weekly basis. The change in local authority consumption in terms of actual value for eligible milk and milk products between the term—spring 1993—before the removal of buttermilk and cheese from the scheme on 1 April 1993 and the term —summer 1993—after was a reduction of subsidy totalling £5,639,666·01. No information will be available on changes in consumption following the 25 per cent. cut in the subsidy and the technical amendments, which came into force on 1 January 1994, until claims for the period have been received.

Public Information Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to her reply of 18 February, Official Report, columns 1056-58, what was the budgeted and the actual cost of each public information campaign listed.

Mr. Jack: The cost of each public information campaign listed was as follows:

	Estimated Budgets £	Actual £
At the Farmer's Service	371,500	435,000

Estimated budget costs for campaigns are set at the beginning of each financial year. During the year reassessment of policy requirements and the widening of campaigns to meet increased demand for information can cause variations in actual work which affects costs.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 492, if she will set out the international conventions covering land-based radioactive waste discharges and those to which the United Kingdom is party.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply. The Government do not have a list of all the international conventions to which other states may be parties that cover land-based discharges of radioactive wastes. The following are the treaties and conventions relevant to the interests of the United Kingdom in European waters:

the Eurotom treaty, 1957, to which the United Kingdom is now a party as a member state of the European Community;

the—Paris—convention for the protection of marine pollution from land-based sources, 1974, to which the United Kingdom has been a contracting party since its inception; this will eventually be replaced by the convention for the protection of the marine environment of the north-east Atlantic 1992, which the United Kingdom has signed but has yet to ratify;

the—Helsinki—convention on the protection of the marine environment of the Baltic sea area, 1974, to be replaced in due course by the—Helsinki—convention on the protection of the Baltic sea area, 1992, and the—Barcelona—convention for the protection of the Mediterranean sea against pollution, 1976, in both of which the United Kingdom has interests as a member state of the European Community, since the European Community is, or is in the process of becoming, a contracting party to those conventions.

WALES

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many days per week Mr. Michael Griffiths is contractually bound to spend on work for the three non-departmental public bodies of which he is chairman or member; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The average time commitments expressed as days per week are listed as follows:

Countryside Council for Wales	2½ days per week
Glan Clwyd District General Hospital NHS Trust	3½ days per week
Higher Education Funding Council	1½ days per month

Mr. Griffiths performs daily duties at the offices of these bodies, attends evening meetings and works at weekends preparing for meetings and briefing himself.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much it costs his Department to publicise and administer the operation of the assisted places scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Schools and the Independent Schools Information Service publicise the scheme. It is administered in Wales by staff of the Welsh Office Education Department, which has a range of other significant responsibilities. It is estimated that the current cost of its time spent on the administration of the scheme is £6,400.

Health Service Manpower

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many managers and senior managers there were within the NHS; and of those how many are there whose designation as such can be attributed solely to reclassification within the NHS, in each health authority and for Wales as a whole in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on numbers of managers on 21 February, Official Report, columns 89-91.

Information on the numbers of staff reclassified as managers is not in general readily available. However a special exercise in December 1993 provided some information on the number of staff now classified as managers who were previously employed at other grades within the same authority/trust. This information is shown in the following table. It is not known how many of these staff retained their previous responsibilities on transferring to manager grade and how many were promoted or took on new responsibilities.

Health authority area	[1]Per cent.
Clwyd	79·0
East Dyfed	71·0
Gwent	77·0

Mid Glamorgan	62·0

South Glamorgan	77·0
West Glamorgan	80·0

Wales	73·0

[1] Percentage of managers, at December 1993, who were previously employed at other grades within the same authority/trust.

Notes:

1. Includes staff employed by health authorities, NHS trusts, Welsh health common services authority and those family health services authorities using the health authorities payroll system.
2. Managers employed on local payscales but who cannot be identified centrally as managers are excluded. This applies in particular to the Pembrokeshire NHS trust, where the figure quoted excludes all bar one employee.
3. Managers who were previously employed at other grades in other authorities/trusts but not their existing one are not generally counted as reclassified in the figures except where they transferred to an NHS trust from the health authority which had previously managed those services at the time the trust was created.

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in 1993-94 prices and cash terms the total amount spent from public funds on training in Wales in each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn in 1993-94 and plans for 1994-95.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the following table:

Land Use

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what figures were used in hectares for (a) set-aside, (b) pulses and (c) oilseed rape and cereals for 1989, 1990 and 1991 to calculate the base rate for Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 29 November 1993, Official Report, column 362.

Deaf-blind Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the impact of the grants for the regional deaf-blind service in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Some £25,000 has been given to SENSE, the National Deaf-Blind and Rubella Association, in 1993-94 for the establishment of a development officer post in Wales. A grant application for 1994-95 is currently under consideration.

Grant allocated by the Welsh Office Education Department under the grants for education support and training scheme has led to the establishment of a regional deaf-blind service at Ysgol Hendre, Swansea. An outreach support service is currently in operation and the centre providing educational facilities for children will open shortly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will extend the time scale of grants for the GEST scheme for deaf-blind children;

(2) what is the amount of cash earmarked for the GEST scheme for the consortium of local education authorities, giving the amounts for each of West Glamorgan, Mid-Glamorgan, Dyfed and Gwent.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have recently allocated grant for 1994-95 on expenditure of £18,800 to each of the four authorities involved in the south Wales deaf-blind project, a total of £75,200 for that year. No decisions have yet been taken about the extension of the grant into 1995-96.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will extend the funding of the GEST project to support the education of deaf-blind children beyond April 1995.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones).

GPs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 771, what considerations underlie his decision not to collect information centrally on the number of general practitioners who receive gross payments in excess of £200,000 per annum; if he will consider collecting this information in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: GPs are paid according to a national contract. Conditions for payment are tightly defined and all GPs have access to income under the same conditions. Individual GP income varies according to a number of factors including list size and range of services provided.

Exchequer control over the remuneration system is achieved through arrangements operated by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body which ensure that, taking one year with another, the profession as a whole earns neither more nor less by way of net income than the amount intended by Government.

The collation of payments to individual doctors would serve no useful central management purpose. However, the information is available at a local management level to family health services authorities.

Council House Sales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total income received by each district council from the sales of council houses in each of the last 10 years expressed in current prices.

Mr. Redwood: The information is given in the following table:

(2) if he will publish for each borough, district and county council and in total for England as a whole in constant prices (a) the estimated actual spending for 1993-94, (b) the standard spending assessments for 1994-95, (c) the amounts by which (b) exceeds or falls short of (a) and (d) the percentage by which (b) exceeds or falls short of (a); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the capital expenditure and (b) the revenue expenditure for the last year for which figures are available in relation to the number of councillors on (i) London boroughs, (ii) metropolitan boroughs, (iii) shire county councils and (iv) shire district-borough councils.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the European directives for protecting the environment since 1979, including those concerning air pollution, water pollution and wildlife protection; whether each was implemented in the United Kingdom by primary or secondary legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Directives in force are listed in the Official Journal of the European Communities "Director of Community Legislation in Force and Other Acts of the Community Institutions—22nd Edition", which is available in the Library.

Details of the methods of transposition are not held centrally. The United Kingdom aims to implement Community legislation in full and on time. The method of implementation depends on the circumstances of each case and the legislation already in force in the United Kingdom, but will usually be by secondary legislation.

Planning Regulations (Water Services)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what rules govern the giving of planning permission where existing water and sewerage provision will be affected;

(2) what planning regulations existing to safeguard people living in areas of poor water pressure where a new building development is planned in the immediate vicinity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: There are no planning regulations which apply specifically to development which might affect existing water and sewerage provision. In determining planning applications, local planning authorities must have regard to the development plan, so far as it is material to the application, and to any other material considerations. Where the development plan is material, the planning application must be determined in accordance with it unless material considerations indicate otherwise.

Each planning application must be considered on its merits; water supply and sewerage disposal may be material considerations to be taken into account. The capacity of existing water and sewerage infrastructure and the need for additional facilities should also be considered when development plans are being drawn up. Local planning authorities should consult the appropriate water or sewerage undertaker on any planning application which is likely to have significant implications for water or sewerage services.

Section 65(1) of the Water Industry Act 1991 places a duty on water undertakers to provide water at such a pressure as will cause water to reach the top of the top-most storey of every building within the undertaker's area. In general, the planning system should not duplicate safeguards for water supply or sewerage disposal already available under water legislation.

Audit Commission (Staff Sickness)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish current sickness absence rates in respect of staff of the Audit Commission.

Mr. Baldry: No. Under schedule 3 to the Local Government Finance Act 1982, the Audit Commission is responsible for the recruitment and management of its own staff. The Government do not involve themselves in this process.

Councillors (Surcharges)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now discontinue the penalty of surcharge on councillors in respect of fraud or incompetence.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support his Department provided to the centre for environmental chemistry at Brunel university in its preparation of its recent report on the management of used nuclear fuel and high-level nuclear waste.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has not been involved in the preparation of this report.

Homelessness

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what date he received representations from (a) Westminster and (b) Wandsworth asking that homelessness be used as an indicator for the purposes of standard spending assessment distribution;

(2) what (a) evidence of their need to spend in respect of homelessness or (b) plans for increased spending was provided by Wandsworth borough council when asking that homelessness be used as an indicator for standard spending assessment distribution;

(3) what (a) evidence of need to spend in respect of homelessness or (b) plans for increased spending was provided by Westminster city council when asking that homelessness be used as an indicator for standard spending assessment distribution.

Mr. Baldry: As regards the local government finance settlement for 1994-95, representations in support of a separate indicator for homelessness were received from Westminster city council in 1993 on 8 April, 14 July, 5 October, 11 October and 23 December. These representations included an analysis of applications for accommodation over the period 1989-90 to 1992-93, net expenditure on rent allowances 1990-91 to 1992-93 and projections of such expenditure to 1996-97. No such representations were received from Wandsworth borough council.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give an estimate of the number of single homeless people in England and Wales, and what proportion of these are women.

Sir George Young: My Department does not make estimates of the numbers of single homeless people. The only source of national data on persons sleeping rough is the 1991 census of population, which found 2,650 people doing so on census night—21-22 April—at a number of predetermined sites. Of these, 407—15 per cent.—were women.

For information on Wales, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will provide a breakdown of numbers of those accepted as statutorily homeless in England and Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available falling into different priority need categories; and what proportion in each category were women;

(2) how many people were accepted as statutorily homeless in England and Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what proportion of these were women.

Sir George Young: The numbers of households for which local authorities in England accepted responsibility to secure permanent accommodation in the year ending 30 September 1993, the latest 12 months for which figures are available, in each of the priority need categories is as follows:

	Number
Households with dependent children	81,250
Household member pregnant and no other dependent children	17,790
Household member vulnerable due to:
(a) old age	5,940
(b) physical disability	5,320
(c) mental illness/handicap	5,990
(d) other reasons	15,990
Households homeless in emergency	1,130
Total households in priority need	133,410
Households not in priority need	4,530
Total acceptances	137,940

Information is not collected on the composition of these households so the number of women in each category is not known and my Department has no estimates.

For information about Wales, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the issue of using homelessness as an indicator was first raised and by whom in the 1993 consultation with local authorities on the standard spending assessment settlement.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities in London, and their associations, have repeatedly raised the issue of using an indicator of homelessness in standard spending assessments since the inception of the system in 1990.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of people made homeless in England and Wales as a result of relationship breakdown, the proportion of these cases which involved domestic violence, and the proportion of those cited in the answers who were women, in the last year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: The latest available information provided by local authorities, on homeless households accepted for permanent rehousing, shows that 25,930 households in England lost their last settled home because of relationship breakdown with a partner in the year ending 30 September 1993, and that 67 per cent. of these were the result of violent breakdown.

Information is not collected by my Department on the composition of these households and so the number of women involved is not held centrally.

For information about Wales, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Housing Tenure

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which six local authorities gained most from the use of nature of housing tenure as an indicator for the purpose of standard spending assessment distribution.

Mr. Baldry: The top six authorities ranked in order of their score on each of the tenure of housing variables are as follows:

Ranking of authorities	Proportion of household residents under 16 years of age living in rented accommodation	Proportion of households living in rented purpose built flats in residential buildings	Proportion of household residents of pensionable age living in rented accommodation
1	Tower Hamlets	Tower Hamlets	Tower Hamlets
2	Southwark	Southwark	Islington
3	Islington	Hackney	Hackney
4	Camden	Islington	Southwark
5	Hackney	City of London	Camden
6	Lambeth	Lambeth	Westminster

These variables are used respectively in the children in need index, within the all other services block social index and the personal social services other social services index, and within the potential elderly domiciliary clients formula and the potential elderly supported residents formula.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has as to the impact of nature of housing tenure on local authorities need to spend on personal social services or the areas of spending covered by the all other services area.

Mr. Baldry: The district level all other services standard spending assessment and personal social services SSA both include housing tenure indicators. The inclusion of these measures was based on detailed statistical analysis. The results of this statistical analysis were discussed in the SSA subgroup meetings where all the local authority associations are represented. The report of the SSA sub-group for 1994-95 is in the Library.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities made representations to his Department seeking the use of nature of housing tenure as an indicator for the purpose of standard spending assessment distribution.

Mr. Baldry: Since my right hon. Friend announced details of the provisional revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95, no local authorities have made representations seeking the use of nature of housing tenure as an indicator in standard spending assessments.

Energy Industries

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment from what source the Energy Saving Trust will obtain its funding following the decision of the Director General of Gas Supply on the E factor.

Mr. Atkins: Funding for schemes sponsored by the Energy Saving Trust comes from a variety of sources. The Director General of Gas Supply has recently questioned longer-term reliance on the E factor mechanism as one of those sources. Officials from my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry are currently reviewing the position with the Office of Gas Supply.

Living Over the Shop

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the budget allocated to the Housing Corporation for living-over-the-shop initiatives; and how much of it has been spent.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation does not have a separate or ringfenced budget for flats-over-shops schemes. These form part of its overall investment in rehabilitation activities, financed from its approved development programme. Nevertheless, in 1993-94, it expects to invest £2·48 million in such schemes. To date, claims have been received for nearly 58 per cent. of this, and the corporation hopes to increase this percentage considerably by the end of the financial year. Although the Housing Corporation monitors spend on individual schemes, any underspend represents a shortfall against housing associations' intended programmes of works rather than against national targets as set by the Housing Corporation. In addition, this Department has made up to £10 million in supplementary credit approvals available to local authorities in 1993-94. Where SCAs are awarded, a grant to meet the renovation cost of the scheme will be made through a local authority housing association grant, administered by the Housing Corporation.

Minerals Planning Guidance

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those bodies or individuals who have responded to his consultation paper on minerals planning guidance.

Mr. Baldry: The consultation period for MPG3 is not yet over. I will place a list of those who respond to the consultation exercise together with a summary of their comments in the Library of the House in due course.

Temporary Accommodation

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were living in temporary accommodation in England and Wales on the most recent date for which figures are available; what proportion of these were women; and what proportion were accommodated in women's refuges.

Sir George Young: The latest available information shows that 56,900 households were in temporary accommodation on 30 September 1993, some 8,600—13 per cent.—fewer than a year earlier. These figures cover those households which are awaiting permanent rehousing after having been accepted by local authorities as homeless, and those awaiting the outcome of inquiries into an application, under the provisions of the 1985 Housing Act. Some 870 of these households were in women's refuges.

Local authorities do not report the composition of households in temporary accommodation to my Department and so the number who are women is not held centrally.

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Contractor Management Information

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 262, which other Departments use his Department's contractor management information system and the consultants register.

Mr. Baldry: Other Departments which use the contractor management information system and the consultants register are:

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
Central Office of Information
Crown Prosecution Service
Her Majesty's Customs and Excise
Ministry of Defence
Department for Education
Department of Employment
Department of the Environment—Northern Ireland
Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Department of Health
Home Office
Inland Revenue
Lord Chancellors Department
Department of National Heritage
Department of National Savings
Scottish Office
Department of Social Security
Department of Trade and Industry
Department of Transport
Welsh Office.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial means the Minister will employ to encourage efficiency and conservation improvements in the energy industries following the decision of the Director General of Gas Supply on the E factor.

Mr. Atkins: The energy industries are active in encouraging greater energy efficiency as part of their desire for greater competitiveness and in the interests of their consumers. The Government encourage these and other steps through their best practice programme and other means. The Energy Saving Trust is an independent body promoting energy efficiency. The intention is that funds for schemes sponsored by the Energy Saving Trust will continue to be derived principally from electricity and gas tariff consumers. The mechanisms for achieving this are under review.

Water and Sewage Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the average equated rate poundage for sewerage services for the areas covered by (a) Wales Water, (b) Severn Trent, (c) North West England and (d) Thames for 1992-93 and 1993-94 and the estimated figure for 1994-95;

(2) what was the average equated rate poundage for supply of water for the areas covered by (a) Wales Water, (b) Severn Trent, (c) North West England and (d) Thames for 1992-93 and 1993-94 and the estimated figure for 1994-95.

Mr. Atkins: Information on water and sewerage companies' tariffs and average charges is published annually in the Centre for the Study of Regulated Industries statistics series publication "The United Kingdom Water Industry—Charges for Water Services", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with Severn Trent Water regarding water disconnections.

Mr. Atkins: None. However, my right hon. Friend met the chairman of Severn Trent Water on 11 January, to discuss a range of topics relating to water charging issues.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring he is conducting of the number of people who have had water supplies disconnected in the Coventry area; how many households in Coventry have had their water disconnected in 1991-92 and 1992-93; and to what socio-economic categories those people belong.

Mr. Atkins: None. Responsibility for the protection of customers interests rests with the Director General of Water Services who publishes data on the total number of domestic disconnections twice a year, by water company area. Information on disconnections according to socio-economic categories is not available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for assisting consumers to avoid water disconnections.

Mr. Atkins: The Director General of Water Services issued guidelines to water companies in April 1992 on the subject of debt and disconnection, with the aim of ensuring fair and effective procedures to minimise the prospect of disconnection.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what complaints he has received in the last five years about the operations of the landlords of mobile home parks at Meriden hall; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Records are readily available for the last two and a half years. During that period, we have received four letters about the Meriden hall mobile homes park, two of which are from my hon. Friend. Both these letters concern the operations of landlords. The other two letters are about other matters. The most recent of these four representations is 12 March 1992.

Local Government (Redundancies)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to table his proposed amendments to the Local Government (Compensation for Redundancy and Premature Retirement) Regulations 1993.

Mr. Baldry: Regulations are being finalised in the light of the recent statutory consultation and will be introduced shortly.

Boundaries Review

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the results of his commissioner's review of the proposed boundaries for the constituencies in the county of Staffordshire.

Mr. Curry: The boundaries of parliamentary constituencies and the progress made by the Parliamentary Boundary Commission are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often in the next 12 months the new advisory group on sustainable development will be holding meetings (a) amongst themselves, (b) with representatives of non-governmental organisations, (c) with the Prime Minister and (d) with departmental green Ministers.

Mr. Atkins: The panel on sustainable development is expected to meet about four times a year. It will be for the members to decide what other meetings to arrange as their work progresses.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the programme of work of the advisory group on sustainable development.

Mr. Atkins: No. The panel on sustainable development will be drawing up its own work programme.

Careers Service

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the expenditure by each local education authority in respect of the careers service for each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have arranged for the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Rural Areas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list projects and programmes designed to benefit rural areas which involved co-operation between the Rural Development Commission and (a) the Countryside Commission, (b) the Department of Employment and (c) the English training and enterprise councils in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: The Rural Development Commission, together with the Countryside Commission and English Nature, jointly fund the rural action programme which was introduced in 1992 and is aimed at helping people in rural communities take action to protect and improve their local environment. The rural action programme will support nearly 400 projects in 1993-94. There are no formal joint programmes which are operated by the Rural Development Commission and the Department of Employment or the English TECs, but the commission operates a training and enterprise fund which provides support for training and economic development projects, often jointly with TECs. In the rural development areas the commisson provides funding for a wide range of economic and social projects in partnership with a number of other bodies including the Countryside Commission and TECs.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the policy documents, publications and consultation documents which set out the policy proposals of the Rural Development Commission produced in the last 10 years.

Mr. Atkins: The Rural Development Commission has published a number of policy documents over the last 10 years which could only be listed at disproportionate cost. The commission publishes an annual report and corporate plan each year. The most recent documents published which set out the policy proposals are:

Policy Documents

(1) "Rural Development Strategy for the 1990s"—first published in December 1993.
(2) "The Future of the Rural Development Programme Process"—December 1993.
(3) "Rural Development Areas"—December 1993.
(4) "The Rural Housing Problem"—November 1993.
(5) "Village Shops—A Report on Community Action"—July 1993.
(6) "Rural Strategies—Advice from the Countryside Commission, English Nature and the Rural Development Commission"—November 1992.
(7) "Countryside Employment Programme"—May 1992.
(8) "Tourism in the Countryside"—February 1992.

Consultation Documents

"Meeting the Challenge of Agricultural Adjustment"—July 1991.
"Review of the Rural Development Commission's Priority Areas"—June 1992.

In addition, the commission has published a number of research reports on policy issues. The most recent are:

(1) "Homelessness in Rural Areas"—March 1992 and February 1994.
(2) "Rural Transport Problems and Needs"—June 1993.
(3) "An Evaluation of the Housing Corporation Rural Programme"—November 1993.
(4) "Rural Development and Strategy Planning"—November 1993.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the publications giving details of partnership programmes between the Rural Development Commission and the (a) Countryside

Council, (b) Department of Employment and (c) English training and enterprise councils in which the voluntary sector can participate.

Mr. Atkins: The only programme operated jointly by the Rural Development Commission and the Countryside Commission is the rural action programme, funded by the Royal Development Commission, the Countryside Commission and English Nature. The programme is managed by Action with Communities in Rural England. The publications detailing the scheme are:

"Rural Action for the Environment—An Introduction"—available from ACRE.

"Rural Action for the Environment—A New Way of Working"—available from ACRE.

There are no partnership programmes run with the Department of Employment and TECS. The commission has, however, collaborated with the Countryside Commission and TECs, as well as other bodies, on a range of publications to assist development in the rural areas.

Drinking Water

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the levels of lead in drinking water.

Mr. Atkins: The Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989, as amended, require that drinking water at the point where the water is supplied contains no more than 50 microgrammes of lead per litre. This standard is more stringent than the requirements of the EC drinking water directive. In 1992 97 per cent. of determinations for lead in England and Wales measured in samples taken from consumers' taps contained less than this level. There is virtually no lead in water leaving the treatment works and most of that detected comes from contact with consumers' pipework.

Hedgerows

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action the Government propose to take to protect hedgerows.

Mr. Atkins: We remain committed to legislate when parliamentary time permits.

Air Pollution Control

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will make a statement about the 1994-95 charging scheme for local authority air pollution control under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Atkins: Charges to cover the costs of local enforcing authorities in regulating processes which are subject to part I of the Environmental Protection act 1990 were introduced in April 1991. With the approval of the Treasury, and following consultation with local authority associations and industry, my right hon. Friends the Secretary of state for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales have made a revised scheme specifying the scale of fees and charges to take effect from 1 April 1994. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is revising the identical, parallel scheme for Scotland on the same basis.

The application fee is increased by £30 to £965, the substantial change fee is increased by £20 to £620, and the annual subsistence charge is increased by £15 to £585. No change has been made to the remaining fees and charges. The scheme will be laid before both Houses and a copy placed in the Library.

As part of our deregulation review, we commissioned consultants to investigate the potential for bringing in a system of banded charges. I am placing a copy of their report in the Library. In the light of the report and in consultation with interested bodies, consideration will be given to introducing banded charges for the local authority air pollution control regime in 1995-96.

Building Regulation A4

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now repeal building regulation A4, relating to the safeguarding of certain public buildings, shops and shopping malls against disproportionate collapse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Following an extensive review the Government have concluded that the considerable enhancement in structural safety of buildings constructed in recent years has rendered regulation A4 superfluous to the stability and robustness provisions of requirement A1. Such enhancement in the integrity of building structures has resulted from substantial improvements in the quality of guidance material—principally British standards—supporting requirement A1, rather than the imposition of regulation A4. To some extent the guidance material supporting the material and workmanship provisions of regulation 7 has also improved the situation.

Considerable support for the repeal of regulation A4 was registered in the consultation exercise undertaken at the end of last year. The proposal for repeal has now been endorsed by the Building Regulations Advisory Committee.

It is the Government's view that the shortcomings that prevailed in the 1970s, which led to the introduction of regulation A4, have been addressed. This significant regulatory burden on the construction industry can now be removed without compromising public safety. An amendment to the building regulations incorporating this repeal will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible.

Offshore Oil Licensing

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 554, if he will list the blocks about which his Department expressed concern to the DTI during the 14th round of offshore licensing.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 March 1994]: No. The release of information about these blocks is a matter for the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many blocks his Department recommended be excluded from the 14th round of offshore oil licensing.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 March 1994]: My Department recommended that 22 blocks be excluded from the 14th round unless conditions were attached that would allow the prospecting and working of aggregates such that the national aggregates supply would not be jeopardised.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 28 February,

Official Report, column 554, if he will list all the areas of concern his Department asked the DTI to address in deciding which blocks to licence during the 14th round of offshore licensing.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 March 1994]: My Department expressed concern about blocks which were of considerable importance to the marine aggregates industry. We also drew attention to two areas which were in the vicinity of sites of special scientific interest.

English Nature

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the proposed merger of English Nature and the Countryside Commission; what is the timetable for a decision; and what he is doing to ensure that the interests of the landscape, recreation and those involved in economic development are given priority.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 7 March 1994]: Public consultation on the proposals for possible merger runs until 28 March. Few representations have been received to date. All aspects of the remits of the two bodies are being considered during the study announced on 27 January by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment which is expected to be completed by July. A decision will be taken as soon as possible thereafter.

Housing Investment Programmes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the housing investment programmes submitted to his Department indicated how many local authorities and housing associations fix rent levels by reference to the area of usable space in each type of dwelling; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [holding answer 8 March 1994]: Local authorities' housing strategy statements and housing investment programme bids are primarily concerned with the use of capital resources, and most contain relatively little information about the detail of council rent-setting policies.

Local authorities are required to set their rents at reasonable levels, and with regard to the pattern of rents for different properties in the private sector.

Housing associations set assured rents in the light of their own individual circumstances. Associations which are registered with the Housing Corporation are expected under the tenants guarantee to set and maintain rents at levels within the reach of those in low paid employment. In the case of housing association secure tenants, fair rents are set by rent officers who are statutorily independent of Government.

Sea Birds

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the extent of the research being conducted into the levels this year of deaths of sea birds in and around the shores of the United Kingdom; and what are the preliminary findings of the research.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 March 1994]: There is no co-ordinated research into the deaths of sea birds in and around the United Kingdom coasts. The Department's statutory conservation advisors consider that it is more useful to monitor large seabird colonies and selected individuals within those colonies when studying bird mortality and overall population levels.

Some of the birds washed up in the recent North sea incident have been taken for post mortem analysis and preliminary results indicate that starvation was the likely cause of death, possibly due to a combination of strong onshore winds which may have disturbed normal feeding activity and, perhaps, a mismatch between bird location and food availability.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 27 January, ref. GA PS0 2213/94.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 March 1994]: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 8 March.

HEALTH

Financial Information Project Ltd.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been given by her Department into the unauthorised transfer of £300,000 to the company FIP by West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: In January 1992, the former director of finance of West Midlands regional health authority made a loan of £300,000 to Financial Information Project Ltd. without reference to the RHA board. In March 1993, the loan was ratified by the West Midlands regional health authority board under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. The district auditor has stated that he is satisfied with the actions taken by the West Midlands regional health authority to regularise the payment. The loan is repayable at the direction of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Emergency Communications

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the savings in capital and revenue expenditure of establishing a nationwide managed network emergency communications service.

Mr. Sackville: A study to develop a strategy in the national health service for the provision of mobile communications, principally those used by the ambulance service, is planned to report in April 1994.

Discussions are taking place with the Home Department, which will continue throughout 1994, to examine the feasibility and cost advantages of implementing a communications facility shared by the police, fire and ambulance services.

GP Fundholders

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total sum of the budgets of those general practitioner fundholders who practise in (a) Lewisham and (b) London for the most recent available year.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information about general practitioner fundholder budgets is collected only at regional health authority level. For more detailed information about the London and Lewisham areas, the hon. Member may wish to contact the four Thames regional health authorities.

Sodium Valproate

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has correlating defects in the newborn with the ingestion of sodium valproate during pregnancy.

Mr. Sackville: Sodium valproate is a drug used in the treatment of epilepsy and like several other anti-epileptics is known to be teratogenic. Articles in the medical literature and spontaneous reports received by the Committee on Safety of Medicines indicate that there is an increased risk of birth defects in children whose mothers take anti-epileptics. In particular, the use of sodium valproate in early pregnancy is associated with neural tube defects. However, the risks to both mother and child of inadequate treatment of epilepsy during pregnancy are also well recognised and need to be balanced against the risk of birth defects. For this reason many women continue taking anti-epileptics during pregnancy.

The risk of birth defects with sodium valproate was drawn to the attention of doctors by the CSM in its bulletin, "Current Problems", No. 9, published in January 1983. A reminder was also issued in June 1993 in "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance", Volume 19. Information on birth defects associated with the use of anti-epileptic treatment can also be found in the product data sheets produced by the manufacturers and authorised by the Licensing Authority, and in the British National Formulary which is sent free to all doctors. Copies of "Current Problems" are available in the Library.

Manchester University Health Services Management Unit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has studied the survey by Mr. Michael West and Mr. Rod Sheaff of the health services management unit at Manchester university into issues of probity and honesty in the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes. The survey of attitudes towards issues of probity among national health service chairmen and board members was commissioned by the NHS Management Executive's corporate governance task force who expressed the view in their report:

"the attitudes of respondents to the survey, for the most part, supported a strict application of traditional rules of behaviour."

I welcome that finding which is the foundation for the NHS code of conduct issued for comment on 13 January 1994.

Directly-managed Hospitals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in England are currently directly-managed; how many there will be on 1 April; and what percentage of total bed provision will be represented by those directly-managed units.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are currently 137 directly-managed units; from 1 April there will be 22. Information giving the percentage of bed provision by current DMUs is not available.

Wharfedale and Seacroft Hospitals

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what public consultations took place before the decision to allow Wharfedale hospital to be taken over by the United Leeds hospital—LGI—trust.

(2) what budget adjustments are planned for the Leeds health authority and St. James hospital trust to reflect the transfer of responsibility for Seacroft hospital from one to the other;

(3) what budget adjustments are planned to reflect the transfer of responsibility for Wharfedale hospital from Leeds health authority to the United Leeds hospital—LGI—trust;

(4) what public consultations took place before the decision to allow St. James hospital trust to take over Seacroft hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: No decisions have yet been taken on future management arrangements for Seacroft and Wharfedale hospitals. The existing Leeds national health service trusts and the two hospitals are discussing proposals to reconfigure their services with the Department and the regional health authority. If expressions of interest are approved in principle, they will be subject to the full application process for NHS trust status, including statutory public consultation, before my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State makes her final decision. I have indicated that any proposals will need to ensure that acute services are provided at broadly the same volume on the Seacroft and Wharfedale sites and that the United Leeds teaching hospitals NHS trust and St. James's university hospital NHS trust provide those services but do not simply take over the hospitals.

Drug Abuse

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure by her Department for (a) drug rehabilitation and (b) health education in relation to drug abuse each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Bowis: The following sums have been or will be made available to health authorities as a contribution towards the cost of drug service provision generally:

	£ millions
1989-90	14·79
1990-91	15·53
1991-92	16·49
1992-93	20·04
1993-94	24·37
1994-95	25·23

A proportion of these resources will have been used to meet healthcare elements of rehabilitation costs. Responsibility for meeting remaining costs of residential care for drug misusers transferred from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security to local authorities on 1 April 1993 with implementation of community care. Local authorities are now responsible for assessing the needs of drug users and purchasing appropriate services to meet those needs.

Pregnancy Terminations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each district health authority in south Yorkshire, and by year from the last four years for which she has figures available, the proportion of terminations of pregnancy carried out under (a) the national health service and (b) the independent or private health services.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table for the years 1989 to 1992. For reasons of confidentiality, statistics for district health authorities are presented by DHA of woman's usual residence, not by DHA of termination.

St. Albans General Hospital

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on the minor injuries unit in St. Albans general hospital;

(2) if her Department will instruct North West Hertfordshire health authority to provide a minor injuries unit in St. Albans general hospital that is sufficient to meet the accident needs of 14,000 people;

(3) if she will publish correspondence between the right hon. Member for St. Albans (Mr. Lilley) concerning the minor injuries unit at St. Albans general hospital.

Mr. Sackville: The minor injuries unit at St. Albans hospital opened on 26 April 1993 and such has been its success that it is on course to treat 7,700 patients in its first year of operation. North West Hertfordshire health authority at its meeting on 17 February approved the further development of the unit as a nurse-led service which will enable the unit to treat up to 11,600 patients a year. The correspondence of the hon. Member for St. Albans, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security, is a matter between him and the Health Authority.

Hospital Catering

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 927, what considerations underlie her decision not to collect centrally information on the number of hospital trusts which operate two standards of category for patients, one of which requires a payment by a patient; if she will consider holding this information in future; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No. We have no plans to collect centrally detailed information on income generation initiatives of this kind.

Local Purchasing Plans

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice her Department has given to local authorities and health authorities on consultation with users and carers in producing local purchasing plans; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 clearly states that when drawing up their community care plans local authorities must consult representatives of users of community care services and their carers. In addition, the National Health Service Management Executive document "Local Voices" identified the approach that health authorities need to take to ensure that they involve the general public in their purchasing decisions. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Health wrote in January to all district health authorities emphasising the importance the Government attach to responsiveness to the views and needs of local people.

Mental Health

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce monitoring by the Mental Health Act Commission of arrangements made for the aftercare of patients covered by secion 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Bowis: The arrangements for implementation of section 117 are already monitored by the Mental Health Act Commission on its visits to hospitals and at meetings with health and local authorities.

Health Authorities

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what public relations agencies are employed by each of the regional and district health authorities to provide their public relations; what is the annual cost of this service to each of the health authorities; and how these costs have varied since the establishment of NHS trusts.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 16 February at column 866.

Patient Priority

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that the prioritisation of patients needing treatment should depend on their relative clinical needs rather than the financial circumstances of their general practitioners' budgets.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department and the joint consultants committee of the British Medical Association issued joint guidance in 1991 stating that all emergencies should be seen immediately, and that there should be common waiting lists for urgent cases. National Health Service Management Executive guidance states that all urgent cases should be given appropriate clinical priority. This was most recently set out in Sir Duncan Nichol's letter to the NHS dated 24 February, EL(94)19, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if it is Government policy that medical surgeons should be prevented from giving patients the treatment they need because of financial management;

(2) if she will make a statement on the recent findings from the survey of surgeons of the Royal College of Surgeons of England on the number of surgical divisions which had been told to stop or reduce activity.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no evidence of reduced activity. Overall activity is in fact forecast to increase this year. No hospitals have stopped admissions and cases continue to be treated according to clinical priority. All emergencies continue to be treated immediately.

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of apparent failure to report abortions have been investigated by her Department in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; in how many of those cases the matter was referred for further consideration by the Crown Prosecution Service; how many prosecutions were brought; how many convictions obtained; and what were the sentences awarded in each of those cases.

Mr. Sackville: There have been eight investigations. Four have been the subject of referral to the Crown Prosecution Service. In one, the CPS decided that police inquiries were not warranted after preliminary Department of Health investigation. A second case was not pursued further after the initial Department of Health investigation. Two cases are currently under consideration.

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each English local authority the level of special transitional grant that would have been paid if the 1993-94 formula for distribution had been applied to 1994-95, indicating for each authority the actual grant being paid for 1994; and if she will also state in each case the difference.

Mr. Bowis: The figures for individual authorities will be placed in the Library. The figures in columns 1 and 3 do not take account of the 1994-95 standard spending assessment review or of the boundary changes.

Children (Foreign Trips)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will produce a table showing the numbers of children who have taken foreign trips (a) by local authority social services department and (b) by length of stay.

Mr. Bowis: A great many children go on foreign visits. The Department does not collect statistics on this.

Population Statistics

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each five-year cohort in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland, the number of persons and the percentage of persons, who were born in (i) each of those countries, (ii) the Irish Republic, (iii) elsewhere in Europe, and (iv) elsewhere.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 7 March 1994]: Information for England and Wales, from the 1991 census, will be placed in the Library. Figures for Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each five-year cohort the number of persons resident in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland, who are members of each ethnic group; and what percentage this is in each case of the total number in each such cohort, together with her projections until 2010.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 7 March 1994]: Information for England and Wales, from the 1991 census, will be placed in the Library. Figures for Scottland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. No population projections are available by ethnic group.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

D-day Landings (Commemoration)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 793-94, if he will publish a list of the civilian events to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the D-day landings on 6 June, showing for each the date, location and estimated cost and intended public participation.

Mr. Sproat: Details of the Department of National Heritage's programme of civilian events will be announced in mid-April. Information about the large number of other events being planned in different parts of the country by various groups and individuals are available from the regional tourist boards.

Arts Council

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what was the remit of the Arts Council's cultural diversity unit; what were its objectives; and how such objectives will now be served;

(2) what was the remit of the Arts Council's disability unit; what were its objectives; and how those objectives will now be served.

Mr. Brooke: The Arts Council decided at its meeting in May 1993 to wind up in due course its strategic policy units covering cultural diversity, arts and disability and women in the arts, and to pass its continuing responsibilities to all relevant departments of the council.

I understand that the decision to integrate the work of the units with the art form departments reflects the fact that the units have largely succeeded in their aims of changing attitudes and awareness among funded bodies, and bringing about changes in the council's own practices.

The council will continue to take very seriously its commitment to these strategic policies in fulfilling its charter object to increase the accessibility of the arts to the public throughout the country.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage has two executive agencies. The chief executives of both agencies are currently paid less than £82,925.

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, column 791.

Mr. Sproat: My Department does not have a computer-aided facilities management system.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since it came into operation.

Mr. Sproat: My Department introduced a freepost facility in January 1994. It will be used when seeking advice or information from organisations, often of charitable status, whose members would provide their services free of charge, or when carrying out consultation exercises. Costs of the facility to date are £300. My Department does not operate a freephone facility.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much his Department spends on child care; on what provision the sum is spent; how many children receive the child care; and if he will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 7 March 1994]: The Department of National Heritage was established in April 1992.

In the 1993-94 financial year, this Department spent £1,650—excluding running costs—on child care. This provides one day care place in a nursery which opened in November 1993. In this instance, the place is subsidised as it can be justified in value-for-money terms.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of overall development assistance was accounted for by the aid and trade provisions each year since 1978.

Mr. Goodlad: The percentage of the gross aid programme taken up by ATP expenditure since 1978 is:

	Per cent.
1979-80	3·4
1980-81	2·6
1981-82	5·1

	Per cent.
1982-83	4·5
1983-84	2·5
1984-85	5·0
1985-86	3·0
1986-87	6·4
1987-88	3·7
1988-89	4·0
1989-90	4·0
1990-91	5·6
1991-92	5·4
1992-93	4·8

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been established by the Overseas Development Administration to ensure the proper use of aid and trade provision funds provided by his Department; and what powers of discovery Overseas Development Administratioin officials have in regard to access to records of foreign nationals involved in ATP projects.

Mr. Goodlad: Following the announcement of the aid and trade provision review on 17 June 1993, Official Report, columns 675-76, ODA appraisal, approval and monitoring procedures for ATP projects have been brought into line with those applied to other bilateral aid projects. Under the Government-to-Government ATP grant agreement, ODA has rights of access to information relevant to the ATP contract between the overseas Government and the contractors.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will investigate allegations that ATP funds, or other public funds provided through ODA programmes, have been used to bribe foreign officials or business men to secure contracts for British companies.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes. If there is any such evidence available, we do and will investigate any allegations.

United Nations High Commission for Refugees

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is giving to the general programmes budget of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in 1994.

Mr. Goodlad: My noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey has approved a grant of £6 million for UNHCR's general programmes budget for 1994. This follows our highest contribution ever in 1993, at over £50 million, to both UNHCR's general and special programmes budgets. We shall be continuing to monitor UNHCR's work and needs during the year with a view to responding appropriately to appeals as they issue.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the proportion of the aid budget for (a) 1989 and (b) 1994 taken up by the funding for the Pergau dam scheme in Malaysia.

Mr. Goodlad: The estimated percentage of the aid budget taken up by the funding of the Pergau project in the financial year 1993-94 is 0·8 per cent. There was no expenditure on the project in 1989-90.

Overseas Aid Projects

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the build quality and value for money of (a) the Rihand power station in Uttar Pradesh, (b) Burri power station in Sudan, (c) the north Khartoum power station in Sudan, (d) the Ashuganj power station in Bangladesh, (e) the Pergau dam in Malaysia and (f) the Samanalawewa dam in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Under ODA guidelines we appraise and monitor the technical soundness of projects—including their "build quality"—and, whenever appropriate, we undertake contract price investigations to ensure value for money. The following build quality and value for money assessments have been made on the projects listed:

(a) Construction at Rihand power station in India was assessed through ODA monitoring visits and reports during the successful completion of the project. Very high performance indicators for both production and on-line availability of the station indicate a good build quality. Operating costs per kilowatt hour generated by Rihand rank amongst the lowest of recently built coal fired power stations in India.

(b) and

(c) The Burri and Khartoum power stations in Sudan have been evaluated by ODA who concluded that the appropriateness of plant design was correct. There was competitive bidding for the two power stations among United Kingdom companies.

(d) The Ashuganj generating plant in Bangladesh was commissioned in 1982 following United Kingdom competitive bidding. ODA evaluated the project in 1990 and, although there were operational difficulties, the evaluation concluded that the appropriateness of plant design was broadly correct and that it had been well engineered.

(e) The quality of the design and construction of the Pergau project in Malaysia, which is about 50 per cent. complete, is good. A comprehensive value for money check was carried out before signature of the contract.

(f) Construction of the components of the Samanalawewa dam in Sri Lanka part-funded by the United Kingdom —the engineering design, the tunnelling work, and the construction of the powerhouse—were assessed through ODA monitoring visits and regular reports from the United Kingdom contractors during the implementation of the project. Value-for-money checks were undertaken on the tenders for this work. Construction work not covered by the United Kingdom, including the dam itself, is the responsibility of the Japanese co-financiers.

TRANSPORT

M11 Link Road

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contractual provisions apply to compensation to the contractors undertaking security work in respect of the M11 link road if the contract is cancelled.

Mr. Norris: The contract is let under the Institute of Civil Engineers conditions of contract which provide for determination. The form of contract between the main contractor and the security subcontractor is not for me to decide.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the M11 link road contract 4 complies in every respect with the procedure previously used by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: All procedures, including those to comply with EC directives, have been used by the Department to procure this work in the same way as previous contracts.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conditions apply to the payment of legal costs in relation to the possession of the construction sites for the M11 link road.

Mr. Norris: Each party bears its own legal costs incurred in the pursuance of court orders unless the court makes an order as to costs or legal aid is available.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conditions applied to the payment of security guards and policing of the construction site in respect of the M11 link road contract 4.

Mr. Norris: The contract provides for specific security measures which are included in the contract price and also for extraordinary security measures to be charged against a contingency item in the contract where the engineer considers it appropriate.

Oil Wastes (Ships)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the capacity required for the receipt and storage of oil wastes for ships at each United Kingdom port.

Mr. Norris: The Prevention of Pollution (Reception Facilities) Order 1984—SI 1984-862—requires harbour authorities and terminal operators in the United Kingdom to provide oil reception facilities for ships that are adequate to meet their needs without causing undue delay. Advice and guidance on the assessment of the type and capacity of facilities needed to satisfy the provisions of the order are contained in merchant shipping notice No. M1462.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the capacity of facilities at each United Kingdom port for the storage of oily wastes from ships.

Mr. Norris: Information on oil reception facilities in United Kingdom ports, collected by the Department of Transport, is contained in the International Maritime Organisation circular MEPC/Circ.234, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Northern Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the refurbishment of trains, track and signalling on the Northern line; and what meetings he has had with London Transport on this.

Mr. Norris: I have received representations on this matter from a wide range of interests, including manufacturers, Members of Parliament, and members of the public. I have discussed it on a number of occasions with the chairman of London Transport.

Transport Links (Ireland)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to undertake a study of combined transport links with Ireland; whether local authorities are to be consulted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Irish and United Kingdom Governments have jointly appointed Mercer Management Consulting Ltd., in association with Indecon International Economic Consultants, to examine the potential for commercially viable combined transport services between Ireland, the United Kingdom and mainland Europe, as part of the EC Commission's PACT—pilot actions for combined transport—initiative.

A number of local authorities have expressed an interest in the study and the consultants will be approaching them in due course.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Norris: My Department does not keep a central record of the use made of freephone and freepost services and could not say what use might have been made of these services in the past. From inquiries made within the Department we have not been able to trace any use of the services at present.

Red Routes

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which organisations are exempt from the parking restrictions imposed on red routes; and if he will list for each organisation the reasons why.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

vehicles being used for the provision of a London bus service, while waiting at an authorised stopping place or stand;

vehicles displaying a current disabled person's badge, when stopping for the purpose of enabling people with disabilities to board or alight from the vehicle;

Royal Mail liveried vehicles engaged in the collection or delivery of letters in accordance with the statutory duty of the Post Office for the provision of services for the conveyance of letters; licensed cabs stopping for the purpose of enabling a person to board or alight from the vehicle or to load or unload their personal luggage; vehicles waiting at any place for so long as may be necessary for the purpose of giving help required as a result of an accident or emergency or taking other action in the interests of public safety; vehicles required by law to stop, or obliged to stop in order to avoid an accident, or prevented from proceeding by circumstances beyond the driver's control; vehicles when used for fire brigade, ambulance or police purposes; vehicles waiting with the permission or at the discretion of a police constable in uniform.

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the definitions of loading and unloading for vehicles using the prescribed loading bays on red routes.

Mr. Norris: Loading and unloading is not defined in any statute; it would be for the courts to determine any disputed cases.

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration his Department has given to the impact red routes will have on courier companies and the businesses they serve.

Mr. Norris: Red routes will improve traffic conditions for all road users so that people and goods can move around the capital more easily. Courier firms and the businesses they serve will benefit from more reliable journey times and improved parking and loading arrangements on London's main roads.

British Rail

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to lay before the House orders affecting railway pensions as provided for by the Railways Act 1993.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to lay these orders between Easter and the summer recess, following consultation with the pension scheme trustees and other interested parties, including the railway trade unions.

Infrastructure Investment

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a breakdown by mode, year on year, of Government investment in Britain's transport infrastructure for the period 1979 to 1995.

Mr. MacGregor: Government transport expenditure plans have enabled investment shown in the table. The latest expenditure plans were published on 10 March in the "Transport Report 1994", Cmnd. 2506.

The Prime Minister: Sir Peter Levene will take no part in Government consideration of any issue which could involve a conflict of interest for him. There will be a review every six months of any prospective issues which could raise such a conflict so that appropriate arrangements can be made.

Official Gifts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 162, what happens to moneys raised from the sale of official gifts received by recent Prime Ministers.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 March 1994]: Gifts of small value are the property of the Prime Minister; the use of the proceeds from the sale of any such items is therefore a matter for the Prime Minister of the day to determine. Both my predecessor and I have made it our practice to donate all proceeds to charity. If any gifts from the official inventory were sold, the proceeds would accrue to official funds.

Office Costs

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what was the annual total cost of the Prime Minister's office in each year (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1990.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Figures on a consistent basis are not available. Information on the total costs of the Prime Minister's office is not available before 1979-80. Spending in 1979-80 is recorded as £1.409 million, but that did not include charges for: the use of MOD aircraft; the use of buildings and for services supplied by the Property Services Agency and its successors; the use of the Government car service; the service personnel at Chequers; or for office services supplied by the Cabinet Office.

The present No. 10 budget now includes charges for all these services. On that basis, the total annual cost for the completed financial years since 1990 has been as follows:

Year	£ thousands
1990-91	8,226
1991-92	8,664
1992-93	9,866

These figures show payments made in the years in question. In some cases, this may relate to expenditure incurred in the previous financial year.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his question of 11 January, relating to expenditure of his Office.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 March 1994]: I have done so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the flexibility of the limits on therapeutic work for recipients of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: We are considering the flexibility of the therapeutic work provisions in the context of the conditions which will apply to incapacity benefit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the amount of voluntary work that may be disregarded in considering entitlement to invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: We have received a number of representations. One of the measures introduced by the Social Security (Incapacity For Work) Bill will allow people receiving incapacity benefit or severe disablement allowance to do up to 16 hours voluntary work a week without it affecting their benefit.

Elderly People

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of over-80s who are not entitled to the basic retirement pension; how much it would cost for them to be provided with one; what help they will receive towards value added tax on their fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: It is estimated that approximately 75,000 persons in Great Britain who are aged 80 or over do not receive a basic state retirement pension. The estimated net cost of providing standard rate basic retirement pension to them is approximately £85 million per year at April 1994 prices.

Those not in receipt of basic pension but who receive income support will receive an additional 50p per week —single people—or 70p per week—couples. Those not in receipt of basic pension or income support but who receive the non-contributory retirement pension, available to persons aged 80 and over, will receive an additional 20p per week.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley will receive replies to his letters to the chief executive of the Child Support Agency of 16 November and 12 January.

Mr. Burt: I understand that Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive of the Child Support Agency, replied to the hon. Member on 9 March 1994.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual numbers with (a) terminal illness, (b) a prescribed condition and (c) the highest rate of the care component of disability living allowance who should be considered for fast-tracking to the higher rate of incapacity benefit.

Mr. Scott: We are considering this issue.

Income-related Benefits

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reconsider the rules for the treatment of capital made by the DSS in its calculation that for every £250 of saving, or part of £250, over and above £3,000 there could be a reduction of £1 in benefits payable.

Mr. Burt: The arrangements for the treatment of capital in the income-related benefits are kept under review, but we have no plans for change at present. The formula applied for taking account of capital above £3,000 does not imply any particular return on investments. It ensures that help is targeted on those who need it most, while not denying benefit to those with only a moderate amount of capital.

Value Added Tax (Fuel)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the number of pensioners in their eighties who will receive less than pensioners in their sixties to compensate for the extra cost of VAT on their fuel bills; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many pensioners in their eighties have no entitlement to a basic retirement pension and how many are in receipt of a special over-80s pension; and what addition they will receive towards the additional cost of VAT on fuel.

Mr. Hague: It is estimated that approximately 75,000 persons in Great Britain who are aged 80 or over do not receive a basic state retirement pension and that approximately 28,000 people aged 80 or over receive a non-contributory retirement pension.

Extra help towards VAT on fuel for those aged 80 or over will be available on the same general basis as for all persons of pensionable age, with the exception that those not in receipt of basic pension or income support but who receive a non-contributory retirement pension, available only to persons aged 80 or over, will receive total extra help of 20p per week.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what compensation for VAT on fuel will be paid to married women with an entitlement to a reduced retirement pension based on their own contributions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) on 28 February at column 615.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much will be added to war disablement pensions to compensate for the additional costs of VAT on fuel; how much will be received by a war widow also in receipt of a retirement pension towards the additional cost of VAT on fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The basic war disablement pension will not be increased beyond normal price indexation. The majority of war disablement pensioners are over pension age and will receive extra help through retirement pension; others will gain through invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance. War pensioners who choose to receive war pension unemployability supplement instead of retirement pension will receive the same extra help as retirement pensioners.

The standard war widows pension will be increased by 50p a week on top of the normal uprating. A war widow who also receives, as a result of her own contributions, the full basic retirement pension, will receive a further 50p a week compensation.

Disabled People

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the preliminary findings of the cost-benefit analysis of legislation to outlaw discrimination against disabled people undertaken by his Department; and when he expects to publish the full findings.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available. A cost-benefit analysis has not been prepared. Should the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill reach Committee stage, a compliance cost assessment will be provided in the normal way.

EDUCATION

Student Numbers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimates he made of the numbers of students on two-year higher education courses before his recent announcement of notional tuition fee levels for 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's expenditure plans, including tuition fee levels, announced at the time of the Budget allowed for a specified total number of students in higher education. In order to translate total numbers into the numbers of new entrants, it is necessary to make assumptions about a number of factors, including the average length of courses. However, the number of students on two-year higher education courses was not separately assessed or identified.

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, column 841.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has no computer-aided facilities management systems. The information provided on 16 February shows a decline in 1993 in the incidence of theft.

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Employee Share Schemes

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue next intends to publish updated guidance on approved employee share schemes, to replace versions dated 1991, and updated guidance on profit-related pay to replace the present editions published five years ago.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue published revised versions of its booklets and leaflets on approved employee share schemes on 7 March. Revision of the guidance notes on profit-related pay is currently under consideration.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how soon he expects to announce details of the introduction and operation of approved employee share schemes and of statutory employee share ownership plans up to the end of March 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue expects to issue the latest figures on the introduction and operation of approved employee share schemes in April 1994—and annually in April thereafter. Similar information for statutory employee share ownership plans is not available.

Inland Revenue (Information Technology Office)

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if employees of the information technology office of the Inland Revenue will benefit from civil service redundancy arrangements if they refuse to relocate consequent upon their being taken over by a private contractor.

Mr. Dorrell: If employees of the Inland Revenue's information technology office transfer with their work to a private company as a result of the current procurement which forms part of the Department's market-testing programme, it is expected that the transfer will be within the scope of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. This means that current terms and conditions of employment will transfer to the new employer. If, following the transfer, the new employer asked employees to relocate, those employees whose terms and conditions did not include a mobility requirement would not be obliged to do so unless the new location was within reasonable daily travelling distance of their home. If the new employer was unable to offer alternative jobs to non-mobile employees, as a last resort they could be made redundant.

Amusement with Prizes Machines

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue currently accrues to the Treasury from amusement with prizes and jackpot machines from each main category of premises on which they are located.

Sir John Cope: An estimated breakdown of gaming machine licence duty for 1992-93 is as follows:

Amusement with prizes	£ million
Pubs	33
Inland arcades	15
Seaside arcades	13
Bingo halls	12
Single sites	3
Others	7
Total amusement with prizes	83
Jackpot machines	15
Total gaming machine licence duty	98

There is no breakdown for jackpot machines.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what calculations he has made as to the potential revenue that would accrue to the Treasury in respect of amusement with prizes machines in licensed betting offices.

Sir John Cope: No calculations have been made.

Licensed Betting Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what calculations the Treasury has made as to the potential loss in tax revenue from licensed betting offices as a consequence of competition from the national lottery.

Sir John Cope: A duty rate of 12 per cent. is to apply to national lottery stakes. This rate has been set so as broadly to offset the anticipated revenue loss from expenditure diverted from other taxed goods. Any attempt to apportion this revenue loss between different taxes would be purely speculative.

Taxation

Sir David Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, columns 825-26, if he will give the percentages of earnings taken in income tax and national insurance contribution from a single-wage married couple at (a) half,

(b) three quarters, (c) average, and (d) twice average male manual earnings, in the years 1990-91, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is in the table:

Income tax and national insurance contributions[1] as a percentage of gross earnings

Multiple of average earnings[2]	1978-79	1990-91	1992-93	1993-94
Half average earnings	14·1	12·8	11·6	12·1
Three quarters average earnings	22·4	19·9	19·0	19·2
Average earnings	26·7	23·4	22·8	22·9
Twice average earnings	31·2	26·1	26·1	26·4

[1] National insurance contributions are at the standard class 1 rate for employees not contracted-out of the state additional—earnings-related—pension scheme. Tax has been calculated assuming that no allowances or reliefs are available other than the standard allowance.

[2] Average earnings are taken to be the gross weekly manual earnings of full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are £244·50 and £272·00 in 1990-91 and 1992-93 respectively. In 1993-94 these are estimated to be £281·50 using an illustrative growth rate of 3·5 per cent.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish for each year since 1978 a table showing (a) average earnings and (b) income tax liability on taxable income equal to (i) one quarter average earnings, (ii) one half average earnings, (iii) average earnings, (iv) five times average earnings, (v) 10 times average earnings and (vi) 100 times average earnings.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is in the tables. Because taxable income excludes income covered by allowances, the gross incomes of taxpayers with these levels of taxable income would be significantly higher. The figures show that tax liability as a proportion of taxable income has fallen at all income levels over this period.

[1] Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. The figure for 1993-94 is based on an illustrative assumption of 3·5 per cent. growth over 1992-93.

[2] Assuming all income is earned and that taxable income—income for income tax purposes less allowances and reliefs available at the taxpayer's marginal rate—is equal to the multiple of average earnings shown.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of a 20 per cent. basic rate of income tax in (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1995-96.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates based on a projection of the 1991-92 survey of personal incomes are given.

Revenue cost compared with a basic rate of 25 per cent. in a full year

	£ billion
1993-94	7·8
1994-95	9·2
1995-96	9·7

Personal Allowances

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the revenue cost to the Exchequer of the personal allowances in 1993-94, 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97 in constant 1994 prices.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates for 1993-94 and 1994-95 based on information about individuals on Inland Revenue records are given. These costs exclude the value of personal allowances to some individuals whose income is below the tax threshold. The costs for later years will depend on allowance levels for those years.

Revenue cost of personal allowances[1] in a full year at constant 1994-95 prices

	£ billion
1993-94[2]	33·1
1994-95[2]	31·1

[1] This includes the personal allowance, the married couple's allowance and the linked allowances, and the blind person's allowance.
[2] Assuming that prices increase by 2 per cent. in 1993-94 and 3·25 per cent. in 1994-95 in line with the illustrative assumptions in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95.

Married Couple's Allowance

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue saving of the abolition of the married couple's allowance in (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1995-96.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Exchequer of the married couples allowance in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 1 March 1994]: The estimated costs in a full year are given in the table:

Year	[1]Cost £ billion
1993-94	5·0
1994-95	3·9
1995-96	3·1

[1] Includes the cost of allowances related to the married couples allowance, namely the additional personal allowance and the widow's bereavement allowance.

Incomes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a table showing (a) the total number of taxpayers, (b) the number of taxpayers with incomes in excess of £100,000 and (c) the percentage of taxpayers with incomes in excess of £100,000 for (i) each region and (ii) each county of the United Kingdom for each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates for each region in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, the latest year for which information is available below United Kingdom level, are included in the first table. Married couples are counted as one unit in 1989-90 prior to the introduction of independent taxation. The second table includes estimates of the total number of taxpayers in each county in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92. All estimates are derived from the survey of personal incomes and the size of the survey limits the extent to which reliable estimates can be given at the county level for taxpayers with incomes over £100,000. The third table gives approximate numbers and percentages in 1991-92 for those counties estimated to have at least 500 taxpayers with incomes over £100,000.

Alcohol and Tobacco Imports

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the European directive relating to the importation of wine, spirits and tobacco products by postal or other services without carriage by those claiming importation for personal consumption.

Sir John Cope: Excisable goods cannot be imported into the United Kingdom by post or otherwise without paying United Kingdom rates of duty on them, except when the goods are accompanied by the purchaser and are for his or her personal consumption.

Coronation Crown

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, columns 271-72, what were the results from monitoring the sales of the £5 coronation crown before and after the advertising campaign.

Mr. Nelson: Research showed that the advertisements increased public awareness of the circulating standard £5 coronation anniversary crown. There were also significant increases in the number of crowns issued after the advertisements appeared. Total issues of 1·7 million coins were therefore higher than they would otherwise have been.

Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will call for a report from LAUTRO as to how many life assurance salesmen have left the register during 1993; for what reasons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I understand that LAUTRO recorded a net decrease of around 48,000 salesmen from the register during 1993. It believes that this reduction reflets mainly the higher standards now required by virtue of the training and competence arrangements introduced in April 1993.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the public sector borrowing requirement was funded from overseas in each year since 1991.

Mr. Nelson: Data on "External and foreign currency financing of the public sector" are published by the Central Statistical Office in "Economic Trends" in the table "Counterparts to changes in money stock M4".

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 96, if he will provide whatever information is available of those occasions on which he, or other Ministers in his Department now or in the past, have signed public interest immunity certificates, and for what reasons.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member on 9 March 1994, Official Report, column 223.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his estimate of the net cost to the Treasury of providing legal aid in personal injury cases (a) at all levels of claim and (b) for claims of up to £2,500.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is estimated that in the financial year 1992-93 the net cost to the legal aid fund of all personal injury cases was £25 million. It is not possible to break this down according to size of the claim. Other factors, such as the cost to the court service and legal aid administration, and the impact on the Department of Social Security's compensation recovery unit, none of which can be readily quantified, also have a bearing on the total net cost to the Exchequer of such cases.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Frederick West

Mr. Bates: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received over the media coverage of the arrest and subsequent court proceedings against Frederick West in Gloucester magistrates court.

The Solicitor-General: Representations have been made to my office by solicitors representing both Mr. West and his wife in respect of certain published material. They were both arrested on 25 February 1994 and at that time the proceedings became "active" within the meaning of paragraph 4 of schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981. Mr. West is now charged with three offences of murder and his wife is on police bail. Proceedings therefore remain "active" in relation to both. Editors are under a legal obligation not to publish material which gives rise to a substantial risk of serious prejudice in the proceedings. I shall consider any material submitted to me in the context of the 1981 Act and other relevant legislation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plugs and Sockets

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether there is a deliberative process within the EC's current policy formulation within the field of telecommunications that might lead to the standardisation of plugs and sockets for the connection of consumer equipment to (a) the public switched telephone network, (b) the integrated services digital network and (c) the public data networks.

Mr. McLoughlin: I can confirm that deliberative processes on possible standardisation of plugs and sockets are at different stages depending on the network and method of access used. For (a), the public switched telephone network, study by the Commission and the European Telecommunications Standards Institute remains at the information-gathering stage. On (b), requirements for direct attachment to the integrated services digital network have been technically defined prior to final adoption. For (c), any public data networks not covered by (a) and (b) above, there is much less clear agreement at the European level on the extent to which public data networks should be harmonised and deliberative processes have not advanced to any extent so far.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in table form (a) the number of commercial advisers, brokers and underwriters his Department has employed in preparation for coal privatisation, (b) the names of such commercial advisers, brokers, underwriters, etc. and (c) the fees and commission (i) already paid and (ii) projected to such companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: N M Rothschild and Son Ltd. is employed as the Department's financial advisers on coal privatisation. Payments to the company are commercially confidential. My Department currently employs no brokers or underwriters in connection with coal privatisation.

English Estates (Copeland)

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total amount spent by English Estates in providing new factory premises and serviced sites in Copeland since June 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: English Estates has spent £4·1 million in Copeland.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many acres of serviced industrial land have been provided by English Estates in Copeland since 1991 under the Cumbria special support initiative announced by the Government in June 1991.

Mr. Sainsbury: English Estates has bought 49 acres of land of which 26 acres have been serviced.

Post Offices

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 165, what plans the Post Office has to franchise the operation of Irvine and Kilwinning Crown post offices; and if he will make it his policy not to franchise the operation of these two Crown post offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that there are no present plans to franchise the operation of either Irvine or Kilwinning Crown post offices, but, if suitable opportunities arose, they do not preclude conversion of these offices to agency status. Decisions on the conversion of individual Crown post offices are an operational matter for the Post Office.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 168, how many Post Office staff have left the Post Office under voluntary redundancy terms.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that records of voluntary redundancies are not held centrally and the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which post offices in Scotland are currently being considered for franchising; and within which parliamentary constituency each lies.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that local consultations prior to conversion to agency status have taken place in respect of the following post offices in Scotland:

Post Office	Parliamentary constituency
Peterhead	Banff and Buchan
Kirkcaldy	Kirkcaldy
Stranraer	Galloway and Upper Nithsdale

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: Comprehensive information about the Department's use of toll-free telephone lines is not collated centrally; but the Department currently operates three national toll-free telephone inquiry services. Their purposes and costs are as follows:

ENTERPRISE INITIATIVE HELPLINE (0800 500 200)
The line provides information and a single, comprehensive ordering point for literature about the Department's services for business.

The service is bought in. Since its establishment costs have been as follows:

Year	£
1987-88	67,000
1988-89	106,700
1989-90	163,600
1990-91	166,400
1991-92	120,500
1992-93	124,200
1993-94	118,000

ENVIRONMENTAL ENQUIRY POINT (0800 585 794)
The line provides United Kingdom businesses with an information and signposting service on environmental issues.

The service is operated by Warren Spring Laboratory. Its costs, excluding staff costs, since inception have been as follows:

1990-91	2,076
1991-92	3,311
1992-93	4,184
1993-94	2,262

INNOVATION ENQUIRY LINE (0800 44 2001)
The purpose of the line is to help raise awareness about innovation by providing a single telephone contact for those seeking information about the Department's innovation services, and to dispatch relevant literature and/or signpost inquirers to other sources of help.

The line is operated in house. Its costs, excluding staff costs, since establishment have been as follows:

1991-92	3,700
1992-93	[1]3,700
1993-94	5,400

Free-post arrangements are made from time to time according to need, but details are not held centrally.

Radio Spectrum

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the report of the stage 3 radio spectrum review committee; and if he will make a statement on the future management of the radio spectrum.

Mr. Heseltine: The stage 3 radio spectrum review committee, chaired by Sir Colin Fielding and examining use of the spectrum from 28 to 470 MHz, has completed its task and I am pleased to announce that, in agreement with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Defence, Home Affairs, Scotland and National Heritage, I am today publishing the Committee's report. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

The review was initiated as part of a rolling programme recommended by the Merriman committee, to audit present use of the radio spectrum, to analyse emerging developments and to assess potential new demands. The report addresses both civil and military use of the spectrum, and builds on previous work by the stage 1 and stage 2 spectrum review committees which examined use of the spectrum from 470 to 3400 MHz and 3400 MHz to 30 GHz respectively.

I am sure that industry, commerce, service providers and users will all welcome this comprehensive analysis of the current uses and future demands of one of the most congested portions of the radio spectrum. Growth in mobile radio services and increasing competition in the provision of all manner of telecommunication services make this part of the spectrum of vital interest to the economic and social welfare of our nation.

Sir Colin Fielding and members of the committee are to be congratulated on completing a comprehensive analysis of a complex and heavily used part of the spectrum. I am especially pleased that they have included management aspects of the spectrum under review, and addressed the potential of new technology as a means of making more efficient use of this scarce and valuable resource.

The Government will now give careful consideration to the Committee's recommendations and will respond to the report in due course. The recommendations on spectrum management and the role of the Radiocommunications Agency have implications that go beyond the part of the spectrum that was the subject of the review and the Government would now like to promote a wide-ranging discussion on these important matters. A consultative document on the future management of the radio spectrum will be published shortly. This will address the important issue of how to make more efficient use of the radio spectrum. This is the key to stimulating innovation and competition in the supply of radio services and boosting competitiveness through the increased use of radio technology. I will arrange for copies of the document to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

The decison to publish a consultative document means that it would not be appropriate for the Government to respond fully to the spectrum review recommendations until the end of the consultation period for the consultative document.

Letters (Delivery)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) first class and (b) second class letters were delivered by how many postmen or postwomen in the past year; at what cost; what were the comparable figures, five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 9 March 1994]: I understand from the Post Office that the information requested is as follows:

Year	First class letters Million	Second class letters Million	Postmen/ women Thousands	Total cost £ million
[1]1993-94	6,454	9,456	125·5	3,968
1988-89	6,067	7,137	132·9	2,539
1983-84	4,398	5,790	129·0	2,661
1978-79	3,620	5,718	125·5	1,410

[1] Budget figures for 1993-94.

Prior to 1986-87 letters and parcels prepared combined accounts and it is therefore difficult to draw comparisons between the present business performance and that of 10 and 15 years ago.

The staff numbers given are for those actually in post at the financial year-end and are not the average number in post during the year. Part-timers have been included on the basis of a 0·5 full-time equivalent.

Direct comparisons of costs over the period could be misleading as there have been changes in accounting procedures and in the classification of costs during the period.

Cable Networks

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that extensions to cable networks in the United Kingdom are carried out in rural areas as well as business and urban areas.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 8 March 1994]: I am keen to see the benefits of cable TV and telephony extended to as many communities as possible. Some existing cable TV franchises, under which the franchisee must make services available to every home, already cover rural as well as urban areas. The new franchising arrangements in the Broadcasting Act 1990 were specifically designed to encourage the extension of cable TV to semi-rural and rural areas, by giving franchisees the option of using radio as well as cable to deliver services, and allowing applicants to tailor build programmes to local conditions. The Independent Television Commission advertises new franchises where a credible interest in providing services has been received.

Fibre Optic Cable System

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects that a fibre optic cable system will cover all areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 8 March 1994]: The Government's policy of promoting competition in telecommunications infrastructure is encouraging a large number of companies to install modern telecoms networks. The inter-exchange elements of the networks installed by BT, Mercury and Energis are already almost exclusively optical fibre. So are an increasing number of the links to individual businesses. Cable TV companies are installing optical fibre well down the network towards individual homes. I expect to see these trends accelerate. However, it is not for the Government to require the use of any particular technology. It is for telecoms operators to decide whether and when it is economic to use optical fibre or other technologies such as coaxial copper cable, copper wire, radio or satellite.

EMPLOYMENT

Ballots (Industrial Action)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the judgment between Blackpool and Fylde college and the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education and its implications for trade union members and trade unions in conducting ballots for industrial action.

Miss Widdecombe: It is for the courts to decide, on the facts of each individual case, whether or not a union has complied with the requirements of the law on the organisation of industrial action.

Sheltered Employment

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes will be made to the funding arrangements for sheltered employment following the responses to the Employment Service's sheltered employment funding system consultative document; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My hon. Friend the Minister of State announced to the House, on 28 June 1993, Official Report, columns 345-46, a consultation process on the funding of sheltered employment provided through local authorities and voluntary bodies. The arrangements for Remploy agreed in 1992 are unaffected. This consultation is now complete and we have received many helpful comments, which we have considered carefully.

The main changes that will now be introduced are:

To set up formal contracts with targets, between the Employment Service and providers, to make explicit what is expected and to improve the effectiveness of our expenditure; Contracts will be for three years in principle, with annual renegotiation of details, and with arrangements for termination at six months' notice where specific reasons are given;

Providers will be free to switch provision between factory places and placements, and between wage subsidies and other forms of support, provided minimum contract terms are met and cash limits are observed;

Determining maximum grant by a formula derived from what it would cost to support someone with a specified productivity level at specified earnings in an employer placement;

Increasing maximum grants per head to local authorities to the level offered to voluntary bodies; this will involve a small transfer of resources from the revenue support grant;

All clients to have development plans regularly reviewed with providers;

Subsuming the sheltered workshop training budget, currently focused on a few people, into the general grant for the programme;

Host firms are to be allowed, and encouraged, to be legal employers of a client where this is in the client's interests;

Encouraging better assessment, including more thorough exploration of alternatives, for those being considered for sheltered employment and, where appropriate, more progression to open employment;

Contracts will specify a minimum number of places overall for a block grant—based on a maximum revenue grant per head; providers will be encouraged to offer more places and better quality through greater efficiency.

These changes will ensure that as many severely disabled people as possible are supported from the resources available, and that provision is better targeted.

As we discussed in our consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities", there is need to consider whether the balance of places in sheltered workshops should be moved more towards sheltered placements. Further details were promised once decisions were made on funding.

The balance between different forms of provision must respond to the assessed needs and the wishes of disabled people, and be decided in discussion between the ES and our local authority and voluntary body partners. Those needs and wishes can best be established locally. We intend, therefore, to proceed, not by setting national targets for different kinds of provision, but through the ES and providers discussing the right balance for particular localities when contracts are reviewed annually.

In deciding the balance between workshop places and employer placements, we propose that regard should be paid to the following principles:

The need to provide as many work opportunities, over as wide a range of occupations as possible and to the full range of eligible disabled people;

The need to meet the wishes of very many severely disabled people to work alongside non-disabled people in integrated conditions;

The need also to provide work in sheltered conditions for those who require it.

We recognise that if, in a particular situation, it is agreed that the balance of provision should be changed in favour of placements, this might involve providers in extra costs in implementing the changes. We are prepared to help with these costs where the change is in the interests of disabled people, and more disabled people are helped as a result. Applications for capital grants to expand or improve workshop provision will continue to be dealt with under current arrangements, and we will continue to help workshops, where appropriate, through consultancy grants and through helping promote the products of sheltered industry.

Since the programme is moving increasingly towards encouraging a wide range of ways of helping severely disabled people, we agree that the recommendations of the National Advisory Council on the Employment of People with Disabilities should be adopted and the name of the programme should be changed to the supported employment programme.

I believe that these decisions will create a modern framework within which we and our partners can work together successfully to help people with severe disabilities to obtain opportunities for productive work.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Goodlad: Such purchases are included within this Department's overall administration expenditure which is published every year in the annual report.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Goodlad: Disaggregated information of this sort could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Goodlad: The cost of such receptions is included in the entertainment expenditure for this Department which is published in the annual report.

Indonesia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits have been made to East Timor by Her Majesty's Government's representatives in Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: As the United Kingdom does not recognise Indonesia's annexation of East Timor, the British ambassador in Jakarta does not visit the territory. Other members of staff visit whenever a suitable opportunity arises. Most recently, a member of the staff visited East Timor in January.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings the military attaché to the British embassy in Djakarta has had with the Indonesian military concerning operations in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: The defence attaché in Jakarta is in regular contact with the Indonesian military authorities. He took part last year in an attachés' visit to East Timor organised by the Indonesian Defence Ministry.

Sudan

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures the European Union and its member states have taken in recent weeks in response to the continued conflict in Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 21 February the European Union and its member states issued a declaration condemning the latest offensive by the Government of Sudan, pressing for adequate access for the civilian population to humanitarian relief, commending the peace initiative of the Kenyan, Ethiopian, Eritrean and Ugandan Governments, and urging the parties to the civil war to respond positively to it. A copy of this statement has been placed in the Library of the House.

On 8 March the Foreign Affairs Council agreed the establishment of a European Union arms embargo on Sudan as a further expression of our abhorrence of the continuing bloodshed. We were one of the prime movers behind this decision. The embargo covers weapons designed to kill and their ammunition, weapon platforms, non-weapon platforms and ancillary equipment. It also covers spare parts, repairs, maintenance and transfer of military technology. Contracts entered into force prior to the date of entry into force of the embargo are not affected. The text of the decision will be placed in the Library of the House.

In our national implementation of this embargo, we will apply it to all categories of goods prefixed "ML" in group 1, part III, schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992, as amended. The United Kingdom will interpret the embargo as also applying to goods prefixed "PL" in the above-mentioned group 1.

HEALTH

Hospital Doctors (Negligence)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital doctors have been struck off in each year since 1979 for medical negligence or incompetence.

Dr. Mawhinney: The General Medical Council produces information annually about doctors who have been struck off the medical register. These statistics are published in the GMC's annual report and in the annual volumes of council minutes, copies of which are available in the Library. Information can also be obtained from the GMC press office.

Dentistry

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental surgeons have been appointed by the Avon family health services authority in the Bristol area to undertake NHS treatment, for the last three years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: The total number of general service dentists, including principals, assistants and vocational trainees, under contract to Avon family health services authority, for the last three years are:

Year	Number
1991	374
1992	374
1993	382

Census carried out on 30 September in each year.

Ethics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she proposes to take to maintain traditional ethical standards at top-level NHS management levels.

Dr. Mawhinney: In January 1993, the national health service management executive issued guidance, HSG(93)5, to NHS trusts and health authorities about standards of business conduct for NHS staff, copies of which are available in the Library.

In addition, from 1 April 1994 the boards of all NHS bodies will be required to comply with a new code of conduct which will ensure that public service values continue to underpin all decision-making at board level.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants had full-time, and how many part-time, contracts in each health authority and trust in each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: The tables showing the numbers of full-time and part-time consultant contracts in each of the regional health authorities and in those trusts that were in existence in 1991 and 1992 will be placed in the Library. Information for all district health authorities is not available centrally.

Care Orders

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many teenage mothers in care between 1986 and 1993 have had care orders placed on their babies.

Mr. Bowis: The age of mothers and whether they themselves are in care is not information required when local authorities make returns on children in care to the Department.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by her private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: Disaggregated information of this sort could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of new furniture for her private offices during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: Such purchases are included within my Department's overall administration expenditure which is published every year in the annual report.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by her Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much her Department and its predecessor has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The Department uses freephone and freepost facilities for the public to request and receive free information or materials on health-related subjects and on their rights as national health service patients. The facilities include the health information service and the health literature ordering service.

Costing information for all the Department's freephone and freepost facilities could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Microwaves

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the comparative standards in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany and (d) the USA for field strengths of electro-magnetic energy within the microwave wave-bands relative to harmful effects caused to human beings.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom is one of the few countries which have formulated guidance, not standards, on restricting exposure. In November 1993 the National Radiological Protection Board published guidelines on restricting exposure to electromagnetic fields, copies of which are available in the Library. These are based on comprehensive reviews of relevant biological and human health studies carried out by NRPB staff and on the advice of the advisory group on non-ionising radiation set up by the director of the NRPB. In the United Kingdom, for populations including children, the levels range from 75 volts per metre, V/m, at 300 megahertz to 194 V/m at 300 gigahertz.

Other countries, for example, France and Germany, have guidelines based on those issued in 1988 by the international non-ionizing radiation committee of the International Radiation Protection Association. For the general public, the levels range from 27·5 V/m to 61 V/m and for occupationally exposed people from 61 V/m to 137 V/m.

In the United States of America, the Institute for Electrical and Electronics Engineers 1991 standard set levels based on "controlled" and "uncontrolled" environments. For uncontrolled environments the levels range from 27·5 V/m to 194 V/m and for controlled environments from 61·4 V/m to 194 V/m.

Maternity Units

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department last gave advice on security in maternity units.

Mr. Sackville: The revised "National Health Service Security Manual", funded by the Department and issued to the service on 29 April 1992, provides guidance and recommendations on general security matters, including patient safety. Copies of the manual are available in the Library.

Hospital Construction, Buckinghamshire

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the major hospital building projects in Buckinghamshire completed since 1978-79 or now under way, giving in each case the amount of public money spent.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the tables.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts have had their audited accounts qualified; and if she will list them.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 3 March 1994]: Qualifications were made to the audit opinions of five national health service trusts accounts for the financial year 1992-93. These were:

Ashford Hospital NHS Trust
Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Mental Handicap NHS Trust
North East Essex Mental Health NHS Trust
Walsgrave Hospital NHS Trust
Wellhouse NHS Trust

London Implementation Group

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings she has had with members of the London implementation group; and what directions she gave them.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the chairman and chief executive of the London implementation group at regular intervals to discuss matters relating to London's health services.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total number of fundholding general practitioner practices in Greater London; and if she will list them by name and health district.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are currently 304 general practitioner fundholding practices in the four Thames regions. Detailed information is not available centrally, but is available from the regional health authorities concerned.

Asthma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken by her Department to co-ordinate research into the causes of asthma among (a) adults and (b) children; and how much is spent on research in this area.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health is a founder member of the Respiratory Research Liaison Committee, which includes the major organisations with a research interest in respiratory diseases. The committee has a considerable interest in asthma. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 February at column 627. In addition, the national health service research and development strategy is determining research priorities on a range of difficult problems of direct relevance to the NHS and work is planned to establish detailed priorities in the field of respiratory diseases across all age groups.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In 1992-93 the MRC spent £759,000 on research into asthma and a further £757,000 on research which may be relevant to the condition.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have been held with the Department for Education concerning children's asthma and the effect on education; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Recent discussions have related to inquiries from teachers about children in need of medication for the relief of asthma. It has been agreed that teachers should, in consultation with parents and with appropriate medical advice, do all that is reasonable to enable these children to obtain maximum benefit from education and to participate as fully as possible in school life. Where possible children should be encouraged to manage their own condition with the support, as necessary, of teaching and school health service staff.

University College Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what special assistance is to be given to University College hospital in 1993-94 and planned for 1994-95.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1993-94 to date, £10,634 million transitional funding support has been agreed in respect of University College London hospitals. The level of transitional funding support for 1994-95 has not yet been determined.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the non-executive directors appointed to health trusts in the city of Salford, together with their full-time occupations and current places of residence.

Dr. Mawhinney: Non-executive directors of national health service trusts are expected to live or work in the area covered by the trust, or have connections with it. Information on the place of residence of those appointees is available from NHS trusts.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 623, (1) what is the estimated cost of each campaign provisionally scheduled for 1994-95;

(2) what is the budgeted and actual cost of each campaign listed;

(3) during what months in 1994-95 it is intended that each of the community care, children's services, family health services complaints, GP fundholding, "The Health of the Nation", help with NHS treatment costs, "Keep Warm Keep Well", open government and patients charter campaigns will operate.

Mr. Sackville: Actual costs for 1993-94 will not be available until the final outturn figures are available. Final decisions on campaigns and campaign budgets for 1994-95 have not yet been made. Provisional figures for 1994-95 were listed in the reply I gave the hon. Member on 14 February at column 623.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 623, if she will publish the telephone response and coupon response to each advertising and publicity campaign where applicable.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table:

(2) in which of the English health regions there is a surplus of donated blood; and in how many regions blood plasma is in short supply.

Mr. Sackville: National stocks are sufficient at present to meet the needs of all health regions in England. Surplus stocks held in individual regions are transferred by the National Blood Authority if needed to satisfy requirements elsewhere.

The additional information available centrally will be placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Illegal Fishing

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current status of the bailiff who uncovered the unauthorised removal of salmon for the purpose of stripping eggs from them and which resulted in the RUC investigation into allegations against bailiffs and a scientist in 1990.

Mr. Ancram: This officer is a current employee of the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will investigate allegations that 4 in immature roach are being caught in Northern Ireland, blast frozen, offered to Northern Ireland tackle dealers and sold in Dublin tackle shops.

Mr. Ancram: No. Juvenile roach may be captured lawfully for use as bait under licence from the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any disciplinary action was taken by the Fisheries Conservancy Board against those members of staff about whom allegations of salmon egg stripping had been made in 1990.

Mr. Ancram: One member of staff was cautioned about the misuse of powers conferred by permit issued by the Department of Agriculture under section 14 of the Fisheries Act (NI) 1966.

Fish Farms

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether all commercial fish farms have a consent to discharge.

Mr. Tim Smith: All fish farms known to the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland hold current discharge consents.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how frequently river bed sampling for residues of chemicals in use on commercial fish farms is carried out.

Mr. Tim Smith: Discharge consents granted under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 for fish farms specify concentration limits for chemicals used in the industry. On the basis of the scientific data available on the chemicals used, there is no evidence to indicate that these compounds would accumulate in river bed sediments. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland regularly undertakes biological monitoring of invertebrates at locations downstream of fish farms. To date there is no evidence from this monitoring to indicate any accumulation in sediments giving rise to stress in invertebrate populations. For these reasons it is considered that there is no need for river bed chemical sampling.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether inspections are carried out to ensure the safe storage and minimum use of chemicals, anti-bactericides and disinfectants regularly used on fish farms.

Mr. Ancram: Department of Agriculture officials carry out regular inspections to ensure the safe storage of chemicals and to monitor the use of chemical substances on fish. Fish farmers are also required to keep a record of chemical usage. Water discharge consents issued under the Water Act (NI) 1972 lay down the maximum discharge concentration of chemicals which may be discharged into watercourses. As there are no major fish diseases present in Northern Ireland, the use of chemicals, anti-bactericides and disinfectants is generally well below the maximum levels permitted by the discharge consents.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has of a build-up of copper derivatives in river bed soils downstream from commercial fish farms.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is not aware of any use of chemicals containing copper in the fish farm industry in Northern Ireland. Monitoring of river bed soils for such substances downstream of fish farms is not, therefore, considered necessary.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how frequently samples of discharge into rivers/watercourses from commercial fish farms are taken.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has a rolling programme for monitoring fish farms for compliance with consents granted under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972. Composite sampling is carried out over a continuous period of up to seven days. In addition, discharges from fish farms are monitored annually on a selective basis employing spot sampling.

As part of the river monitoring programme undertaken by the Department in Northern Ireland, monitoring stations are located downstream of the vast majority of consented discharges. These stations are monitored on between four and 24 occasions annually.

Crime

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were sentenced to a prison term under each offence category in the latest year for which figures are available; and what numbers and percentage of the total were fine defaulters.

Sir John Wheeler: The numbers of people received into prison under sentence of immediate custody for each offence category for 1992 are given in the table and total 1,312. The number of people received into prison for fine default was 1,716. Therefore, the percentage which fine defaulters comprise of the total number received into prison—under sentence of immediate custody and for fine default but exclusive of remand receptions—was 57 per cent.

Receptions under sentence of immediate custody, by offence 1992

	Number
Violence against the person	256

Sir John Wheeler: A copy of any surveys which are not confidential will be placed in the Library as soon as they become available.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1034, what is the budgeted and actual cost of each advertising and publicity campaign listed for 1993-94.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is set out in the table:

Reservoirs (Filter Sludge)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether contaminated filter sludge from reservoirs is being regularly dumped into rivers; if such dumping requires the approval of the Department of Environment (Northern Ireland); and where contaminated sludge from Killylane reservoir is dumped.

Mr. Tim Smith: It is not the practice of the Department of the Environment to discharge filter sludges produced as part of the water treatment process to rivers. Sludge from Killylane water treatment works is spread on land within the catchment area above the reservoir.

Teachers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many newly qualified teachers were appointed to permanent teaching posts by each education board in 1993.

Mr. Ancram: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the latest figures available from the annual survey carried out by the Northern Ireland Council for Educational Research indicate that, in the spring term 1993, of those teachers holding permanent posts in grant-aided schools in Northern Ireland, 292 had qualified from initial teacher training institutions in 1992.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people (a) graduated or qualified and (b) failed in teacher training in each of the teacher training colleges and universities in 1993.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

1993	Number who graduated or qualified	Number who failed the final year examinations
Stranmillis College of Education	203	1
St. Mary's College of Education	186	0

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Services (Merseyside)

5. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the standard spending assessment for fire services in Merseyside.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Merseyside fire and civil defence authority's standard spending settlement for 1994-95 has been determined by reference to a distributional formula which was discussed with the local authority associations.

Right of Silence

17. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had from the police regarding his proposals on the right of silence.

Mr. Howard: The police have expressed their support for these proposals.

War Crimes Act 1991

18. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are currently employed on work flowing from the War Crimes Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are 11 police officers, who form part of the Metropolitan police war crimes unit, engaged full time on work flowing from this Act.

Fire and Civil Defence Authorities

19. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at which point in the financial year he had discussions with the Secretary of State for the Environment over the funding of fire and civil defence authorities for the execution of their statutory duties in the following financial year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Decisions about the local government finance settlement and service provision are taken collectively by Ministers and announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Environment.

Discussions between the Department of the Environment and the Home Office at official level take place from time to time on the lead up to these decisions. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary did not have separate discussions with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment about fire and civil defence authorities.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the reasons for exemption from the requirement for local public inquiries of the combination schemes relating to proposed new fire authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The proposal to establish three combined fire authorities in Wales in place of the present eight was made in the White Paper on the future of local government in Wales published in March 1993. It has since been discussed in the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council and interested parties have had the opportunity to make representations and, in the case of three of the existing fire authorities in Wales, to meet me to discuss the proposals. Also, clause 23 of the Local Government (Wales) Bill requires my right hon. and learned Friend to give notice of the general nature of the proposed combination schemes to the appropriate authorities and to consider any representations that they make. In the light of these factors, we see no need for public inquiries.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

20. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are being held in police stations in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of prisoners held in police cells in Greater Manchester overnight on Tuesday 8 March was 169.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners on average were being held in each of the police stations in the Merseyside area for each month since January 1993, and for each day so far in March 1994; what is the consequent cost in police overtime in each police cell on Merseyside for these duties; how many police officers are being taken off other duties for these purposes; and what reasons he has established for the trends in these figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From 1 January 1993 to 5 February 1993 an average total of 30 prisoners were held each night in police stations in the Merseyside area. The use of police cells ceased on 6 February 1993.

Police cells in the Merseyside area came into use again on 20 February 1994, as follows:

Information about costs is not yet available. The Prison Service will deal with reimbursement of expenditure incurred by police in accordance with the provisions of Home Office circular 36/1993, issued on 6 October 1993 to clerks to police authorities and chief officers of police.

Details of number of police officers performing duties concerned with the holding of prisoners is not yet available centrally. It is understood these duties are being carried out by officers working their rest days.

Between the end of December 1993 and the end of February 1994, the prison population in the north of England rose by just over 1,200. Prison accommodation pressures in the North will be eased by the reopening of Manchester prison, now under way, and the opening of the new prison at Doncaster in June. Rescheduling of refurbishment work at other prisons will also increase the availability of places during 1994.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of prisoner nights for which prisoners were held in police cells, for the months of January and February, broken down by police authority, and the cost to each authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 10 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoner nights for which prisoners were held in police cells in January and February.

Details are as follows:

Month	Prisoner nights	Police force
January 1994	16	Greater Manchester
February 1994	3,394	Greater Manchester
February 1994	474	Merseyside

Month	Prisoner nights	Police force
February 1994	315	Lancashire
February 1994	156	Humberside
February 1994	139	South Yorkshire
February 1994	91	Northumbria
February 1994	3	Cumbria

Information about costs is not yet available. The Prison Service will deal with reimbursement of expenditure incurred by police in accordance with the provisions of Home Office Circular 36/1993, issued on 6 October 1993 to Clerks to Police Authorities and Chief Officers of Police.

Drugs

21. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on his proposals to combat the use of drugs.

Mr. Maclean: Apart from several general inquiries from members of the public, we have had forwarded by Members of Parliament nine letters this year on the proposed increase in fines for the illegal possession of class B and class C drugs.

Prison Officers (Attacks)

23. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of attacks made on prison officers in prisons in England and Wales during the year 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 2,835 prisoners were found guilty of assaults on prison staff in 1993 under the prison disciplinary system. This includes offences of attempting, inciting and assisting assaults.

Crime Detection

24. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra resources he is going to make available for the detection of crime.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since 1978-79 the Government have increased expenditure on the police service by 87 per cent. in real terms and we are introducing measures to free up more police officers from administrative tasks for front-line duties.

It is for the chief constables to decide how to deploy their resources to the best effect within their force area and the Home Secretary has set key national objectives to assist them in determining their priorities.

Police Gloucestershire

25. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about police levels in Gloucestershire.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has received 12 letters from hon. Members and 20 letters from members of the public. A request from Gloucestershire police authority for additional officers is currently being considered.

Gallows

26. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many operational sets of gallows there are in the United Kingdom; and when he next expects them to be used.

Mr. Maclean: There are no operational gallows in any Prison Service establishments in the United Kingdom.

Motor Vehicle Insurance

27. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will require police authorities to take further steps to ensure that motor vehicles are properly insured and licensed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. The enforcement of road traffic law is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police.

Police Negotiating Board

29. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has received from the Police Negotiating Board concerning progress with the current round of negotiations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. My right hon. and learned Friend has asked the Police Negotiating Board to let him have its recommendations by 3 April 1994.

Criminal Justice System

30. Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what weight he attaches to the prison population as a measure of the success of the criminal justice system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's criminal justice policy objectives include the prevention of crime as well as the conviction and appropriate punishment of those who commit it. Prison population figures cannot in isolation be seen as a measure of either the success or the failure of the criminal justice system in its response to crime.

Persistent Offenders

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to ensure that cautions are not used for persistent offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The new guidance on cautioning which I am about to issue to the police will make it clear that a second caution should be considered only where the second offence is trivial, or where it has been committed long enough after the first caution to suggest that the first one had some effect. People who offend persistently must expect to be prosecuted.

House Breaking

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in crimes of house breaking made known to the police over the most recent five-year period for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Recorded offences of burglary in a dwelling increased by 47 per cent. in England and Wales between 1987 and 1992.

Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will re-examine the case of the murder of Hilda Murrell of Shrewsbury.

Mr. Howard: The investigation of this murder is the responsibility of the chief constable of West Mercia constabulary, who will consider any new evidence which becomes available.

Terrorism

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the legislation dealing with terrorism.

Mr. Howard: We keep the legislation under close review. In last year's Criminal Justice Act we strengthened the measures against terrorist finance. The Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill, which is currently in Committee, contains new powers for the police to stop and search vehicles and persons for counter-terrorist purposes and creates two new terrorist offences.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of victims compensated for criminal injury during the past year; what was the total and average paid to them in that year and five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement on proposals to alter the terms of compensation for victims of criminal injury.

Mr. Maclean: Details of the new arrangements for compensating blameless victims of violent crime were published in a White Paper on 15 December 1993—Cm. 2434. The new scheme is based on a tariff of awards and starts on 1 April. Victims will find the new scheme simpler and quicker than the one it supersedes. It will help restrain the spiralling costs of the present arrangements and make future expenditure more predictable and controllable.

Annex A to the White Paper gave full historical details of awards made under the scheme. The information is extracted from that table.

Financial year	Number of awards made	Total compensation paid £ (million)	Average award (£)
1992-93	36,638	152·5	4,162
1987-88	20,991	52·0	2,479
1982-83	19,733	29·4	1,492
1977-78	14,052	10·1	719

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the number of claims, (b) the total sum paid out, (c) the average amount per case and (d) the maximum, minimum and average time taken to deal with claims for criminal injuries compensation for the last available year.

Mr. Maclean: In the year ended 31 March 1993 the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board received 65,977 new applications and paid out a total of £152·217 million. The average award was £4,162.

The board does not maintain statistics on the time taken to deal with cases in the form requested. However, paragraph 6 of the 29th annual report of the board—Cm 2421—a copy of which is held in the Library of the House, provides some information about the time taken to resolve cases.

Amusement with Prizes Machines

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has had with the Department of Trade and Industry over the task force recommendation in respect of amusement with prizes machines in licensed betting offices; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) what correspondence he has received in respect of amusement with prizes machines in licensed betting offices; whether he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has plans for future discussions with the Betting Office Licencees Association in respect of amusement with prizes machines in licensed betting offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Policy on this issue is currently under review following the task force recommendation, and we will consult as necessary with interested parties. The outcome of the review will be made known in due course.

Correspondence on the issue has been received from a number of Members of the House.

Mandatory Life Sentences

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners serving the mandatory life sentence for murder have been released on life licence during the last 15 years.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is published annually in successive volumes of "Prison Statistics England and Wales"—table 8·5 of the latest volume, for 1991, Cm 2157—a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a list of those prisoners serving the mandatory life sentence for murder who have been released on life licence during the last 15 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Bridgewater Three

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the safety of the convictions of the Bridgewater Three; and when he plans to make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A number of representations have been received from hon. Members and others about the safety of these convictions. The latest representations from the men's solicitors were received between June 1993 and February 1994. We understand that more may follow. We have asked the police to make inquiries into some of the matters raised. When those inquiries have been completed, my right hon. and learned Friend will consider, in the light of all the information available, whether there are grounds on which it would be right for him to take action in respect of any of the convictions.

Neck Holds

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the police forces whose officers have been trained in the use of neck holds as a restraint technique-procedure; in the case of each such police force, what guidelines, advice or training has been given to officers as to the potential dangers of the use of neckholds; and when such guidelines, advice or training were issued;

(2) whether police officers in Cleveland police force had had the benefit of guidelines, advice or training in the use of neck holds in July 1990;

(3) whether police officers in the West Midlands police force had had the benefit of guidelines, advice or training in the use of neck holds in February 1987;

(4) what circular instructions, guidelines or advice the Home Office has issued to police forces in England and Wales concerning the potential dangers of the use of neck holds as a restraint.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Training in self-defence and restraint is included in the initial training given to all police probationers at police district training centres. Cleveland and West Midlands police officers have received the same basic training as all forces. In 1992 a manual on police self-defence and restraint was issued by the central planning unit. A copy of the manual is in the Library of the House.

The manual is being reviewed and the incidents in Cleveland in July 1990 and in the West Midlands in February 1987 will be taken into account. It is not feasible for the guidance to be prescriptive. What particular means of restraint is reasonable will depend on the circumstances of the case, the nature of any struggle and any weapons which the subject may be attempting to use to resist arrest. In all circumstances, police officers are bound by section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967 which provides that only such force as is reasonable to the circumstances may be used in making an arrest.

Doncaster Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Doncaster prison will receive its first prisoners; how many prisoner places it will provide; and when he expects that it will reach full capacity.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 10 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Doncaster Prison.

The present plan is that Doncaster Prison will receive its first prisoners in July, although we shall accelerate this if possible. Premier Prison Services are contracted to provide 771 prisoner places, which is the certified normal accommodation. We expect to reach this level approximately two months after opening, depending on the requirements for places at the time.

Escorted Prisoner (Death)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Prison Service has yet received a copy of Commander Alex Marnoch's report into the death of Ernest Hogg, the prisoner who died while in the custody of Group 4 Court Escort Services Ltd.; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs Joan Ruddock, dated 10 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Mr. Marnoch's report into the death of Mr. Ernest Hogg.

I have not yet received Mr. Marnoch's final report but I expect to do shortly.

It is not intended to place a copy of the report in the Library. It is not our practice to publish the reports of internal investigations which the Prison Service carries out for its own management purposes. There are two main reasons for this.

First, given the closed and potentially volatile nature of the prison environment, publishing reports into incidents could cause problems for the day to day operation and management of the prison system. Knowledge of their contents and conclusions could, for example, lead to reprisals against staff. Second, the prospect of publication could discourage witnesses from being totally candid in the information they provide. If they knew their identities were to be revealed, they might be at risk of being treated as informers. This could make it more difficult for the Prison Service to discover the truth, learn the appropriate lessons and take prompt and effective follow up action.

We will, however, publish the substance of Mr. Marnoch's main recommendations and the action taken to implement them as soon as we are in a position to do so.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Bosnia asylum applicants are waiting to be dealt with.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 8 March 1994, 1,937 applications for asylum from nationals of Bosnia-Herzegovina were outstanding. This figure relates to principal applicants and does not include dependants.

Voter Registration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has commissioned into the effectiveness of its publicity campaign for voter registration; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the latest opinion research available on this matter.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Pre and post-campaign omnibus research was commissioned for the autumn 1993 television advertising campaign.

A copy of the research has been sent to the Library.

National Alliance of Women's Organisations

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will invite the voluntary services unit to review its decision for core funding for the National Alliance of Women's Organisations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The demands on the resources of the voluntary services unit are too great to enable it to core fund the National Alliance of Women's Organisations.

Young Offenders

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 16 and 17-year-olds are currently being held on remand in adult prisons; and how many were held on average in the years 1979, 1984, 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Jean Corston, dated 10 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many 16 and 17-year-olds are currently held on remand in adult prisons and how many were held on average in the years 1979, 1984, 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

The available information is given in the attached table. No information is available for 1979, 1984 and for 17-year-olds in 1989.

Remand population held in Adult Prison Service Establishments

	16-year-olds	17-year-olds
31 December 1993	0	16
30 June 1992	0	70
30 June 1991	6	166
30 June 1990	10	167
30 June 1989	2	n/a

Take-away Restaurants (Licences)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are issued to local authorities regarding the granting of late-night licences for take-away restaurants following the consultation exercise carried out last year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office has issued no guidelines to local authorities on their licensing of late-night refreshment houses under the Late Night Refreshment House Act 1969, and did not undertake consultation on the matter last year.

Bail Hostels

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many proposals to open new bail hostels in the last year have been halted due to objections.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new bail hostels have been opened in 1993; how many new places have been created; and where these hostels are located.

Mr. Maclean: One new bail hostel opened in 1993 at Normanby road, Scunthorpe. This hostel can accommodate up to 22 men.

Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) of 18 January, Official Report, columns 465-66, what considerations underlie his decision not to collect information centrally on the number of incidents requiring police deployment (a) per officer and (b) by 100,000 population by police and by year for each police authority; if he will consider holding the information in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Two of the police perfomance indicators introduced jointly by the Home Office, the Audit Commission, Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and the Association of Chief Police Officers cover police deployment: the number of incidents per 100 police officers and the number of incidents requiring immediate police response. These indicators will be collected annually, starting with the financial year ending March 1994, and will be collated by HMCIC.

European Community

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the directives, regulations and resolutions of the European Community which give citizens of Austria, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden the right of free movement, establishment, family reunification and equality of treatment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the agreement on the European Economic Area presented to Parliament in October 1992, Cm 2073. Part III of the agreement and the associated annexes deal with free movement of persons, services and capital.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many Welsh Development Agency staff will be involved in rural policy planning after the implementation of the agency's new structure at (a) regional and (b) national levels;

(2) how the Welsh Development Agency plans to consult on issues affecting rural Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I have arranged for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member, and for a copy of his response to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redwood: I have arranged for the chief executives of the Welsh Development Agency and the Development

Board for Rural Wales to write to the hon. Member, and for copies of their responses to be placed in the Library of the House.

Fire Authorities

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the standard spending assessments for fire authorities in Wales for the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1993-94.

Mr. Redwood: There are no standard spending assessments for fire authorities in Wales. The standard spending assessments for county councils in Wales include provision for fire services.

Deaf-blind Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to introduce services for the deaf-blind in north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for local authorities and health authorities to identify the need for, and the priorities for the provision of, services for deaf-blind people in their area in their local strategies for health and social care plans.

The responsibility for making appropriate educational provision for children who are deaf and blind rests with the local education authority.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the area of each individual environmentally sensitive area in Wales already designated or to be designated, estimated to be eligible for management agreements.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is as follows:

Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to consult the leaders of the Opposition parties in Wales prior to making appointments to the chairmanship of non-departmental public bodies within his Department's responsibility.

Mr. Redwood: I have consulted the leaders of the Opposition parties in Wales on my proposals for the appointments of chairman and members to the Local Government Boundary Commission and await their response. I and my officials take into account the views of all correspondents on other appointments, if Members of Parliament wish to support particular people on the list.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a register of new appointees to executive bodies or advisory bodies to show previous and present political affiliations, together with financial contributors to any political parties.

Mr. Redwood: Political affiliation is not usually relevant and in most cases is unknown.

Euro-link

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all agreements concluded under the Euro-link arrangements with companies and organisations from European regions, together with the region concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The information is contained in the table.

Details of individual "substantive links" are not given in this answer as companies regard such information as "commercial in confidence".

Written agreements are a commercial matter to be dealt with by companies as required.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Redwood: Disaggregated information of this sort could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Orimulsion

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now make it his policy to forbid the burning of orimulsion bitumen in any power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are currently no applications before Government for the burning of orimulsion at power stations in Wales. Any application to do so would be subject to the pollution control provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and would need to be determined in line with the statutory procedures.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will revise the formula for the allocation of Welsh revenue support grant so that local authority areas with high unemployment, housing needs and deprivation, receive an increase which is at least equal to the rate of inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The formulae for distributing revenue support grant in 1994-95 are set out in the Local Government Finance Report—Wales—1994-95 which received the approval of Parliament on 15 February. The formulae are agreed with the local authority associations and represent a fair and objective way of distributing revenue support grant to all local authorities in Wales.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the reasons underlying the cash allocations of Dwyfor, Cynon Valley, Ogwr and Port Talbot in the Welsh revenue support grant and their relation to the Welsh average; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: For 1994-95 the standard spending assessments per head of population for Dwyfor, Cynon Valley, Ogwr and Port Talbot are £220, £204, £153 and £174 respectively. These compare with a district average of £159. SSAs are calculated with reference to a wide range of factors which reflect the relative need of Welsh local authorities to spend on services.

NHS (Consultant Appointments)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional steps he intends to take to reduce the waiting time for consultant appointments in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Measures to reduce the time that people have to wait for a first out-patient appointment will be announced shortly.

Air Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the measures he proposes to monitor air pollution in Wales in the light of the report published on 24 February by the Institute of Public Health.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I understand the hon. Member may be referring to a recent report on air quality in London. In Wales, the Government operate a comprehensive monitoring network for the main air pollutants—including nitrogen dioxide, sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, particulates and ozone. Monitoring to date has shown that air quality in Wales is good and generally within the World Health Organisation and European Community guideline limits.

Forensic Unit, Gwynedd

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to discourage Gwynedd health authority from building a medium secure forensic unit for mentally unstable criminal offenders in the grounds of Bryn-y-Neuadd hospital at Llanfairfechan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: On 29 April 1993, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales announced a £9·25 million package for new hospital facilities in Wales for mentally ill offenders. The package includes capital funding of up to £3 million for a new 25-bed medium secure unit for north Wales which will be the first purpose-built medium secure facility within the Principality. In England, over 650 places have been developed within 20 sites.

The development of such a unit in north Wales was recommended by the all-Wales advisory group on forensic psychiatry. Ten potential sites were considered and the preferred proposal for Bryn-y-Neuadd hospital, Llanfairfechan was confirmed at the meeting of Gwynedd health authority on 22 November 1993 in the light of a thorough appraisal and advice from experts in the field. The decision was and remains entirely a matter for the health authority.

Grapes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the potential effect upon vineyards in Wales of European Union proposals concerning the sugar content of grapes.

Mr. Redwood: The European Union has not made any proposals concerning the sugar content of English and Welsh grapes. Reform proposals for the wine regime are expected soon and are likely to propose an increase in the minimum natural alcoholic strength of grapes.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is fully aware of the concerns of the Welsh industry and will seek to ensure that these are properly reflected in the forthcoming negotiations.

Blood Supplies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether there are any regions of Wales where there is a surplus of donated blood; and whether there are any regions where blood plasma is in short supply.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: For the area covered by the national blood transfusion service—Wales—there is a surplus of donated blood and there is no shortage of blood plasma.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (a) the number of blood donors, (b) the quantity of blood supplied and (c) the amount of blood required for each region in Wales for each month since April 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Details for the area covered by the national blood transfusion service—Wales—are set out in the table.

National blood transfusion service (Wales) (1993-94)

[1] These figures include whole blood units which equate to approximately 5 per cent. of the total.

Historic Buildings Council for Wales

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to present the next report of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The 37th report of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales has been presented today. The report covers the financial year 1992-93 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Public Appointments

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for Scotland of 2 February, Official Report, column 774, if he will list those hon. Members defeated in the general election of June 1987 who, at any subsequent date, have been appointed to public bodies by him or his predecessor; and if he will list those appointments.

Mr. Redwood: The following hon. Members were defeated in Wales in the general election of June 1987:

Harvey R. L.—Clwyd, South-West
Hubbard-Miles P. C.—Bridgend
Robinson M. N. F.—Newport, West
Terlezki S.—Cardiff, West

None of the above have held, or currently hold, an appointment on bodies for which my Department has responsibility.

ENVIRONMENT

Overseas Visits

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the (a) budgeted and (b) actual expenditure by his Department on (i) internal and (ii) overseas travel by the Secretary of State since 27 May 1993.

Mr. Gummer: My budget for travel and subsistence for this financial year is £55,000. Since 27 May 1993 I have spent £5,588 on travel throughout the United Kingdom, attending projects in which my Department has been involved, explaining Government policies and listening to the views of local people. During the same period I have spent £15,274 on overseas travel. This has included attending EC Council of Ministers meetings, a United Nations conference on sustainable development in New York, a visit to eastern Europe to discuss environmental issues, and supporting Britain's Olympic bid in Monte Carlo.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by region those sites of special scientific interest that have been damaged or destroyed during each of the last three years; and if he will indicate the nature of the damage in each case.

Mr. Atkins: Information on loss of and damage to SSSIs generally and on the principal causes of such loss or damage is contained in the annual reports of English Nature and of the former Nature Conservancy Council, copies of which are in the Library. Information on individual sites is not available to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the maximum fines under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for a landowner (a) carrying out a potentially damaging operation to a site of special scientific interest and (b) contravening a nature conservation order under section 29.

Mr. Atkins: The maximum fines for offences under section 28 and 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 are set at levels 4 and 5 on the standard scale. They are currently £2,500 and £5,000 respectively.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many man hours have been spent by English Nature and its predecessor the Nature Conservancy Council in dealing with the protection of the site of special scientific interest at Westhay moor in Somerset since 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There are some 65 owners and occupiers of this SSSI. Detailed records are not maintained of work on individual sites, but English Nature estimate that at least three and a half man years have been spent since 1987 in protecting Westhay moor.

Women's Refuges

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an estimate of (a) the number of places in women's refuges in England and Wales and (b) the number of women passing through women's refuges, in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: My Department does not hold information on the number of places in women's refuges nor the number of women passing through them. The Housing Corporation in 1992-93 provided funding for 1,730 bedrooms in 132 refuge schemes managed by housing associations. This provision is part of the Housing Corporation's revenue funding. The corporation also provides capital funding to women's refuges managed by housing associations.

Coastal Conservation Areas

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he will introduce to help conserve and manage those areas of coastline and sea which are to be designated as special areas for conservation under the European Union directive on the conservation of flora, fauna and habitats.

Mr. Atkins: The Government set out their policies and proposals for legislative changes in a public consultation paper issued on 4 October 1993. We are currently considering the responses to the consultation. The wider objectives for the conservation of our natural heritage were further addressed in the biodiversity action plan, published on 25 January 1994. Copies of both documents were placed in the House of Commons Library.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in support of a single-tier structure of local government.

Mr. Baldry: Since we issued our consultation paper on the structure of local government in England in April 1991, we have received many representations in favour of single-tier local government structures. They have come from local authorities and other local and national organisations, and from individuals including Members of this House. It is not possible, however, to produce a definitive list except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he expects the transitional costs of reorganisation in the Isle of Wight and Cleveland to amount to in total.

Mr. Baldry: We have made no such estimate. We have announced that we are prepared to make available to authorities in the Isle of Wight and Cleveland supplementary credit approvals up to a limit of £9 million in 1994-95. Subject to the approval of their applications for SCAs these arrangements will enable the authorities to borrow to meet specified transitional costs. The amount of SCAs issued will depend on the amounts incurred.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how the local authorities in Cleveland and the Isle of Wight are expected to raise the funds to cover the interest on the Government loan to cover the transitional costs of reorganisation;

(2) what interest rate will be charged by the Government on the loan to Cleveland and the Isle of Wight to cover the transitional costs of reorganisation.

Mr. Baldry: The authorities in Cleveland and the Isle of Wight will receive supplementary credit approvals up to a specified limit. These will enable them to borrow to meet specified transitional costs and the interest incurred on the borrowing. It is anticipated that the borrowings and rolled up interest will be repaid out of the savings arising from the reorganisations. The rate of interest incurred will depend on the pool, or other, rate at which each authority borrows.

Eviction

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department has provided to local authorities on the advice to be given to those who face eviction by bailiffs.

Sir George Young: None.

Groundwork Trusts

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 710, if he will give a breakdown, using the categories used in his previous answer of money spent by Groundwork trusts which was collected from (a) local authorities and (b) the private sector for each year from 1988-89 to 1993-94.

Mr. Atkins: The tables show the income received from the local authorities and the private sector as devoted to expenditure on projects and running costs for the groundwork trusts in England. The information is not available in the categories specified in the previous question, Official Report, column 710, which referred to the breakdown of Groundwork's grant in aid, nor is it available on a comparable basis for earlier years.

	Project costs £	Running costs £
1992-93
Local authorities	2,619,042	1,240,551
Private sector	3,371,103	247,363
1993-94[1]
Local authorities	3,357,715	1,825,514
Private sector	3,435,145	357,620

[1] Estimated.

Council Tax

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tax banding appeals have been submitted to the Colchester valuation office; how many appeals have been decided; what is the likely time scale for resolution of the remaining appeals; and what assessment he has made of whether sufficient resources are available to the Colchester valuation office.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 17 February, Official Report, column 967. We are continuing to monitor closely the settlement of appeals in all offices of the Valuation Office agency. The agency is responsible for the allocation of resources to its individual offices.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Bird Deaths

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the results of the veterinary analysis of dead birds found recently on the east coast of Scotland and northern England.

Mr. Atkins: Some birds have been taken for post-mortem analysis and preliminary results indicate that they had low body weights and little or no fat reserves. Tissue samples were also analysed for heavy metal and organochlorine compounds but residues found were insufficient to have been the cause of death.

In the recent North sea incident, it is believed that the sea-bird deaths were caused by starvation, possibly due to a combination of strong onshore winds which may have disturbed normal feeding activity and, perhaps, a mismatch between bird location and food availability.

Ministers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates between which each Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has held office in his Department since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State who have held office in this Department since 1979 are:

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he expects the cost of setting up the single regeneration budget offices to be.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 15 February, Official Report, column 734.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the setting up of the single regeneration budget has cost.

Mr. Baldry: The single regeneration budget combines 20 existing Government expenditure programmes to provide flexible and responsive support for local initiatives which promote regeneration, economic development and industrial competitiveness. As such no additional costs have been involved in setting up the Budget; indeed, the combination of programmes should improve value for money so that public investment will go further.

European Funding Schemes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 566, if he will list the European funding schemes for which local authorities can apply.

Mr. Baldry: The principal sources of European Community funding available to local authorities are the European Community's three structural funds. These are the European regional development fund, the European social fund and the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. Local authorities may also be able to obtain grants or loans for specific purposes from various other European sources.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 February,

Official Report, column 566, what was the total amount of funding obtained by local authorities from Europe in each year since 1979 for which figures are available without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has records of European regional development fund grants to local authorities in England. This information is set out in table 1. The figures represent the total value of ERDF grant approvals for local authority projects falling within my Department's policy responsibilities. However, it does not include grants to local authority companies, nor grants approved under programmes managed by other Departments.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve the standard spending assessment system.

Mr. Baldry: We will be looking carefully at the priorities for future work and research into the standard spending assessment system in consultation with the local authority associations. We are always prepared to consider new evidence in support of changes in SSAs.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the standard spending assessments for each of the local authorities in Greater Manchester for 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: The standard spending assessments for the local authorities in Greater Manchester for 1993-94 are as follows:

Mr. Baldry: Authorities receive revenue support grant annually and, where their standard spending assessment for 1994-95 has been reduced by more than 2 per cent. as a result of incorporating the results of the SSA review and 1991 census data, will receive SSA reduction grant. The figures, expressed as pounds per head, for Wandsworth, Westminster and the district councils in Greater Manchester are given.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when regulations will be laid before Parliament to extend the home energy efficiency scheme to pensioners and disabled people, as announced in the Budget on 30 November.

Mr. Atkins: Proposals to amend the regulations governing the home efficiency scheme which would extend eligibility for the scheme to those receiving disability living allowance and those aged 60 and over were laid before Parliament yesterday.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision about the removal of Crown exemption from planning legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My Department issued a consultation paper in November 1992 inviting comments on proposals to remove Crown exemption from the planning system. Similar consultation papers were issued by the Scottish and Welsh Offices and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. The principle behind these proposals was that in future all Crown bodies should be required to apply for planning permission, hazardous substances consent, listed building consent, conservation area consent, and scheduled consent in the normal way.

This principle received overwhelming support. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment, the Secretary of State for Wales and the Secretary of State for Scotland therefore intend to remove Crown exemption from the planning system as soon as a suitable legislative opportunity arises. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will introduce similar changes in Northern Ireland.

We propose to introduce minor refinements to our original proposals, in response to comments on the consultation paper. In particular, we shall seek to provide an informal appeal mechanism to deal with disputes between local planning authorities and Crown bodies in relation to alleged breaches of planning control. This remedy would be in addition to a High Court declaration.

Once implemented, these proposals will mark a significant increase in the openness and accountability of Government Departments.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date Ministers received the report of the Forestry Commission review group; and which Ministers received a copy.

Sir Hector Monro: The report of the forestry review group was submitted on 28 February to those Ministers who were represented on the review group.

Car Boot Sales

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider measures to address the situation that whilst antique shops must be licensed and pay a fee as such, dealers selling at car boot sales are not subject to such a fee.

Mr. Lang: District and island councils may resolve to license the activities of second-hand dealers under the provisions of part II of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. Antique dealers may be licensed as second-hand dealers under section 24 of that Act, and some authorities license car boot sales as private markets in terms of section 40, though such sales are exempt if held by charitable and certain other organisations. Licensing authorities may charge such reasonable fees as they may determine in relation to such licenses by virtue of paragraph 15 of schedule 1 to the 1982 Act. Any fee charged to participants selling goods at a car boot sale is at the discretion of the operator.

Hospitals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals are currently directly managed by health boards; how many there will be on 1 April; and what percentage of total bed provision those hospitals will represent.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is set out in the table:

Numbers of directly managed hospitals and bed provision

	Numbers of hospitals in:		Percentage bed provision[1] in:
	DMUs	Trusts	DMUs	Trusts
At 30 September 1993	195	80	68	32
At 1 April 1994[2]	81	194	16	84

[1] Average available staffed beds during quarter ended 30 September 1993.

[2] Figures for 1 April 1994 are an estimate based on bed provision at 30 September 1993.

Amenity Charges

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was generated by the NHS in Scotland from amenity charges; and how many people paid them in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Stewart: The information available in respect of income from amenity beds is as follows:

	1991-92 £	1992-93 £
Single Rooms and Small Wards	292,362	258,323

Figures are not available on the number of patients using amenity beds who paid for them.

Charities

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made towards identifying defunct charitable accounts, with a view to reallocation of their funds, in terms of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have undertaken a preliminary trawl of banks and building societies in Scotland which indicates that the total amount held in dormant charitable accounts is likely to be between £100,000 and £150,000. We are at present considering the next steps and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Housing, Dreghorn

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many tenants have been decanted from their homes in Dreghorn while the refurbishment of their homes by Scottish Homes takes place; and whether all tenants were offered the opportunity to be decanted when it became apparent that the work on their homes was of a major nature;

(2) if he will make a statement about the current programme of works being undertaken by Scottish Homes in Dreghorn; and how many homes are involved in the work;

(3) what measures have been adopted by Scottish Homes to monitor the refurbishment work being undertaken by contractors operating on their contracts in Dreghorn;

(4) what arrangements have been made by Scottish Homes for safeguarding the health and welfare of tenants living in Dreghorn while their homes have been subject to major refurbishment;

(5) whether all Scottish Homes tenants in Dreghorn were advised of the nature of the refurbishment work to be undertaken on their properties before it began; what degree of choice tenants were given as regards agreeing to the work being carried out or not; and how many tenants opted not to be part of the programme of refurbishment;

(6) what arrangements exist for Scottish Homes to compensate tenants living in Dreghorn whose properties have been damaged while the work on their homes has been carried out.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Community Nursing

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any health board or trust within any board area has plans to put community nursing out to compulsory competitive tender, or privatise this service by any other means.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any plans by health boards or NHS trusts to market test or privatise community nursing services. No proposals have been made to him or officials.

NHS Privatisation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for further privatising within the NHS.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 March 1994]: The Government are committed to a publicly funded health service with national health service units, both trusts and directly managed units, firmly within the public sector. However, our policy is to encourage the health service to concentrate its management skills on the core activities of the NHS and to use its expertise, where possible, to seek best value for money and improved quality in the provision of non-care services. I would expect such services to be competed for by both in-house and commercial contractors.

Parole Board

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase the number of persons appointed to the Parole Board; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 March 1994]: The size of the board will be kept under review in the light of the volume of cases, and the board's responsibilities under the Parole Board (Scotland) Rules 1993, which include interviewing prisoners.

School Boards

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding (a) the number of schools without a constituted school board and (b) unfilled school board vacancies in each local education authority area in Scotland as at 28 February.

Mr. Lang: Statistics are currently being collected on the number of schools with and without a school board, following the 1993-94 round of biennial parental elections. The information will be published in a statistical bulletin in late spring. The most up-to-date figures available, relating to May 1992 and based on the 1991-92 round of elections, show that 657 schools in Scotland did not have school boards.

Information on the number of unfilled school board vacancies is not held centrally.

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Scotland have had teaching experience in primary schools of (a) 10 years or more and (b) less than 10 years; and what proportion of the total number of school inspectors have had any teaching experience in primary schools.

Mr. Lang: Nineteen of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools have qualifications to teach in primary schools which represents 18 per cent. of the total number of inspectors whose duties include inspection in primary, secondary and special schools, further education, teacher education and community education. Of these, six have more than 10 years' teaching experience in primary schools; seven have less than 10 years' teaching experience in primary schools; and six, although qualified to teach in primary schools, pursued teaching careers in other sectors of education for which they are also qualified. Nine have been head teachers of Scottish primary schools.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Scotland were appointed (a) after 1990, (b) between 1985 and 1989, (c) between 1980 and 1984 and (d) before 1980.

Mr. Lang: Of the 107 members of the schools inspectorate (a) 30 were appointed after 1990, (b) 27 between 1985 and 1989, (c) 19 between 1980 and 1984 and (d) 31 before 1980.

Milk Marketing Schemes

Mr. Kynock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the provisions in the Agriculture Act 1993 for the revocation of the north of Scotland milk marketing scheme, the Aberdeen and district milk marketing scheme and the Scottish milk marketing scheme.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has made an order under section 1(3) of the Agriculture Act 1993 to extend the deadline for the revocation of the three Scottish milk marketing schemes from 1 April 1994 to 1 January 1995. This is in recognition of the fact that a vesting day of 1 April 1994 is not achievable but does not preclude a vesting day earlier than 1 January 1995, provided the reorganisation schemes have been approved.

Health Service Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of Ayrshire and Arran health board's evaluation committee tendered their resignations from the committee over the wording of the recent urology contract and subsequently withdrew them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 March 1994]: No members tendered resignations from the evaluation committee.

Cottage Hospital Closures

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice his Department gave to Tayside health board in the years 1989 to 1990 regarding the board's plans for the future of Meigle cottage hospital.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 March 1994]: At the accountability review meeting in 1990 the board's proposal for service developments throughout Tayside were discussed and the health board was advised that these might best be considered together as a package of changes.

Dentistry

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate (i) the average annual income of salaried dental officers employed by health boards in Scotland and (ii) the average annual income of general dental practitioners within the national health service in Scotland; and if he will provide the average practitioner profiles for each category.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 March 1994]: The current salary scale for full-time salaried dentists employed by health boards in Scotland runs from £19,036 to £27,714. The current salary for salaried plus bonus dentists is £18,176 plus bonuses in proportion to the amount of work carried out. The dental fee scale is currently set to pay to independent general dental practitioners as a whole a target average net income. For 1992-93 this is £36,352. The practitioner profiles for 1992-93 for salaried dentists in Scotland and for general dental practitioners in Scotland are shown in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 18 February, Official Report, columns 1056-58, if she will make a statement on (a) the response of delegates attending the continental challenge conference to the campaign on continental market opportunities, (b) the assessment of improvements in animal welfare monitored by veterinary officers and animal health inspectors, (c) the qualitative measurement of the plant health campaign, (d) the responses to the small producers of food campaign and (e) the qualitative assessment of the warble fly campaign.

Mr. Jack: (a) One hundred and sixty delegates attended the conference to launch "The Continental Challenge". Evaluation will take place throughout the course of the campaign, which runs throughout the year.

(b) The Government have a continuing policy of seeking improvements for the welfare of farm animals. Nearly 160,000 leaflets dealing with animal welfare issues have been distributed in the current year. No data are collected centrally about the transport of casualty animals or heat stress in farm animals. However, the Government are satisfied that the advice offered will contribute to a better understanding of animals' needs in circumstances where unnecessary suffering might otherwise occur.

(c) From its contacts with commercial growers and the general public, the plant health and seeds inspectorate considers that the plant health campaign has been effective in achieving its objective of raising awareness of the requirements of the single market.

(d) The primary objective of the small producers of food booklet was to provide advice to small businesses on sources of help available. Some 30,000 booklets have been distributed and, of those who have chosen to comment, nearly all have said that they found it helpful.

(e) Monitoring of the warble fly campaign is still taking place but early indications are that it has been successful.

Fisheries Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list those areas of fisheries policy she has so far identified where her Department has responsibilities towards achieving the objectives of the United Kingdom biodiversity national action plan; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: In making fisheries policy, Ministers take account of the objectives for conserving biodiversity which are set out in the United Kingdom biodiversity national action plan.

While EC fisheries policy is based on the sustainable exploitation of fish stocks for commercial—human consumption—reasons, less emphasis has been given to the impact of fishing on other species and on the marine environment. During our presidency of the EC at the end of 1992, the basic EC regulation governing the common fisheries policy was amended to include a clear obligation that the CFP must provide for rational and responsible exploitation on a sustainable basis taking account of implications for the marine eco-system.

Subsequently, at the December 1993 Fisheries Council I pressed for a re-examination of the industry fishing problem. As a result, the Commission is establishing a working group of marine ecologists and fisheries biologists to study the implications for the marine ecosystem of fishing in general and industrial fishing in particular.

Wherever appropriate the United Kingdom introduces national conservation measures in addition to those applicable throughout the EC. Most recently fishing for nephrops with twin-rig trawls has been restricted to help improve conservation of this species. The United Kingdom Fisheries Departments currently undertake research to discover what, if any, long-term effects heavy fishing gear including beam trawls have on the sea bed and its benthic communities.

It is clear that fishing effort should be reduced against many of the stocks around our shores, as elsewhere in the EC. To this end, the Government announced a package of conservation measures in February 1992. These included various changes to the licensing regime, a £25 million decommissioning scheme and restrictions on time at sea. Since then, license changes have been implemented and the first round of decommissioning has removed approximately 5,000 tonnes of fleet capacity, but the time at sea element of the package has been suspended pending a ruling by the ECJ. The industry's view is that technical conservation measures could play a much more significant role, and we are discussing its proposals with it.

Cereals

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the cost in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995 of the increase in set-aside compensation for cereal growers by 12 ecu per tonne, agreed last May by EC Agriculture Ministers.

Mr. Jack: The Commission has estimated that the increase in set-aside compensation will add 352 mecu—£267 million—to the Community's 1995 and subsequent budgets.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy cereals per tonne, (b) what she estimates the price of cereals per tonne would be in a free market without European Community price intervention, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of cereals, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on cereal subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the cereals market.

Mr. Jack: (a) It is not possible to provide a single figure for the price of cereals in Britain per tonne which wholesalers have to pay. The following are average ex-farm prices for wheat and barley in pounds sterling per tonne.

(b) It is not possible to make precise estimates about what prices might result if there were no market support in the EC. A large number of assumptions would be required in order to assess how domestic and world markets would react if commodity policy were to be changed.

(c) The latest estimates for 1992-93 put cereal production at 166 million tonnes and consumption at 137 million tonnes.[3]

(d) Total EC cereals expenditure in the 1993 calendar year was £5,154 million.[4]

(e) The Exchequer cost of CAP support of cereals in the United Kingdom is estimated at £948 million for the 1993-94 financial year.[5] The United Kingdom also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of cereals support in other member states.

Butter

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy butter per 250 g pack, (b) the price at which the European Community sells butter per 250 g pack on the world market, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of butter, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on butter subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the butter market.

Mr. Jack: (a) The first-hand delivered price of butter in the United Kingdom is between 62p and 79p per 250 g pack; (b) the price of butter on the world market fluctuates, but the current minimum price under the international dairy agreement is $1,350 per tonne; (c) production of butter in EC dairies was 1,636,000 tonnes in 1992 and is estimated to be 1,658,000 tonnes in 1993; consumption of butter in the EC was 1,591,000 tonnes in 1992 and is estimated to be 1,567,000 tonnes in 1993; (d) the 1993 provisional outturn of CAP expenditure on butter support in the European Community amounted to £1 billion; (e) the Exchequer cost of CAP support of butter in the United Kingdom is estimated at £67·5 million for the 1993-94 financial year. The United Kingdom also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of butter support in other member states.

Flood Defence Committees

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether the national code of local government conduct—DOE circular 8/90—applies to the flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority;

(2) what advice she has given to county councils regarding the national code of local government conduct—DOE circular 8/90—and the benefits that farmers and landowners may receive from the National Rivers Authority flood defence operations.

Mr. Jack: The code does not apply directly to the flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority, but members of local authorities appointed to the committees are subject to the provisions in paragraph 33 of the code. No advice has been given to county councils regarding the code in relation to the flood defence operations of the National Rivers Authority because the pecuniary interests of all members of flood defence committees are governed by provisions in sections 94 to 98 of the Local Government Finance Act 1972 and these provisions are specifically included in the terms of appointment issued to ministerial appointees.

Sugar

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy sugar per kilogramme, (b) the price at which the European Community sells sugar per kilogramme on the world market, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of sugar, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on sugar subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the sugar market.

Mr. Jack: (a) Sugar manufacturers' list prices for bulk white sugar are currently around £0·66 per kilogramme, though the actual price paid is subject to negotiation between sugar producers and their customers.

(b) Currently, quota sugar is being sold on the world market, with the aid of export refunds, at around 0·30 ecu per kilogramme—£0·22 per kilogramme[1].

(c) The latest figures from the European Commission estimate total Community sugar production for 1992-93 at 15,602,179 tonnes, of which 13,336,888 tonnes is quota sugar. Consumption is estimated at 11,818,179 tonnes.

(d) The provisional outturn for Community expenditure for sugar in 1993 is 2,189 mecu—£1,720 million[2].

(e) The Exchequer cost of CAP support for sugar in the United Kingdom is estimated at £123,853 million for the 1993-94 financial year. The United Kingdom also contributes to the EC budget as a whole which funds the cost of sugar support in other member states. Around 55 per cent. of the costs of the regime are recovered from levies raised on growers and processors, which contribute to EC own resources.

[1] £1 = 1·3228 ecu—[2] £1 = 1·2729 ecu.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will estimate the proportion of common agricultural policy spending that does not go to farmers but is (a) paid to middlemen who store unwanted surplus food and (b) is used to subsidise this surplus for export on to world markets.

Mr. Jack: Information on EC expenditure on storage of intervention produce prior to its sale and on export refunds is contained in annex 9 and annex 5, respectively, of the annual financial reports of guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. These have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will arrange for a copy of the report of the European Commission on the common agricultural policy to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 9 March to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler), Official Report, column 277.

Horticultural Imports

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement about the operation of minimum import prices for horticultural products, particularly blackcurrants, imported into the European Community.

Mr. Jack: The Europe agreements between the Community and Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Romania and Bulgaria provide for minimum import prices for fresh and frozen blackcurrants from these countries. They may come into force when:

during each three-month period of the marketing year, the average unit value for each product imported into the Community is lower than the minimum import price for that product; and during any period of two weeks, the average unit value for each product imported in the Community is lower than 90 per cent. of the minimum import price for that product, in so far as the quantities imported during this period are not less than 4 per cent. of the normal annual import.

The Commission is responsible for implementing and monitoring the arrangements in the Europe agreements.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list those aspects of agricultural, aquaculture and fisheries policy, with United Kingdom relevance, on which she transfers responsibility for answering oral parliamentary questions to another Department.

Mr. Jack: Ministers in this Department answer parliamentary questions on all agriculture, fisheries and food matters with United Kingdom relevance. Questions will only be transferred if the allocation of responsibilities between Departments suggests that in the particular case an answer could best be given by a Minister in another Department.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence her Department has of increased severity of symptoms induced by bovine immunodeficiency virus in non-experimental infections or of a syndrome of superinfection.

Mr. Soames: Disease induced by bovine immunodeficiency virus in non-experimental cattle has not been diagnosed in this country. Extremely detailed investigations are in progress in a herd in Cheshire in which cattle with serological evidence of exposure to the virus have been identified. We are not aware of any published reports from abroad of disease in non-experimental cattle definitely induced by BIV. The three cattle in the United States from which the virus has been isolated over a period of 25 years were in poor condition but it is not known what role, if any, BIV played. A recent Canadian paper on a serological survey in Ontario dairy cattle reported that positive BIV serological herd test results were associated with slightly lower than average milk production. A published summary of work carried out by Louisiana State university school of veterinary medicine suggested findings of a range of conditions in a single dairy herd where there was also serological evidence of BIV and of the virus which causes enzootic bovine leukosis.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by her Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much her Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: We have not, in the time available and without incurring disproportionate cost, been able to check comprehensively with all our agencies and outstations the actual expenditure in each financial year in the period specified.

In general, the Department has made relatively little use of freephone and freepost facilities.

A freephone service was set up in 1991 to enable members of the public to report incidents where they suspected the use of pesticides posed a serious risk to people, animals and wildlife.

A further freephone line was set up this year as part of MAFF's "food sense" campaign. It will operate from 7 February to 16 March to enable members of the public to order information booklets.

In a rather different category, two freephone numbers have been operating, since 1986 and 1993 respectively, for use by MAFF staff working in our information technology department who need to dial into the Ministry's datacommunications network whilst working away from the office.

The recent cost of these facilities, to date, is:

	1990-91 £	1991-92 £	1992-93 £	1993-94 £
Pesticides Incidents line	—	28·3	329·1	361·63
Information Technology Department staff lines	3,973·25	6,887·5	9,495·8	8,523·22

Our records indicate that MAFF has only operated one substantial freepost service. This was for a period ending in 1989 to enable members of the public to send for a MAFF booklet on food additives. Exact figures are not readily available, but the total annual cost did not exceed £5,000.

National Milk Records

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to ensure that national milk records will continue to provide accurate information to dairy farmers.

Mr. Jack: The Milk Marketing Board proposed in its reorganisation scheme that the future of national milk records should be determined after vesting day by the residuary MMB. The scheme, which has been amended by the board three times, is subject to a further consultation exercise which will end on 8 April. I must not prejudge the decision which my right hon. Friends the Minister and the Secretary of State for Wales have to take on whether to approve the scheme. I am sure, however, that if the residuary MMB is established and given the task as proposed it will reach its decision with full regard to the interests of milk producers.

Less-favoured Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 2 March, Official Report, columns 744-46, if the information published for the farm type cattle and sheep is the same as for the farm type mixed cattle and sheep in the revised series.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No. There are four farm types which are included in the robust type cattle and sheep LFA. One of these is SDA mixed cattle and sheep, the other three are SDA specialist sheep, SDA specialist beef and DA cattle and sheep. A full description of the system of farm classification is contained in appendix 3 of farm incomes in the United Kingdom 1991-92.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 277, how livestock units translate in terms of numbers of hill cows and hill ewes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: For the purposes of assessing stocking density on farms in the farm business survey, animal numbers are converted into livestock units—LU. One hill cow is equivalent to 0·75 LU and one hill ewe —eligible to SDA higher rate hill livestock compensatory allowance—is equivalent to 0·06 LU. Full details of the livestock units used in the farm business survey are contained in appendix 2 of Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1991-92.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the figures for net farm income published for (a) the farm business survey and (b) the farm business survey weighted in accordance with the annual farm census (i) reflect the net farm income of whole farm enterprises or (ii) are adjusted to reflect the individual income of each (1) partner, (2) director and (3) shareholder; and what would be the effect of disaggregating the figures along these lines on the averages for (x) total LFA income and (y) income of each person deriving a taxable personal income from livestock farming in the less-favoured areas.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The national results of net farm income from the farm business survey are weighted averages which reflect the income of the whole farm business. Net farm income represents the return to the farmer and spouse for their manual and managerial labour and on the tenant-type capital of the business. The cost of all hired labour and the inputted cost of all unpaid labour is included as an input and is deducted from the value of output in the calculation of net farm income. It is not, therefore, appropriate to divide net farm income between partners, directors and shareholders.

Illegal Poisoning

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have been prosecuted as a result of the Ministry's campaign against illegal poisoning in each year since it started; what percentage increase this has been on each of the previous four years; and what has been the cost of the campaign in each year.

Mr. Soames: The campaign was launched in March 1991. It is not possible to identify the reason for a report of a prosecutable offence in every case but the number of people successfully prosecuted each year in England and Wales is as follows:

Calendar years	Number
1987	4
1988	5

1990	8

DEFENCE

Information Exchange Agreements

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the titles of the master information exchange arrangements agreements between the United States of America and Britain, outlining the subject matter of each title, the date each agreement was signed, and any other countries involved in each agreement.

Mr. Aitken: The Master Information Exchange Agreement between the United States of America and the United Kingdom was signed in September 1988. It provides for the exchange, for defence purposes, of information concerning military, technical or scientific topics. Individual information projects are set out in annexes to the arrangement. There is a number of these involving many areas of my Department. Information on them is being collected and I shall write to the hon. Member.

Porton Down

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the new defence microbiology laboratory at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, will be in use; what it will be used for; why it is necessary; and how much its construction cost;

(2) what is the subject matter of the substantial contract which is currently being carried out by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment for another Government Department mentioned in the published 1992-93 accounts for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down; what is the value of this contract; what is its duration; and when it started;

(3) what is the purpose of the two new facilities under construction mentioned on page 25 of the 1992-93 annual report of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment; why they are necessary; what is their cost; and which buildings they are replacing;

(4) if, following the publication of the account of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, in its latest two annual reports, he will now publish the annual budgets of this establishment for each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment—CBDE—under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letters from Graham S. Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 10 March 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if, following the publication of the account of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down in its two latest annual reports, the annual budgets of this Establishment for each financial year since 1979 can now be published has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The budgetary figures for the years 1979-80 to 1984-85 are not readily available. The cash outturn for these years from available records are as follows:

Year	Outturn £ million
1979-80	15·1
1980-81	14·4
1981-82	14·6
1982-83	16·3
1983-84	16·7
1984-85	16·7

These figures are at 1992-93 price levels.

3. In the years 1985-86 to 1990-91 the annual gross cash budgets for CBDE were as follows:

Year	Gross cash budget £ million
1985-86	17·9
1986-87	21·1
1987-88	21·7
1988-89	22·0
1989-90	22·3
1990-91	25·4

The figures for 1990-91 include works and property management costs as MOD untied from PSA on 1 April 1990. These figures are also at 1992-93 price levels.

4. CBDE became a Defence Agency on 1 April 1991 under the Next Steps programme and our annual published accounts are in accruals format to a Treasury Accounts Direction. From 1 April 1991, some expenditure previously controlled centrally was disaggregated to CBDE. The figures provided above are not directly comparable with those in the published Annual Reports because of the changes in the accounting and financial procedures.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when the new Defence Microbiology laboratory at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down will be in use; what it will be used for; why it is necessary and how much its construction will cost has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The new Defence Microbiology laboratory is intended to be available for use in 1998. It will be used to handle dangerous pathogens under safe conditions in high containment facilities. The building will be used to carry out work into protective measures against biological warfare agents including detection and medical countermeasures. The new building is necessary to replace existing buildings which will have reached the end of their life within the next ten years.

3. Currently, the building is at the design stage. As the construction will be subject to competitive tender, it is not possible to provide details of the estimated cost at this time.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what is the purpose of the two new facilities under construction mentioned on page 25 of the 1992-93 annual report of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, why are they necessary, what is their cost and which buildings they are replacing has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. One facility will provide a laboratory in which equipment and volunteers can be exposed to steady low level concentrations of test materials; these may be simulants or actual agents. This laboratory which cost approximately £3M replaces four existing buildings which have reached the end of their life.

3. The second facility is a laboratory in which toxic materials can be prepared as required for the programme to access the potential hazard to the UK Armed Forces and to investigate improved protective measures. This facility will be the UK's Single Small Scale Facility allowed under the Chemical Weapons Convention. It cost approximately £4·3M and replaces three existing buildings which have reached the end of their life. In both cases, a new facility is a more cost effective solution than refurbishment of the old buildings which are over 40 years old.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what is the subject matter of the substantial contract which is currently being carried out by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment for another Government Department mentioned in the published 1992-93 accounts, what is the value of this contract, what is its duration and when it started has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. This contract is being carried out on behalf of the Home Office and is concerned with the protection of the public against the possible effects of chemical and biological materials. It would not be in the interests of security to disclose further details of the work involved under this contract.

RAF Personnel Management Centre

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many tenders were received for the refurbishment of offices for the Air Officer Commanding the RAF personnel management centre, Innsworth; and whether the lowest tender received was accepted;

(2) what is the estimated total cost of the refurbishment of offices for the Air Officer Commanding the RAF personnel management centre, Innsworth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The construction and refurbishment work in hand at RAF Innsworth is related to the reorganisation of the RAF command structure and the establishment of the new RAF personnel and training command which will operate from the site from 1 April 1994. The estimated cost of the new office accommodation for the personnel and training command headquarters as a whole, including furniture and fittings, is about £12,000,000.

This major new build project was fully completed and the winning contractor, Mowlems, was selected from four competitive tenders, of which it was the lowest. In addition to the new build, some refurbishment of the RAF personnel management centre office block, which will form part of the new personnel and training command, is currently taking place at an estimated cost of some £90,000. This work is being carried out by Taylor Woodrow as part of a wider contract to undertake ad hoc works and maintenance for a fixed three-year period—this contract was also selected by competitive tender. No specific expenditure has been made on the personal offices of the air officer commanding the personnel management centre.

Fox Armoured Cars

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Army's current holding of Fox armoured cars and of each category of the CVR (T); and what changes are planned in the fleets of these vehicles.

Type	Quantity	Planned changes
CVR (Wheeled) Fox	356	It is planned that all vehicles will be taken out of service by early 1995
CVR(T) Scorpion	262	104 will be converted to CVR(T) Sabre using turrets from Fox vehicles. A further 31 will remain in service at the British Army Training Unit, Suffield (BATUS) in Canada. It is planned that the remainder will be taken out of service by the end of 1994
CVR(T) Sabre	2	Total will be 106 after conversion of 104 Fox and 104 Scorpion
CVR(T) Samson	90	Due to reduce to approximately 55
CVR(T) Striker	89	Due to reduce to approximately 58
CVR(T) Sultan	283	Due to reduce to approximately 141
CVR(T) Spartan	658	Due to reduce to approximately 627
CVR(T) Samaritan	50	No changes planned
CVR(T) Scimitar	314	No changes planned

The cost was £1,573·91 including VAT and was charged to the chief of the Defence Staff's entertainment allowance, which is included in class 1, vote 1, subhead item I11.

Wild Boars (Catterick)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to date of his Department's attempts to trap two wild boars at Catterick barracks, Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: In April 1993, some 30 boars escaped from a farm at Easby near Richmond in north Yorkshire. With a view to preventing damage to MOD property, my Department has been liaising with the local authority in an attempt to capture the boars. All but two have now been recaptured.

The cost so far to my Department has been around £3,500; covering the cost of repairs to sports fields, use of equipment and the land warden's time. It is our intention to claim this from the farmer's insurance company in due course.

RAF

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of each type of aircraft were in service with the RAF at (a) 1 January 1984 and (b) 1 January 1994.

Mr. Hanley: We do not hold records of the information requested as at 1 January 1984. Details of the types of numbers of RAF aircraft—those in squadron service, operational conversion units, and support and training units, excluding in-use-reserves—as at March 1984 and March 1994 are:

Territorial Army

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose of the current advertising campaign on television for the Territorial Army; and what account the campaign has taken of the numbers of regular soldiers being made redundant.

Mr. Hanley: The Territorial Army requires about 20,000 new recruits annually. The recent television advertisements were part of the annual recruiting campaign.

Regular soldiers who are leaving the Army on redundancy terms are given information about the TA and receive an invitation to join. Many soldiers prefer, however, to settle into civilian life before considering such an option.

Service Children

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the number of children of service personnel in (a) Humberside, (b) North Yorkshire, (c) South Yorkshire and (d) West Yorkshire whose places at an independent or private school were paid for by his Department in each of the last four years.

Mr. Hanley: Information on the locations of children of service parents claiming boarding school allowance is not collected annually. The most recent figures are for 1992, and are as follows:

	Number
(a) Humberside	47
(b) North Yorkshire	697
(c) South Yorkshire	Nil
(d) West Yorkshire	185

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will send a copy of the joint air miss working group's report on the air miss between any Army Lynx helicopter and a Royal Air Force Tornado over the north Yorkshire moors on 17 January 1993 to the hon. Member for Don Valley.

Mr. Hanley: A copy of the air miss report into the incident, which occured on 12 January 1993, is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will send the hon. Member for Don Valley a copy of the report of the joint air miss working group's report on the air miss between a Royal Air Force Tornado and a Jet Ranger helicopter over Caithness on 8 April 1992.

Mr. Hanley: A copy of the air miss report is available in the Library of the House.

MK95 Lynx Helicopters

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what means the five MK95 Lynx helicopters were delivered last year to the Portuguese Navy, and at what cost; what consideration was given to the use of RAF aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Delivery of the five MK95 Lynx helicopters was a matter for the Portuguese Government and Westland Helicopters. RAF aircraft were not involved.

Equipment Damage

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all instances of damage to armed services equipment by private contractors reported for each year since 1990, together with the cost in each instance and the total cost.

Mr. Aitken: The information could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost and effort. My Department does not maintain central records of such instances, however MOD contract conditions address such possibilities, and are invoked as necessary.

RAF Maintenance Work

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests he or his Department have received from the Treasury or other parts of the Government that maintenance work for the RAF should be moved into the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: It would not be appropriate to give details of interdepartmental discussions, and I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 15 December 1993, Official Report, column 739.

Submarines

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what recent representations he has received concerning the complaints of infringement by Royal Navy submarines and United States submarines of the code of safety in fishing areas; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the average amount of time spent investigating allegations concerning near-collisions between Royal Navy submarines and fishing vessels; to whom the reports of such investigations are submitted; who makes the decisions concerning the holding of courts martial where negligence of watch officers and others is concerned; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many incidents involving allegations concerning near-collisions between (a) Royal Navy submarines or (b) United States Navy submarines and United Kingdom fishing vessels over the past seven years have been the subject of formal investigations; of these, how many led to courts martial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I have received no recent formal representations concerning complaints of infringement of Royal Navy submarines and United States Navy submarines of the code of practice in fishing areas.

Since the formal adoption of the code of practice in October 1993, the only incident to have taken place between a Royal Navy submarine and a United Kingdom fishing vessel is that between HMS Valiant and the fishing vessel Audacious on 8 November 1993. A full investigation was immediately put in hand, which has recently been concluded. The findings, which are currently being examined, will be made available shortly to the members of the Department of Transport's fishing industry safety committee sub-group dealing with submarine and fishing vessels matters, which includes representatives of the fishermen's federations.

Reports of investigations are submitted via flag officer submarines to the commander-in-chief fleet. It is for the commander-in-chief fleet to make any decisions regarding courts martial. It is difficult to give an average for the amount of time spent investigating incidents; this depends on the complexity of each individual case.

Investigations into near collisions between United States Navy submarines and United Kingdom fishing vessels during the past seven years are a matter for the appropriate United States authorities. The code of practice governing the conduct of submarines when operating in the vicinity of fishing vessels does, of course, apply to all foreign submarines operating dived within United Kingdom territorial waters.

Malaysia

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who drew up the list of defence firms which Lady Thatcher promised to supply to Malaysia under the arms deal negotiated between 1985 and 1988; what were the criteria for choice; and which were the companies selected.

Mr. Aitken: There is no such list.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1055, if he will provide whatever information is available of those occasions on which he, or other Ministers in his Department, have signed public interest immunity certificates, and for what reasons.

Mr. Hanley: Since my right hon. and learned Friend became Secretary of State for Defence, he or other Ministers in his Department have signed public interest immunity certificates on seven occasions.

In June 1992, my right hon. and learned Friend signed a certificate which set out the national security and personal safety grounds for screening certain members of the armed forces from the public, and for the protection of certain information from disclosure. This certificate was prepared for the hearing of a civil claim. In the event, the hearing was delayed, and he signed a fresh certificate in similar terms in March 1993. He signed certificates for the same purpose in January 1993 in relation to another civil claim, and in April 1993 in relation to the proceedings of an inquest.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Sir A. Hamilton) signed PII certificates in relation to two cases. In January 1993 he signed a certificate for the same purposes as those in the first instance above in relation to the proceedings of an inquest. In February 1993, in relation to criminal proceedings, he signed a certificate setting out the grounds for protecting information, the disclosure of which would be harmful to national security.

In October 1992 my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State signed a certificate relating to a case heard in camera by agreement of the court and the parties. In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement signed in September 1992 certificates in the same terms in connection with the Matrix Churchill case. The certificate signed by the Minister of State was not used.

Belize Defence Force

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman), of 23 February, Official Report, column 23, he will list all items of equipment, vehicles, ammunition and stores of over £1,000 value he intends to give to the Belize defence force; what plans he has to provide (a) helicopter support and (b) aircraft engineering support to the force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Of the £338,000 worth of equipment the MOD intends to gift to the Belize defence force the following items have been identified as being of more than £1,000 in value:

Vehicles:
Up to 23 3/4 tonne Land Rovers and a small number of trucks
Ammunition:
5·566mm and 7·62mm ammunition
81mm mortar rounds
66mm Heat rockets

We have discussed with the Government of Belize their future requirements for helicopters and associated engineering support. We are currently providing expert assistance to help them identify their precise needs.

Desert Storm Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) former service men or (b) current service men have contacted his Department complaining of ill-health effects they believe to be desert fever arising from contamination from serving in the British forces in Operation Granby.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 15 former and six serving members of the armed forces have contacted my department expressing concern about their health following service in the Gulf. All have been offered the opportunity to be medically assessed by a military consultant. Of the 14 who have accepted this offer, 12 have so far been examined. All have been found to be suffering from separate medically recognised conditions which are not peculiar to service in the Gulf.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent communication he has had with the Trauma After Care Trust regarding concerns over Desert Storm fever; and what plans he has to meet with TACT to discuss the problems.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has no record of receiving any communication from TACT since July 1993 and I have no plans to meet any of TACT's representatives.

Reserve Forces Reorganisation

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to report on the reorganisation of the reserve forces, following his review.

Mr. Hanley: Further to my answer of 17 February to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside, Official Report, column 998-99, Ministers have today written to hon. Members about the responses received during the consultation period. Work is continuing on our policy proposals.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: Such purchases are included within my Department's overall administration expenditure which is published every year in the supply estimates.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 24 February 1994]: From records currently available formal directions have been issued since 1979 on the following occasions:

April 1984
(D Day 40th anniversary celebrations)
February 1985
(Type 22 frigate)
December 1987
(Auxiliary Oiler Replenishment)
June 1991
(Chieftain replacement)
January 1992
(HMS Endurance replacement)
January 1992
(RNSD Copenacre)

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. David Davis: None of the agency chief executives in my Department is currently paid more than £82,925 excluding performance-related bonuses.

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in drawing up codes of practice for the disclosure of information held by local authorities and the national health service; and when he expects to publish proposals for consultation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The local authority associations have responded positively to the suggestion in the White Paper, "Open Government" (Cm 2290) that they could usefully adopt a voluntary code of practice on disclosure of information. The associations are preparing a draft.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has asked the NHS Management Executive to take forward the proposal for a code of practice for the NHS. A task force has been set up for this purpose and I understand a draft code should be ready for wider consultation by the summer, with a view to implementation by the end of the year.

Official Information (Code of Practice)

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to publicise its code of practice on official information when it comes into force in April; and what budget has been allocated for this purpose.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will be making a further announcement on the implementation of the code of practice later this month. Material explaining the operation of the code will be available from Departments and will also be offered to advice centres and similar outlets. A budget of £15,000 has been allocated centrally for these purposes.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date a copy of the permanent secretary's handbook was made available to Lord Justice Scott.

Mr. Waldegrave: The handbook for heads of Departments has not been submitted to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. However, copies of certain of the separate documents which are included in the handbook have been provided at the inquiry's request, including some of the documents mentioned in the answer I gave to the hon. Gentleman's question yesterday, 9 March, Official Report, column 256.

Charterline

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many calls have been made to charterline since its inception; what has been the average daily call rate and the average cost per call; how many personnel work on charterline; and what has been the total cost to date of charterline, including promotion and all associated costs.

Mr. David Davis: Over 5,530 calls have been made to charterline since its inception, an average of 25 calls a day.

IBM has nine trained staff available to answer charterline calls, who also perform a wide range of other tasks and answer other calls. Up to four of these are awaiting charterline and other calls at any one time.

The operational cost per call to date is £68. If call volumes were higher, significant economies of scale could be achieved. The operational costs of a pilot study are always relatively high. One of the purposes of the charterline pilot study is to assess the demand of the service and the volume of calls and costs that would be associated with a national service. The pilot study will ensure that, if charterline is rolled out, it is done on a high-quality and extremely cost-effective basis.

To date set-up costs amount to £1,251,000. These include initial research, project planning and management, system design, contractual advice and data collection, which are all one-off costs. Running costs to date amount to £1,037,679. These include paid advertising, research during the pilot study, set up and use of ACORN data—which categorise groups of households into one of 38 types, on the basis of such factors as the ages of the people living there, the size of their home, the type of work they do, their ethnic background and so on—operational costs, and operation of the charterline language service, which is available in Gujarati, Hindi, Punjabi and Urdu.

Market Testing

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if market-tested contracts awarded to private contractors will be audited by the National Audit Office.

Mr. Waldegrave: The National Audit Office will be able to audit records held by Departments in the normal way, to ensure that their contracting procedures ensure that propriety and regularity are safeguarded and that best value for money is obtained.

Departments and agencies will ensure that where finance-related work is contracted out the NAO will continue to have access to documents to enable it to carry out certification audits of the Department and value-for-money examinations of the way in which the Department has used its resources. The right of access to any such documents no longer held by the Department of agencies should be provided for in the contract. Even where documents are available in the Department, the NAO will normally require access to the contractor to ensure procedures operate correctly and that propriety and regularity are safeguarded.

It is not intended that the NAO should have access to records relating to the contractor's affairs, nor that he should conduct a certification audit of the contractor.

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total value of all market-tested contracts awarded to private contractors to date.

Mr. Waldegrave: Private contractors have been awarded £855·3 million of work under the competing for quality programme. Some contracts are still subject to negotiation.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of market tests in each Government Department were won by (a) in-house bids, (b) other public bodies in competition with in-house bids and (c) the private sector in competition with in-house bids.

Mr. Waldegrave: I expect to publish aggregate information on the proportion of bids won by in-house bids and by other bidders very shortly in the citizens charter second report.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for what proportion by value of the market tests in each Government Department there were in-house bids; and what proportion by value of the market tests in each Government Department were won by (a) in-house bids, (b) other public sector bodies and (c) private sector bidders.

Mr. Waldegrave: I expect to publish aggregate information on the proportion by value of bids won by in-house bids and by other bidders very shortly in the citizens charter second report.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals to the social security commissioner against decisions of social security appeal tribunals have taken over 12 months to resolve; what percentage this represents of the total; and what is the average length of time taken.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As of 31 December 1993, the average waiting time between an appeal against a social security appeal tribunal's decision and its determination by a social security commissioner was 433 days. The further information requested is not collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Jury Service (Deaf People)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement regarding the banning of a deaf person from sitting on a jury at King's Lynn Crown court in January.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Section 10 of the Juries Act 1974 provides that if it appears to a member of the court staff that there is doubt as to the capacity of a person who attends for jury service to serve effectively, on the grounds of physical disability, the person may be brought before a judge. The judge shall then determine whether or not the person should serve as a juror and, if not, shall discharge the summons. That procedure was followed in the case of a juror at King's Lynn. I cannot comment on the judge's decision to discharge the summons.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy to exclude the company which the Government select to build the channel tunnel rail link from claiming tax relief on trading losses without taking account of the value of the written off debt of European Passenger Services Ltd. when it is incorporated within the new company.

Mr. Freeman: The company which builds the channel tunnel rail link will be subject to the same taxation rules that apply to any other company in the private sector. The Government have no wish to interfere with those rules.

Disabled People (Parking)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review arrangements for disabled people's parking bays; and if he will consider extending the powers of local authorities to prevent parking across ramps to homes where access is required for disabled people's vehicles, other than cars.

Mr. Key: Local authorities already have wide powers to create disabled people's parking bays and I am not aware of any suggestion that these powers are inadequate and need to be reviewed.

The Road Traffic Act 1991 contains provision which enable most non-endorsable parking offences, including the unauthorised use of disabled people's parking bays, to be decriminalised and enforced by local authorities. The expectation is that such arrangements will lead to higher levels of enforcement. They are already being introduced in London and they will be made available shortly to local authorities elsewhere.

Parking across ramps provided for disabled people can amount to obstructing the highway—which is an offence, even in streets where parking is not otherwise prohibited. Enforcement is a matter for the police.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much he paid the corporate finance section of KPMG for advice on the future of the Transport Research Laboratory.

Mr. Key: A total of £91,826·26 inclusive of VAT.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which tenderers for the work of advising him on the future of the Transport Research Laboratory were individuals or groups with expertise in commissioning or completing casualty reduction, environmental, structural or mechanical research.

Mr. Key: All tenderers were free to structure teams as they judged best able to undertake the contract, KPMG Peat Marwick assembled a team which embraced a range of skills, including transport and research specialisms.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the terms of reference and correspondence with the corporate finance section of KPMG on the future of the Transport Research Laboratory.

Mr. Key: I am placing copies of the terms of reference for the study in the Library. These terms of reference were the subject of consultation with the trade unions.

Exchanges between the Department and the contracted consultants during the course of such studies necessarily take place in confidence because they involve a range of sensitive issues which may be commercially confidential. It would not be appropriate to make such exchanges public.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he gave instructions that the corporate finance section of KPMG should advise on (a) whether it would be possible or (b) whether it would be sensible to have a clean break between the Transport Research Laboratory and his Department;

(2) for what reasons he advocates a clean break between the Transport Research Laboratory and his Department.

Mr. Key: KPMG Peat Marwick's work was guided by the terms of reference for the study. The desirability of a clean break was identified by the consultants in light of the Government's wider policy for securing the complete transfer to the private sector of functions that need not be undertaken in the public sector, along with associated assets.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the competitive advantage of the corporate finance section over other sections, and the competitive advantage of KPMG over other consultancies, in respect of the future of the Transport Research Laboratory.

Mr. Key: KPMG Peat Marwick was appointed following a competitive process involving a written submission and a subsequent interview. They were judged best able to achieve the requirements of the study set out in the terms of reference. It was their decision to manage the work from their corporate finance section.

M62 Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total number of (a) valid objections to and (b) indications of support received by his Department for the proposed M62 relief road.

Mr. Key: So far, over 17,500 representations have been received. Most are opposed to the proposals. The figure includes an element of duplication.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effects his recently announced intention of accelerating the approvals procedure for new roads will have on the M62 relief road.

Mr. Key: Last August my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport announced a package of measures aimed at cutting the time it takes to prepare and build new roads and bypasses. A major element is the setting up of the Highways Agency which is to take on responsibility for the management and delivery of the roads programme on the 1 April. This does not mean that the rights of those opposed to the M62 relief road will be changed. Progress on this scheme will depend on its meeting objectives, the proper clearance of the approval procedures, and the availability of funds.

British Rail

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guarantees have been provided for the operational telecommunications requirements of British Rail and successor companies following the transfer of British Rail Telecommunications to the private sector.

Mr. Freeman: Discussions are taking place between BRT and Railtrack with a view to agreeing contractual arrangements to protect requirements for operational telecommunications for the railway.

Lollipop Ladies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to amend the law to permit lollipop ladies to assist pre-school children across roads.

Mr. Key: None. Sections 26 and 28 of the Road Traffic Act 1984 empower school crossing patrols to stop traffic at places where "children cross roads on their way to or from school, or from one part of a school to another".

The words "children" and "school" are not defined. The interpretation of the law is a matter for the courts, but it would seem that the legislation would not prevent school crossing patrols from escorting children to or from an educational institution that provides education or instruction to children of no pre-determined minimum age. This would include a nursery school or play group. It is, however, for appropriate authorities to decide their own policy in this matter, consulting their own legal advisers as necessary.

Coaches

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of coaches registered in other European countries checked by the Vehicle Inspectorate at the weighbridge on the A2 at Broughton in the latest convenient period exceeded 17 tonnes.

Mr. Key: Of those coaches registered in other European countries and check-weighed at Broughton, 18 per cent. were found to be overloaded by more than 5 per cent., or 1 tonne, whichever was the lesser. The figures, which are for the period 1 January to 31 December 1993, include those vehicles with a maximum permitted weight of more than 17 tonnes. Information on European vehicles weighed and found to be less than 5 per cent. overweight cannot be disaggregated from the data.

UK-US Air Services

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is proposing to continue negotiations with the United States Government on the liberalisation of air services between the two countries, following the announcement by British Airways in respect of its plans for further investment in USAir.

Mr. MacGregor: I have this week made proposals to the United States Government on how we should take forward our discussions on air services following British Airways' announcement. Although the outcome of USAir's restructuring may well influence the shape of the new agreement, I have said that in my view talks should certainly continue on the framework of a new agreement —on which excellent progress has already been made. I have also said that I remain open to an interim limited exchange of new rights to maintain the momentum of the talks; and have suggested that there should be an exchange of views on the economic significance of the code sharing rights granted to United Kingdom carriers under the 1991 agreement, whose renewal is due to be confirmed by the United States Government on 17 March.

Railway Drink and Drugs Law

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all organisations to which his Department sent and from which it has received responses regarding the consultation paper on proposed railway drink and drugs legislation, together with the addresses of each such organisation.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 January 1994]: My Department issued 42 copies of the consultation paper to transport operators, passenger transport executives, trade unions, the police, magistrates and the medical profession, and we received 27 responses. It is not our practice to identify those organisations or individuals who respond to consultation exercises.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of continuing family credit and disability working allowance towards an individual's SERPS entitlement in the years (a) 2000, (b) 2010, (c) 2025 and (d) 2035;

(2) what estimate he has made of the (a) number and (b) proportion of (i) men and (ii) women who will see an increase in their SERPS entitlement as a result of counting family credit and disability working allowance awards towards SERPS in (1) 2000, (2) 2010, (3) 2025 and (4) 2035.

Mr. Hague: The Government Actuary's Department project that expenditure will graually build up to about £0·1 billion in 2035. This figure must be treated with caution as it is based on current family credit and disability working allowance caseloads and does not allow for any future growth in the take-up of these benefits.

Modelling of the costs of this measure does not track the cumulative effect on individuals over time and so it is not possible to provide an estimate of numbers of beneficiaries. Most families and disabled people who receive family credit/disability working allowance—approximately 0·5 million at present—should be helped by this measure.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of extending home responsibilities protection to SERPS entitlements in the years (a) 2000, (b) 2010, (c) 2025 and (d) 2035.

Mr. Hague: The Government Actuary's Department estimates the cost of extending home responsibilities protection to SERPS as about £0·5 billion in 2010, rising to about £1·5 billion in 2035.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since its establishment on a separate Department.

Mr. Hague: This Department offers the following services by way of freephone:

Freeline 0800 666555—The freeline social security telephone service gives general advice and information on the full range of Social Security benefits and covers all aspects of an enquiry, regardless of the circumstances. Its aim is to provide a confidential, speedy and expert advice service without access to any benefit files.

It originally started as a series of regional initiatives and became a national service in 1984 with 40 staff.

There are 10 freeline centres based at: Sutton; Ilford; Cambridge; Birmingham; Bootle; Nottingham; Leeds; Edinburgh; Cardiff and Newcastle, with an 11th Freeline centre due to be opened this year in Preston.

Ethnic freeline—Punjabi 0800 521360, Urdu 0800 289188 and Cantonese 0800 252451—services giving general advice and information on social security benefits in these languages;

Welsh freeline—0800 289011—a service giving general advice and information on social security benefits in Welsh;

Family credit freeline—0800 500222—a service is available 24 hours per day, to order information packs on family credit;

The benefit enquiry line—0800 882200—introduced in June 1991—a service giving advice and information to people with disabilities and to those caring for them. Extended in April 1993 to provide a form completion service for invalid care allowance, severe disablement allowance, disability living allowance, attendance allowance and disability working allowance.

Social security advice line for employers (SSALE)—0800 393539—introduced in August 1993—a service for employers which gives general advice and information on NI contributions, statutory sick pay and maternity pay.

Itsa service help desk—introduced in late 1988—provides advice and help to users in DSS agencies, DSS or DH headquarters staff on approximately 250 systems ranging from the mainframe based operational strategy systems to small server based systems.

This Department uses freepost to a very limited extent mainly in advertising campaigns aimed at increasing the knowledge of the general public, for example, council tax benefits, or alerting them to changes in their liabilities and rights under the law. We offer an extensive business reply service—pre-printed addressed labels—which enables our customers to reply free of charge. Business reply envelopes are issued to our customers to facilitate the return of information or where a reply is essential to our business needs.

Costings for freephone and freepost are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rents

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the range of rents paid by those receiving housing benefit in each local authority area.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information is in the table.

Eligible rent (£/week)[1]

Region[2]	[3]Minimum	[3]Maximum

Data Source:

The Housing Benefit annual one per cent. sample of May 1992.

Note:

As the figures are from a sample, which has also excluded cases where the assessed amount of housing benefit is less than 50 pence per week, there could be cases with rents higher or lower than those selected in the sample.

[1]Data on rent paid is not available, therefore, the information relates to the amount of rent eligible for housing benefit.

[2]Range has been defined as the lowest and highest amount of rent eligible for housing benefit.

[3]The data relates to regions because reliable information cannot be given for individual local authorities from a 1 per cent. sample.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Hague: None.

Child Maintenance

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many child maintenance assessments have been completed to date.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive of the Child Support Agency to my right hon. Friend the Member for Mid Sussex (Mr. Renton) on 8 March.

Service Delivery Directorate

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to outsource the service delivery directorate of his Department; what consultations have taken place with the employees who will be affected; and what analysis has been made of the benefits in terms of service and savings to be achieved from any such change.

Mr. Hague: On 31 January 1994, the chief executive of the Information Technology Services Agency announced proposals to transfer the bulk of day-to-day computer and output handling operations to the private sector with effect from April 1995.

A programme of meetings was held immediately at which the chief executive, Ian Magee, explained to all ITSA staff the proposals. There have been further meetings to enable employees to discuss the outsourcing with senior management.

Information suggests that significant improvements in value for money and services to ITSA's customers can be achieved by transferring this work to the well-developed market that now exists for this type of work.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the last transfer to Northern Ireland of a prisoner was carried out; how many prisoners who have applied for transfer are still waiting for a reply to their request; and for what reasons these prisoners are still waiting for a reply;

(2) how many prisoners have applied for transfer to prisons in Northern Ireland since 23 November 1992;

(3) how many prisoners have applied for transfer since 23 November 1992 following the findings of the inter-departmental review; how many prisoners were transferred to Northern Ireland while the review was being undertaken; and how many prisoners have been transferred to Northern Ireland since the release of the inter-departmental review.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An interdepartmental review of the transfer of prisoners between United Kingdom jurisdictions was announced to Parliament on 4 June 1991. The recommendations of the review were accepted and reported to Parliament on 23 November 1992.

During this period 35 prisoners were transferred to Northern Ireland. Since the announcement of the outcome of the review 65 prisoners have applied for transfer to Northern Ireland; 11 prisoners, including some who applied for transfer before the conclusion of the review, have been transferred to Northern Ireland. The last such transfer took place on 20 January. Fifty-eight requests by prisoners to transfer to Northern Ireland remain to be determined.

Two prisoners temporarily transferred to Northern Ireland challenged the basis of their transfer by application for judicial review. These applications were dismissed by the High Court in Belfast at the end of last year. It has been necessary to give further consideration to the legal implications of these challenges before determining the outstanding requests. We expect to make decisions on these cases shortly.

Firearms

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were killed in crimes involving (a) shotguns, (b) licensed firearms and (c) unlicensed firearms in (i) the north-east of England and (ii) the United Kingdom for each year since 1985.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is contained in the following table:

Number of offences of homicide in which firearms were reported to have been used 1985—1992

Year	Cleveland		Durham		Northumbria		England and Wales
	Shotgun	Other firearm	Shotgun	Other firearm	Shotgun	Other firearm	Shotgun	Other firearm
1985	—	—	1	—	2	—	29	16
1986	—	—	1	—	—	—	37	14
1987	—	—	1	—	1	1	43	34
1988	—	—	—	—	—	—	27	9
1989	—	—	—	—	1	—	26	19
1990	—	—	—	1	1	1	33	27
1991	—	1	—	1	—	1	32	23
1992	2	—	—	1	2	1	25	31

No information is available centrally on whether firearms used in offences are licensed or not. Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Figures for Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Video Pornography

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will answer the letters of 2 December 1993, February 1994 and telephone calls from the hon. Member for Lewisham, East on the subject of unsolicited advertising of pornographic video material.

Mr. Maclean: I wrote to the hon. Member on 9 March 1994.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he intends to publish the rules under which the proposed new regime for criminal injury compensation is to operate;

(2) if he will now place in the Library a copy of the draft regulations for the operation of the amended criminal injury compensation scheme.

Mr. Maclean: The publication of the detailed rules of the tariff scheme which comes into force on 1 April 1994, was anounced on 9 March, column 224. Copies of the text of the rules and the accompanying guide, which explains to claimants how the new scheme works and the criteria adopted for deciding applications, have been placed in the Vote Office and the Library of the House.

Grand National

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs of policing the Grand National in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Racial Attacks

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to commission a survey comparable to the British crime survey, to examine the occurrence of racial attacks and racial harassment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no plans to commission a separate survey. The 1992 British crime survey involved some 10,000 households, and had a boosted sample of about 1,700 ethnic minority respondents. This produced a sufficiently large sample to compare rates and patterns of criminal victimisation between these groups and the white majority.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce new legal measures aimed at combating racial violence, racial discrimination or racial harassment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are considering recommendations for legislative change made by the Commission for Racial Equality in its second review of the Race Relations Act 1976; we will be looking carefully at the recommendations of the Home Affairs Committee inquiry into racial attacks and harassment.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to require chief constables to publish annual clear-up rates for racial incidents as compared with other offences in each division.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As part of the package of core performance indicators for the police, introduced in April 1993, each force will publish annual data on the total number of reported racial incidents in the force area, and the percentage of these in which further investigative action was undertaken. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to require the police to publish clear-up rates for racial incidents since in many instances the matters reported may not be ones for the police, but for other agencies, and may not involve criminal offences.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide additional resources to enable the establishment of local multi-agency panels aimed at combating racism.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Many local multi-agency groups are already in existence to combat racial attacks and harassment. The racial attacks group, as part of its work programme, will be seeking to inform itself of the number of multi-agency groups that have been established locally, and to learn from their experience. The allocation of resources to support these groups must be a matter for local agencies in the light of local priorities.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to investigate possible links between the activities of extremist organisations and incidences of racially motivated attacks.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The investigation of racially motivated attacks, and of organisations which might pose a threat to public order, is the responsibility of the police. There is no evidence to suggest that the role of extremist groups in racial attacks is anything but a very minor one.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to recommend that in cases where race is an issue, the defence or prosecution be able to propose and the judge be empowered to direct, that the composition of the jury includes some ethnic minority representation.

Mr. Maclean: The Royal Commission on Criminal Justice recommended that, where compelling reasons are advanced, it should be possible for the defence or the prosecution to apply to the judge for the selection of a jury containing up to three people from ethnic minorities. This recommendation raises serious questions of both principle and practicality and the Government have yet to reach a conclusion on it.

Horserace Betting Levy

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce his determination under section 1 of the Horserace Betting Levy Act 1969 of the horserace betting levy scheme beginning on 1 April.

Mr. Howard: I have today sent the following letter to the chairman of the Horserace Betting Levy Board and written similarly to the chairman of the Bookmakers Committee. A copy of the scheme has been placed in the Library of the House. The letter reads:

Following the Levy Board's and the Bookmakers' Committee's failure to agree the scheme for the 33rd Levy period last October, the scheme fell to be determined by me.

I have now reached my decision and I enclose a copy of the Scheme which I have determined.

The main feature is that the cash and credit rates remain unchanged. In other words, the scheme rolls over from 1993-94 with indexation of the other elements in the Scheme.

In reaching my decision I have taken into account the submissions made to me by the Government-appointed members of the Levy Board and by the Bookmakers' Committee, together with other submissions, including those from the British Horseracing Board, on which the Board members and the Committee were afforded the opportunity to comment.

The cash yield from the Scheme will depend on the leviable betting turnover. I have taken as my starting point an estimated £4,358 million in 1993-94. It seems unlikely that there will be no growth in turnover in 1994-95. Representations have been made in regard to the possible adverse effect of the National Lottery on betting turnover, but I doubt whether the National Lottery will have a significant effect in 1994-95.

In all the circumstances, my view is that the needs of racing justify a yield in the range of £50 million-£53 million and that such a yield is within the capacity of bookmakers to pay.

It is a long accepted principle that I should take into consideration bookmakers' capacity to pay I have given careful consideration to the arguments put to me in this regard. The scheme which I have determined does not increase the cash or credit rates payable by the bookmakers. This reflects my view that an increase in rates is not necessary to meet racing's current needs nor could it be justified. Furthermore, the first slice of turnover on which a fixed fee is charged has been increased in line with inflation.

The bookmakers have put forward arguments for a reduction in the cash rate. I am not convinced that in the present circumstances any such reduction is justified.

In reaching this view on the cash rate, I have had regard to the bookmakers' contention that falling profitability is a factor which should be taken into account in determining their capacity to pay the Levy. I am not convinced that the position has been reached where any erosion of profit margins is such that it impacts significantly on the bookmakers' capacity to pay the Levy. My attention has been drawn to the structure of the scheme whereby the larger bookmakers are, in affect, subsidising the smaller concerns with detrimental effects on the profits to be made from additional turnover. However, the way the scheme is structured in order to benefit the smaller bookmakers is a matter of choice by the Bookmakers' Committee. Nor am I convinced that the overall effect of the Scheme is such that there would be a real effect on capacity to pay the Levy at unchanged rates in the coming year.

I have been asked whether falling profit margins are a matter which should be taken into consideration in setting the Levy. I could not accept the argument that it is completely irrelevant to the question of "capacity to pay". On the other hand, the fact that some bookmakers may not recover the costs of the Levy in full from punters is not an argument in itself for reducing cash rates. The levy is a liability on the bookmaker, and it is up to him how he chooses to meet that obligation. In my view, however, it is reasonable to expect the Horserace Betting Levy Board, in discussing future schemes, to have regard to the likely effect of the Levy, amongst other factors, on the ability of bookmakers to manage their businesses effectively.

As a matter of general principal, it seems to me very much more preferable that disputes over the Levy should be settled without reference to me. There are matters which most intimately concern the horseracing industry and bookmakers and should, given goodwill, be capable of resolution between them. I should be greatly concerned about any tendency for requests for my determination of the levy to become the norm rather than the exception. Were this to happen, I should want seriously to consider alternative proposals for settling Levy disputes.

Octopus

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that no species of octopus other than octopus vulgaris should be used for scientific procedures in Great Britain which might cause pain, suffering, distress or lasting harm.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 8 March 1994]: No. The Animal Procedures Committee considered in 1993 whether cephalopods were sufficiently sentient to justify extension to them of the protection for laboratory animals provided by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. My right hon. and learned Friend accepted the majority view of the committee that octopus vulgaris alone might meet this test.

ENVIRONMENT

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 17 February, Official Report, column 973.

Mr. Baldry: My Department does not operate computer-aided facilities management systems as such, although, as in other parts of the Department, computers are used by those employed in facilties management as part of their day-to-day work. There is no reason to suppose any link between this and the number of thefts from the Department.

Fuel Economy

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to encourage other Government Departments to economise in the use of fuel; and with what results.

Mr. Atkins: Energy management in individual Government Departments is a matter for the Ministers responsible for those Departments. My Department provides information on good practice and monitors the progress of Departments towards the target of improving energy efficiency by 15 per cent. over the five years to 1995-96. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State also reviews progress at meetings of Green Ministers, which he chairs. Results for 1992-93 were given in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 20 October 1993, Official Report, columns 256-59, and updated energy expenditure information was provided in answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 20 January 1994, Official Report, columns 829-30.

Advice and guidance is made available to all Departments through regular meetings and correspondence and through technical literature, videos and seminars. Current initiatives include encouraging Departments to take advantage of opportunities for using contract energy management and to examine the scope for combined heat and power.

Marsham Street

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has of (a) previous land use, (b) contaminants present, (c) clean-up work completed and (d) health risks present regarding the site of his Department's offices at Marsham street; and how he came by this information.

Mr. Baldry: Before the existing buildings were constructed in the 1960s, the site was occupied by a mixture of domestic and commercial users, the largest of which was a coal gas works. Consultants have advised that the site's previous use as a gas works may have led to some soil contamination. However, much of the contamination in the soil is likely to have been removed when the deep basements of the current building were evacuated. The building fabric itself protects the current occupants from any risks of contamination. This information is based on advice from consultants looking at the planning and development potential of the 2 Marsham street site.

Local Authority Tenants

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to lay regulations to give force to the new right to manage for local authority tenants.

Sir George Young: I have today laid before Parliament the Housing (Right to Manage) Regulations 1994 which will come into force on 1 April. The regulations implement our citizens charter commitment to give local authority tenants' organisations a statutory right to manage their own homes.

Seventy-four tenant management organisations are already managing their own housing under the present voluntary arrangements, and reaping the benefits of greater cost control, local accountability and responsive services. The right to manage will put those benefits within the grasp of any properly constituted and representative tenants' organisation. I expect to see many more TMOs managing their housing over the next few years.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to require local authorities to provide better information on their housing management performance to tenants.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce that today the Department has issued to all local housing authorities a revised "Reports to Tenants Determination" together with an explanatory circular. This determination sets out the information that local authorities must provide to their tenants each year on their housing management performance. I am placing copies in the Library.

The publication of the new determination follows a review of the existing reports to tenants regime, in consultation with the local authority associations and others, in the light of recent research on the operation of the regime since the first reports were published in 1991. I hope that the new reports will be more relevant to tenants' needs. This citizens charter initiative will help tenants to judge how well their council is managing its housing stock on the basis of reports written in clear and simple language.

From 1994-95 authorities will be required to report on housing stock, allocations, management costs, rents and repairs. Authorities will be encouraged to set targets for their performance to set the required information on the broader context of their housing strategies, current and future, and to provide information broken down to estate level as far as possible.

Land Searches

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to bring forward proposals for statutory time limits within which local authorities must answer standard inquiries by home buyers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My Department has today published proposals for new statutory arrangements for local authorities' handling of search inquiries made by people buying and selling property. These proposals are set out in a consultation paper entitled "A Statutory Scheme for Local Authority Land Searches", copies of which have been placed in the Library. The proposed new arrangements include new powers for local autorities to provide a one-stop service on standard search inquiries, a duty on local authorities to respond to these inquiries within 10 working days, and refunds of some or all of the fee if the local authority fails to respond within the time limit.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress there has been on the review of the arrangements for dealing with contaminated land which was announced on 24 March 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

I have today issued on wide circulation our proposals for the clean up and control of contaminated land. The consultation paper recognises that liability for past pollution is complicated and there are no easy solutions.

Interested organisations and individuals have provided helpful views which have been useful in identifying the key issues and options. The consultation paper gives all interested parties an opportunity to comment on the preliminary conclusions.

The consultation paper makes clear our support for a "suitable for use" approach to dealing with contaminated land. This means that contaminated land should be treated to deal with unacceptable actual or perceived threats to health, safety or the environment, taking into account the actual or intended use of the site. Where practicable, it should be kept in, or brought back into, beneficial use. This will help us to minimise pressures on greenfield sites.

The consultation paper invites comments by 26 May, and any views expressed will be taken into account before final conclusions are reached. I have placed a copy in the Libraries of the House. A parallel, but separate, consultation exercise is already under way in England and Wales.

SCOTLAND

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, in 1993-94 prices and cash terms, the total amount spent from public funds on training for Scotland in each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn in 1993-94 and the plans for 1994-95.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1994]: Training expenditure in Scotland was not recorded separately in the years prior to 1991-92. Since then, resources have been made available as part of the grant-in-aid of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to support the training programmes administered by these bodies. The following table provides details:

£ million

	Cash	1993-94 prices
1991-92	227·985	244·431
1992-93	218·122	225·211
[1]1993-94	204·420	204·420
[2]1994-95	207·486	199·506

Cornton Vale Prison

Dr. Godman To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to close Cornton Vale prison and disperse its prisoners to local, mixed prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 March 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 11 March 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about what plans there are to close Cornton Vale Prison and disperse its prisoners to local, mixed prisons.

There are no plans to close Cornton Vale Prison nor to disperse its prisoners to local, mixed prisons. Some consideration has been given to the possibility of providing open prison opportunities for women prisoners elsewhere but the practical difficulties are such that it is not in prospect at present.

DEFENCE

Desert Storm Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information in the form of oral testimony or written submission his Department has provided to the scientific panel established by the United States Defence Department to investigate the Desert Storm syndrome effects on allied service men who served in the Gulf war.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has been invited to provide information to two of the scientific panels established by the United States authorities to investigate the alleged Desert Storm syndrome. One is the defence science board task force on Gulf war health effects and the other the committee to review the health consequences of service during the Persian Gulf war.

My Department has provided both oral and written information confirming that there were no detections of chemical agents during the Gulf conflict and no evidence that British troops were exposed to such agents.

A written note on United Kingdom experience of the alleged Desert Storm syndrome was also provided to the committee which confirms our previously announced findings that there is no clinical evidence that members of the British armed forces are suffering from any unexplained medical condition peculiar to their service in the Gulf.

F15E Noise Trial

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will send the hon. Member for Don Valley a copy of the report on the results of the F15E noise trial when it becomes available.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 357.

Homosexuality

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provisions exist at present for the welfare advice and counselling of members of the armed services dismissed as a result of their homosexuality; what plans he has to improve such provision; and what discussions he has held with the organisation Rank Outsiders about this issue.

Mr. Hanley: Service personnel awaiting administrative discharge or dismissal as a result of their homosexuality may continue to avail themselves of the welfare facilities provided for members of the armed forces. My Department has not held any discussions with the organisation Rank Outsiders but wrote early last year in response to two letters from Rank Outsiders.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to bring forward proposals for changes to the armed services regulations to enshrine the commitment no longer to prosecute members of the forces on grounds of their homosexuality.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 1 December, Official Report, column 610.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 3 March, Official Report, column 873, if representatives of foreign Governments have been consulted as part of the planned appointment of the head of the United Defence Export Services Organisation.

Mr. Aitken: No.

9 Squadron

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ground crew there were attached to 9 Squadron of the RAF in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1990; and what is planned for 1995.

Mr. Hanley: The information for 1980 and 1985 is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The integral ground crew establishment for 9 Squadron as at 1 April 1990 was 154 posts. The forecast for 1 April 1995 is 134.

Yugoslavia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 943, if he will state the reasons for the decision to increase the number of the mortar-locating troops by an additional 10 personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The increase was made to increase the troop's operational effectiveness.

EDUCATION

Pupil Exclusion

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils have been expelled from secondary schools for drug abuse in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Forth: Figures for each of the last 10 years are not available. Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England was collected by the Department over a two-year period, starting with summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system. Eighty-one exclusions in year one and 179 in year two were reported to relate at least partly to drug or solvent misuse. These figures were not disaggregated between primary and secondary schools.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to collate and publish on a regular basis the figures on exclusion from school.

Mr. Forth: The Department monitored permanent exclusions at maintained schools over a two-year period starting with summer term 1990 under the national exclusions reporting system to inform the review of the operation of exclusion procedures under the Education (No. 2) Act 1986. Following that review, the Education Act 1993 made significant changes to the law on exclusions which come into effect in September 1994. In the light of experience of the operation of the new procedures the Secretary of State will consider whether any further monitoring of permanent exclusions is necessary.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what his Department is doing to encourage schools to use the exclusion of pupils as a last resort rather than a routine sanction.

Mr. Forth: A draft circular on exclusions was issued for consultation recently as part of the "Pupils with Problems" package. It makes clear that exclusion should be used sparingly and always as a last resort in response to serious breaches of a school's behaviour policy or of the criminal law. The final version of the circular will be issued in May to all schools.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the advice given to parents whose children face exclusion from school.

Mr. Forth: None. This is a matter for individual LEAs and schools in the light of the requirements of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986. Many schools and LEAs issue leaflets to parents explaining the exclusion process and their rights.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to give excluded pupils the right to appeal against their exclusion.

Mr. Forth: Pupils—or parents, if the pupil is under 18—already have a right of appeal under the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 against permanent exclusion.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table giving the percentage of current expenditure being devoted to education for each shire county in England, both before and after mandatory student awards; what percentage of the education expenditure is spent on education administration and other non-school expenditure; and what percentage is allocated to the schools, for each shire county.

Mr. Robin Squire: The provisional figures for 1992-93 for the shire counties are as shown in the table.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the unit cost per pupil in each London local education authority for 1992-93 for (a) nursery/primary and (b) secondary pupils.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the right hon. Member for Doncaster, Central (Sir H. Walker) on Wednesday 9 March, Official Report, columns 238-40.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what the numbers and percentages of (a) schools and (b) children at (i) primary and (ii) secondary levels who are in grant-maintained establishments for each shire county in England, both inclusive and exclusive of those in the private sector.

Footnotes to the tables.

1. The figures for total schools and pupils are estimates derived from the Department for Education's January 1993 Schools' Census.
2. The figures for numbers of pupils are based on a head count of full-time and part-time pupils.
3. The numbers of grant-maintained schools are the totals operating in January 1994.
4. Table A (maintained primary sector) and table B (maintained secondary sector) exclude figures for special and indpendent schools. The data on these schools held by the Department cannot be divided into 'primary' and 'seconedary'.
5. Table A and table B include middle deemed primary and middle deemed secondary schools respectively.
6. Table B excludes sixth form colleges as these institutions are now part of the further education sector.
7. Table C includes maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools, and non-maintained special and independent schools.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many appeals by parents against admission decisions by grant-maintained schools were considered by his Department for each school since the establishment of the grant-maintained sector;

(2) how many members of his Department are involved in considering appeals against admission decisions by grant-maintained schools and what is the total annual cost; and what plans he has to increase the number of staff involved.

Mr. Robin Squire: All admissions authorities, including the governing bodies of grant-maintained schools, are required to give parents the right to appeal to an independent committee. Where such an appeal is unsuccessful, parents may appeal to my right hon. Friend. That right of appeal applies to parents for all schools, both LEA and grant-maintained. No record is kept of the number of appeals that are made to him; in many cases an approach takes the form of an inquiry to the Department or of a request for advice. Most are handled by staff in the Department's territorial teams as part of their normal duties. There are no plans on that account to increase the number of staff in post.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the links between Sun Alliance and the Grant-maintained Schools Mutual Insurance Co.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is largely a matter for the Grant Maintained Schools Mutual although we understand that Sun Alliance acts in a reinsurance capacity.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what grant aid is estimated will be received by (a) the Grant Maintained Schools Centre, (b) the Grant-maintained Schools Foundation and (c) the Grant-maintained Schools Trust in 1993-94; and what amounts are projected for 1994-95.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1993-94, grant of up to £794,000 has been made available for the Grant Maintained Schools Centre Ltd. Neither the Grant Maintained Schools Foundation nor the Grant Maintained Schools Trust is in reciept of government grant.

The directors of the Grant Maintained Schools Centre Ltd. intend to restructure the organisation with effect from April 1994. Their intention is that the provision of information to schools considering grant maintained status should be handled by a new company, the Grant Maintained Schools Foundation Ltd. We understand that the present Grant Maintained Schools Foundation will change its name to the Grant Maintained Schools Charitable Trust.

The Department is currently considering an application for grant-aid for the new Grant Maintained Schools Foundation Ltd. for 1994-95. We have not received, and do not expect, grant applications for 1994-95 from the Grant Maintained Schools Centre Ltd. or the Grant Maintained Schools Charitable Trust.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools have insurance policies with Sun Alliance or its subsidiaries.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not held centrally.

Special Needs

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the numbers and percentages of (a) all, (b) primary and (c) secondary school children who have been statemented for each shire county in England; and what is the national average.

Mr. Forth: Information on children for whom statements of special educational needs were being maintained in January 1993 in the shire counties and in England is shown in the table. Also included is information on the numbers of pupils with statements attending maintained primary and secondary schools.

EMPLOYMENT

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made appointments to the following bodies in addition to those listed in "Public Bodies 1993":

—The National Advisory Council for Education and Training Targets (Appointments made jointly with my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales)
—The TEC Assessors Committee (Appointments made jointly with my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade)
—The Certification Officer for Trade Unions and Employers Associations

Appointments have also been made to:

—The Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action
—Investors in People UK Ltd.

These will be included in the 1994 edition of "Public Bodies".

Part-time Workers

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he intends to take to provide employment protection for part-time workers employed by their existing employer for less then five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Many important rights are enjoyed by all employees, irrespective of hours of work or length of service. The Government are studying carefully the recent House of Lords judgment on the hours thresholds which employees have hitherto had to meet to qualify for the full range of rights. The eight and 16-hour thresholds were put in place by a Labour Administration in 1975 and have not been changed since.

EC Directives

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department meets its obligations under EC directive 75/129/EEC as amended by Council directive 92/56/EEC concerning the consultation period provided for in paragraph 1 to be used by the competent public authority to seek solutions to the problems raised by the projected collective redundancies; how these obligations are met locally in respect of redundancies at a particular establishment; and how these obligations are met nationally where redundancies affect more than one establishment in more than one region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Statutory advance notifications of possible redundancies provided by employers are made available in confidence to the Employment Service, training and enterprise councils—local enterprise companies in Scotland—the Careers Service and other relevant Government Departments in order that assistance can be offered where appropriate to the employers and employees concerned. Such assistance is given most effectively at local level.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what judicial and administrative procedures for the enforcement of obligations under the EC directive 75/129/EEC as amended by Council directive 92/56/EEC are available to (a) the representatives of workers and (b) workers themselves to ensure that the competent public authority has fulfilled its obligations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The directives confer on workers' representatives a right to be consulted about prospective redundancies and on employers a duty to inform the Employment Department. Consultation rights are enforceable through the industrial tribunals upon a complaint by a recognised trade union. Failure to notify the Department is an offence under section 194 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992.

Sex Discrimination

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will direct industrial tribunals to sit in private where cases of sexual discrimination are being heard.

Miss Widdecombe: No. The general principle is that complaints of sexual discrimination, like all other complaints to industrial tribunals, should be heard in open court. However, sections 40 and 41 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 give industrial tribunals and the employment appeal tribunal new discretionary powers to prevent those making or affected by allegations of sexual misconduct from being identified in media reports.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek to amend the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to provide for compensation in cases of unintentional, indirect discrimination.

Miss Widdecombe: This matter is under consideration.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek to extend the remedies available under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to include reinstatement and re-engagement.

Miss Widdecombe: The option of recommending reinstatement or re-engagement is already available to industrial tribunals under section 65(1)(c) of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 and a respondent's failure to comply without reasonable justification may lead to an increase in the amount of compensation awarded.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will expand the support services of the Equal Opportunities Commission in relation to its work for the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

Miss Widdecombe: The Equal Opportunities Commission received grant-in-aid of £5·794 million for 1993-94, and will receive £5·949 million in 1994-95. Within the limits set by the Sex Discrimination Act, the EOC determines its own priorities and allocates resources within its overall budget.

Productivity (Rewards)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is Government policy on the rewarding of workers for increases in productivity; to what extent this has occurred; and if he will publish a table showing the percentage increase since 1979 in (a) real earnings and (b) output per man-hour of (i) male manual workers in manufacturing industry, (ii) white collar workers in the public sector and (iii) other white collar workers, together with an explanation for the difference in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The extent to which workers are rewarded for an increase in productivity is a matter for employers and workers to decide in the light of their particular circumstances.

Information on average weekly earnings of male manual workers in manufacturing industry can be found in table 4 and earnings of non-manual workers in the public and private sectors in table 1 of part A of the "New Earnings Survey" for the years requested. These figures can be converted to real earnings by using the information on the retail prices index—all items—at April, published in table 6.4 of the Employment Gazette and in table 26 of the annual supplement to Economic Trends for April of earlier years. Copies of the reports can be found in the Library.

The data on output per man-hour for the workers in the sectors requested are not available.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the aerospace industry in 1979, 1983, 1987 and 1992; and how many are currently employed in it.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on employees in employment in the aerospace industry is available from the periodic censuses of employment and is given in the following table:

Number of employees in employment in the aerospace industry[1] in Great Britain in September of each year

Year	Number
1981	185,000
1984	164,700
1987	158,200
1989	163,400
1991	147,400

[1] Activity Heading 3640 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what length of cable in metres was damaged in the fire in the channel tunnel which occurred on 13 November 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that approximately 600 m of cable was affected to some extent; only 20 m was seriously affected.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, columns 122-23, if he will place in the Library the reports on the fire in the channel tunnel on 13 November 1993 referred to in his answer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Disclosure of the report of the investigation into this incident by the Health and Safety Executive is restricted under section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, which prohibits the disclosure of information without the consent of the person providing it, except where disclosure would be for the purposes of the functions of the Health and Safety Commission, the HSE or other enforcing authorities.

Disclosure of Eurotunnel's report to the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority on the same incident is a matter for it.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Salaries

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the information on civil service salaries given in the Official Report of 20 January 1993, columns 254-57, in answer to the hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram).

Mr. Dorrell: New pay arrangements have been introduced for these grades. There are therefore no salaries exactly equivalent to those given in the previous reply.

The nearest equivalents for 1993 are as follows:

Grade	[1]Salary £	[2]Percentage of average earnings
AA	[3]8,878	53·9
AO	[3]10,632	64·5
EO	[3]14,307	86·8
HEO	[3]17,895	108·6
Grade 7	[4]29,338	178·0

[1] National pay scales applying to civil servants outside London.
[2] Percentage of gross national earnings calculated on the basis of New Earnings Survey figures, which include overtime and allowances.
[3] Standard pay, as at 1 April 1993.
[4] The old scale maximum (as at 1 April 1992) increased by the across-the-board increase of 3·9 per cent. payable from 1 August 1992, plus a settlement of 1·5 per cent. payable from 1 August 1993.

Staff can earn higher salaries through good, or better performance.

EC Budget

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate of member states' net contributions to the EC Budget in 1993, after the United Kingdom rebate; and what is his estimate for 1994 on the basis of the latest draft proposed EU Budget, taking account of the latest estimate of the United Kingdom's rebate for 1994.

Sir John Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury gave on 13 January, Official Report, column 246.

Public Works Loans Board

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed in the quotas for lending to local authorities by the Public Works Loan Board.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Public Works Loan Commissioners have issued a circular today notifying local authorities of a change in the formula for calculating the quotas for 1994-95. The change reflects the Government's continued concern about the level of investments held by some authorities and the amount of market borrowing undertaken or proposed. A lower rate of interest will be payable on the majority of the quota. Interest rates on that amount of the quota equal to an authority's provison for credit liabilities will continue to be set near to, but just below, market rates.

A copy of the circular has been placed in the House Library.

Chargeable Gains (Sheltering)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the current legislation which prevents companies in a group from sheltering chargeable gains with losses which are brought in by a company joining the group.

Mr. Dorrell: Two defects in the provisions which restrict the set-off of pre-entry capital losses have been identified. The first defect allows groups of companies to side-step the provisions by transferring within the group any assets with unrealised losses which have been brought into the group. The second defect may allow one group to avoid the provisions by buying a company with an unrealised loss, carrying out a series of transactions within the group and then selling the company to a second group before the loss is realised.

The Government have tabled a new clause to the Finance Bill to correct these two defects. The new rules will apply to disposals made on or after today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fish Farms

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether commercial fish farms have settling out tanks for solids produced and what supervision of disposal of these solids is carried out.

Mr. Ancram: The majority of fish farms have settling tanks. These tanks are inspected biannually by Department of Agriculture fisheries inspectors. There is no supervision of the disposal of solids.

Farming

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the figures in hectares for (a) set-aside, (b) pulses and (c) oilseed rape and cereals for 1989, 1990 and 1991 which were used to calculate the base rate for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The hectarage figures used to calculate Northern Ireland regional base area for cereals, including proteins—that is, pulses—oilseeds and set-aside are as follows:

	1989	1990	1991	Average
Cereals (including forage maize and proteins)	52,907	50,081	51,299	51,429
Oilseeds	922	1,223	1,151	1,099
Set-Aside	172	248	334	251
Total Northern Ireland Regional Base Area:				52,779

The total hectarage of proteins grown in Northern Ireland is insignificant. These are included within the cereals total.

Fishing (Conflicts of Interest)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will take to ensure that no conflict of interest arises where a commercial fisherman holds a licence to fish, a dealers' licence to buy and sell and a bailiff's warrant to enforce the Fisheries Acts.

Mr. Ancram: Powers contained in the Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1966 will be invoked as necessary should such a conflict of interest arise. The Act empowers the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland to revoke licences or object to the issue of a bailiff's warrant.

Dentistry

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount spent per child on general dental services, including in the calculation those not registered with a general dental practitioner.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is contained in the table.

(a) Gross expenditure (£000)	(b) Number of registered children	(c) Number of children in the population	(d) Cost per registered child (£)	(e) Cost per child in the population (£)
£13,146,890	285,646	463,835	£46·02	£28·34

Notes:

1. The gross expenditure on general dental services (GDS) in column (a) comprises capitation payments, child item of services payments for treatments given under capitation, and child item of service payments for treatments given on an occasional basis. Data is for the financial year 1992-93.
2. Data in column (b) is the number of children registered with a General Dental Practitioner (GDP) at September 1992.

3. Data in column (c) is for June 1992.
4. Children may also be treated in the Community and Hospital Dental Service as well as in the General Dental Services.
5. There is also some non-fee expenditure on general dental services (eg reimbursement of non-domestic rates, maternity payments, and employers' superannuation payments) which cannot be apportioned between child and adult treatments. In the financial year 1992-93, this represented 4 per cent. of expenditure on the GDS.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 935, if he will make a statement concerning the effectiveness of the Crown Prosecution Service regional public awareness campaign, as measured by the amount of editorial coverage in newspapers, radio and television.

The Attorney-General: The campaign began on 17 January in the south-west and will continue, region by region, until the end of April.

To date 50 local newspapers, with a combined circulation of 2,309,000, have reported on the campaign and the work of the service. The CPS has been notified of 27 reports about its campaign on local radio and television.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 935, what was the estimated and actual cost of the Crown Prosecution Service regional public awareness campaign.

The Attorney-General: The estimated cost of the campaign for the current financial year is £25,500 and £2,500 for the part falling in 1994-95. Actual cost cannot be ascertained until the campaign has been concluded.

HEALTH

"The Best Sex Guide"

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total cost of the production and distribution of the Health Education Authority magazine entitled, "The Best Sex Guide"; how many copies were produced; and what methods of distribution were used;

(2) what steps were taken to obtain parental advice on the editorial content and design of the Health Education Authority magazine "The Best Sex Guide"; and what control she expects parents to exercise over the distribution of this magazine to their children;

(3) what consultations she has had regarding the consistency of the method of distribution of the Health Education Authority magazine "The Best Sex Guide" with Government policy;

(4) what age group was targeted by the Health Education Authority with the magazine, "The Best Sex Guide"; and who was responsible for the editorial content.

Mr. Sackville: "The Best Sex Guide" magazine was produced by the Health Education Authority in collaboration with BBC Radio 1. It was aimed at young people of 16 and over. A total of 500,000 copies were distributed direct to young people on and around World AIDS Day 1993, 1 December, through a 24-hour event at Tower Records, Piccadilly, at some licensed concert and music venues and some colleges and health promotion units for use at their discretion. Production and distribution of the leaflet cost £83,000. The content and style, developed by the HEA, was based on consultation with Radio 1 about the needs of their audience and the HEA's general research into the views of young people and parents. The HEA produces a range of material targeted at specific population groups to address the requirement of the Government strategy on preventing unwanted pregnancies, the spread of HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases.

Ministers were not consulted in advance on this publication. There is a clear public health responsibility to give advice on safer sex to those who have chosen to become sexually active in their late teens outside a stable relationship. While this publication was aimed at that group alone, the HEA will obviously need to take account of the wider public reaction in taking forward health promotion in this very sensitive field.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Health Education Authority has spent in producing "The Best Sex Guide".

Mr. Sackville: "The Best Sex Guide" magazine was produced by the Health Education Authority in collaboration with BBC Radio 1. Production and distribution costs were £83,000 with the BBC contributing some further funding to the production of the booklet.

Severance Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of irregular severance payments have been reported to her Department since 1989; and what was the amount paid in each of those years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department is aware of one payment of £78,000 in 1992-93. In addition, the Department is examining other severance payments to ensure that they are fully regular.

NHS Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will request the Audit Commission to publish a report each year on fraud within health authorities and trusts.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to do so. The Audit Commission makes independent decisions on its work and publication programme.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 623, if she will place in the Library copies of the market research results referred to.

Mr. Sackville: Market, survey and creative research commissioned by the Department of Health is used as an aid to management decision making when planning publicity campaigns. We have no plans to make management information of this kind generally available.

Amniocentesis Tests

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines her Department issues to doctors carrying out amniocentesis tests solely to identify the sex of a baby; what requirement there is to keep confidential the findings of such tests; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has not issued guidance to doctors carrying out amniocentesis tests. This is a matter for the clinical judgment of the professionals concerned in each individual case.

All persons involved in the collection and handling of personal health information, including the results of amniocentesis tests, have a legal duty to preserve the confidentiality of that information.

Information obtained by the national health service about patients in the course of their care and treatment is confidential to the NHS. The NHS has a duty held in common law to prevent any unnecessary disclosure of this information, which would represent a breach of confidence. Disclosure of information to the patient concerned, however, would not represent a breach of confidence. Whether or not to do so, again, is a matter for the clinical judgment of the professional concerned.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what reviews are undertaken by her Department of abortion regulations and guidance following the deaths of mothers during or due to abortion;

(2) whether her officials automatically inspect private abortion clinics or hospitals following the death of women treated in such facilities.

Mr. Sackville: All reported deaths following termination of pregnancy in places approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, are investigated by the Department and any necessary follow-up action is taken.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports she receives of individual mothers' deaths caused by abortion.

Mr. Sackville: Details of maternal deaths, including those from legal termination, are reported and published triennially in the "Report on Confidential Enquiries into Maternal Deaths in the United Kingdom", copies of which are available in the Library. Also, private sector places approved by the Secretary of State under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, are required to notify the Department immediately if any death occurs during or after an abortion operation.

Maternity Units

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her Department provides national guidelines for minimum standards of comfort and hygiene in maternity units.

Mr. Sackville: No specific guidelines are issued, but a key objective for the national health service management is to create a clean, safe and healthy environment in our hospitals in which the community can be confident that it is receiving a quality service and the best health care possible.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many agency chief executives in her Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Hospital Beds, London

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in the accident and emergency departments in (a) King's College hospital, (b) Bart's, (c) Guy's, (d) St. Thomas's, (e) the Royal Free, (f) Whittington and (g) University College hospital were unable to be accommodated in beds in wards suitable for their conditions on the day on which they were admitted for the week beginning 28 February.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the responsibility of national health service trusts and authority boards to make appropriate provision for accident and emergency cases including short term fluctuations in the emergency workload. Sir Duncan Nichol wrote to NHS managers in January making this a priority issue. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairmen of the trusts and authroities for detailed information on the arrangements they have made and the weekly performance of the hospitals concerned.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is provided in the letter of appointment of non-executive directors of health authorities and trusts as to the approxmiate time commitment expected.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the salary of non-executive directors of health authorities and trusts is abated for absence due to (a) sickness and (b) other reasons.

Dr. Mawhinney: Non-executive members of health authorities and trusts receive annual remuneration of £5,000. This is not abated for non-attendance at board meetings, but continued membership of the board may be terminated if satisfactory reasons are not given for non-attendance for six months.

Blood Transfusion

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in arranging the transfer of regional transfusion centres from regional health authorities to the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Sackville: I have laid before the House an order to give the National Blood Authority functions relating to the collection, screening and processing of blood for supply to the national health service, and regulations making consequential changes to the functions of the regional health authorities when regional transfusion centres transfer to the National Blood Authority from 1 April 1994.

From that date we shall have an integrated blood service under the National Blood Authority. It will be responsible for planning and managing the service as a whole, for maintaining the very high standards of safety and quality of our blood service, and enhancing its efficiency.

Nursing and Midwifery

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given to the English National Board for Nursing and Midwifery regarding the terms and conditions of redundancy and severance in respect of senior management of the board and those staff working at regional level subject to redundancy arising out of the transfer of functions to London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Departmental officials wrote on 10 December 1993 indicating that ex gratia payments above £5,000 would require the Department's approval.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what powers the English National Board for Nursing and Midwifery has to change previously applicable terms and conditions in relation to redundancy of staff; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what direction she has given to the English National Board for Nursing and Midwifery in relation to the severance payments to be made in the light of the transfer of staff from Sheffield to London;

(3) what proposals have been made to change the terms and conditions of severance payments previously applicable in the case of the closure and redundancies of staff at the Sheffield office of the English National Board for Nursing and Midwifery and the transfer of functions to London.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Research and Development

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress she has made in developing a comprehensive research and development strategy for the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service research and development strategy was launched in April 1991. "Research for Health", published in June 1993 under press release H93/824, sets out the evolution of the programme and progress to that date. Copies of the press release are available in the Library.

Since then the Central Research and Development Committee has identified NHS R and D priorities in three further areas which cover physical and complex disabilities, the interface between primary and secondary care, and health technology assessment. R and D priorities in the areas of cancer services, diabetes, dentistry and mother and child health are currently being identified. Work has been commissioned in mental health and cardiovascular disease and stroke, and programmes of work in HTA, physical and complex disabilities and the primary/secondary care interface are now being developed. The first project in the mental health R and D programme was recently completed.

For the first time, NHS research projects are being registered on a national basis, and two complementary centres have been established to provide research evidence systematically to the service. These will support the R and D strategy in the new NHS as it continues to provide the basis for improvements in the approach to health care adopted by NHS managers, health professionals and those using the service.

Nurse Prescribing

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress she has made in introducing powers for nurses to prescribe.

Mr. Sackville: Primary legislation was enacted in 1992 —the Medicinal Products: Prescription by Nurses etc. Act 1992. Work is currently in hand to introduce the necessary subordinate legislation which should enable nurse prescribing to commence in demonstration sites from October 1994.

NHS Management

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what goals she has set for the employment of women in professional and managerial posts in the national health service; and what progress is being made towards them;

(2) what mechanisms she has established to monitor how effectively the goals for the employment of women in professional and managerial posts in the national health service are being reached.

Mr. Sackville: The NHS women's unit was established by the national health service management executive in October 1991 to take forward the implementation of Opportunity 2000 in the NHS. The management executive has set a series of eight goals for the NHS for achievement by 1994 which specify targets in management, accountancy, appointment of medical staff, appointment of non-executive board members, access to training and development and the encouragement of flexible working.

The role of the NHS women's unit is to establish national strategies and give guidance on priorities, agree and monitor performance targets for Opportunity 2000 in the NHS, recognise good performance and intervene to correct poor performance and encourage innovation and the dissemination of good practice.

Goal 1. Increase the number of women in general management posts from 18 per cent. in 1991 to 30 per cent. in 1994.

38 per cent. (58 out of 154) of vacant Chief Executive/General Manager posts in the 22 months between April 1992 and January 1994 went to women.

Goal 2. Increase the number of qualified women accountants in the NHS to 35 per cent. by 1994.

Almost 50 per cent. of trainee accountants are women. If all female trainees currently studying achieve success in their examinations this number will rise to 33 per cent.

Goal 3. Increase the percentage of women consultants from 15·5 per cent. in 1991 to 20 per cent. by 1994 necessitating an annual increase of 10 per cent. Accelerate the rate of increase in the number of women consultants in surgical specialities from the current 9·7 per cent. per annum to 15 per cent. per annum

Four regions have already exceeded the 1994 target.

Goal 4. Increase the representation of women as members of authorities and trusts from 29 per cent. in 1991 to 35 per cent. in 1994.

The 1994 target has already been exceeded. Ministers expect to maintain this progress with fourth wave trust appointments.

Goal 5. Introduce a programme allowing women aspiring to management positions to go through a development centre with a view to establishing their own personal development needs.

Goal 6. Introduce initiatives on recruitment and retention to ensure that the number of qualified nurses and midwives leaving the profession does not rise.

Goal 7. Ensure that following maternity leave or a career break all women, including those returning to nursing part-time or as a job share, are able to return at a grade commensurate with their leaving grade and to work of a similar status.

Goal 8. Monitor the time taken for nurses to reach management positions to ensure that men and women have equal access to these positions.

Progress on goals 5 to 8. These goals are about good employment practice. Authorities and trusts are addressing local needs in individual action plans. Over 50 per cent. of health authorities and trusts provide some form of help with child care provision and flexible working.

NHS Information Service

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in establishing a national health service information service for patients.

Mr. Sackville: In April 1992 all regional health authorities established a regional health information service under the patients charter.

On 26 January 1993 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched the new health information service when the regional services were linked together into a national network on a freephone number, 0800 665544.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in ensuring that comparative information about the health standards achieved by health authorities is available to the public.

Dr. Mawhinney: As part of the citizens charter initiative, we will be publishing the first set of national health service comparative performance tables later in the year. The tables will give information to the public about the quality of service offered by individual hospitals and trusts. Achieving consistently high success rates on patients charter standards, for instance, is an indication of a well-managed, patient-focused hospital. The first set of performance tables will include information about performance on five patients charter activities and on selected day surgery procedures.

District health authorities already publish annual reports for the public giving comparative information on the patients charter performance of hospitals and trusts with which they hold contracts.

Comparative information about health authorities has been published since 1983 in the health service indicators. It includes indicators of morbidity, mortality and outcome measures and is available to the NHS and, on request, to members of the public. Copies of the health service indicators are placed annually in the Library.

Amenity Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the facilities to which amenity bed patients are entitled.

Mr. Sackville: Amenity beds are defined in section 63 of the National Health Service Act 1977 as accommodation made available for patients who give an undertaking to pay charges, for accommodation in single rooms or small wards which are not for the time being needed by any patient on medical grounds. The charges represent the notional cost of the additional privacy of a small room or a small ward.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much income was generated by amenity beds in each year since 1979 in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Notes:

1. Amenity bed income received by national health service trusts is omitted as it is not possible to separately identify it.
2. The 1991-92 and 1992-93 figures are taken from the receipts and payments returns and are not therefore comparable with those of earlier years.
3. The figures for 1992-93 are provisional.

Health Visitors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students enrolled on health visitor qualification courses in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health visitors were employed by the NHS in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table. In addition, during the period 30 September 1988 to 30 September 1992 the number of practice nurses increased by 162 per cent. from 3,480 to 9,120.

Notes:

1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest 10 whole time equivalents.
2. Figures for 1989 have to be treated with caution due to under recording of areas of work by South East Thames regional health authority.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy on the number of health visitors.

Mr. Sackville: Staffing levels are the responsibility of local managers who, with advice from professional representatives, are in the best position to consider the amount and type of work to be done. It is for them to use the best skills on offer to deliver a high quality service whatever the background discipline.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the areas where the numbers of health visitors is proposed to be cut by FHSAs.

Mr. Sackville: Family health service authorities do not normally employ health visitors. Health visitors are usually employed by trusts or directly managed units. District health authorities and general practitioner fund holders usually commission health visitor services.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the report of the Lee review of the Health Education Authority.

Mr. Sackville: The report of the review of the Health Education Authority undertaken by Mr. John Lee and his team is still being considered. A decision about publication of the report has yet to be taken.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what present regulations or guidance govern the freedom of the Health Education Authority to criticise Government policy.

Mr. Sackville: Jointly agreed guidelines covering the relationship between the Department of Health and the Health Education Authority, including the balance between the authority's autonomy and freedom of action, and the need to exercise that autonomy within parameters acceptable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State were last revised in June 1990. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Oral Health

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken, or are planned, to address geographical and social imbalances in the state of oral health.

Dr. Mawhinney: Planning dental services and monitoring the dental health of the population are matters for district health authorities to undertake jointly with family health services authorities.

Mentally Ill People (Assaults)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many severely mentally ill people were responsible for violent assaults on the person in each year since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Private Health Insurance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 860, about meeting with representatives of private health insurance companies, if she will name the people attending the meetings or list the topics for discussion at each of the five meetings.

Mr. Sackville: All five meetings were held at the request of private health insurance companies, to allow them to express views on a number of issues. One of the meetings was attended by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health, one by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (John Bowis) and I attended three. Officials were also present.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 857, what recommendations she has made regarding the inclusion of questions on private medical insurance in the 1995 general household survey.

Mr. Sackville: None.

"Help Us to Help You"

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what mechanisms she has set up to monitor progress of the "Help Us to Help You" campaign;

(2) what plans she has to invest further money in publicity for the "Help Us to Help You" campaign through the popular media and advertising.

Dr. Mawhinney: The "Help Us to Help You" initiative takes the form of an information pack primarily designed to encourage the development of local campaigns. It is for the national health service locally to decide how to implement and monitor the progress of local campaigns. No central record is kept of resources used for publicity on local campaigns.

Dental Services

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount spent per child on general dental services including in the calculation those not registered with a general dental practitioner.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Child dental services

	Numbers Totals
(a) Gross expenditure (£000)	259,302
(b) Number of registered children	7,103,355
(c) Number of children in the population	10,951,170
(d) Cost per registered child (£)	36·50
(e) Cost per child in the population (£)	23·68

Notes:

1. The gross expenditure on general dental services (GDS) in column (a) comprises capitation payments, weighted entry payments, child item of service payments for treatments given under capitation, and child item of service payments for treatments given on an occasional basis in the financial year 1992-93.
2. Column (b) is the number of children registered with a general dental practioner (GDP) at 30 September 1992.
3. Column (c) is for 30 June 1992, estimated home population under 18.

4. Column (d) is calculated by dividing the figure in column (a) by that in (b).

5. Column (e) is calculated by dividing the figure in column (a) by that in (c).

6. Children may also be treated in the Community and Hospital Dental Service as well as in the GDS. Children who are not registered with a GDP can still receive GDS treatment on an occasional basis.

7. There is also some non-fee expenditure on general dental services (eg reimbursement of non-domestic rates, maternity payments, and employer's superannuation payments) which cannot be apportioned between child and adult treatments. In the financial year 1992-93, this represented approximately four per cent. of expenditure on the GDS.

Hospital Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional medium secure beds, respite care or haven type beds and general psychiatric beds will now be made available.

Mr. Bowis: On 31 January 1993 there were 635 places available in medium secure units and a further 250 interim medium secure places. The Government have invested over £45 million from centrally held funds for capital development in this area since 1991-92. Together with additional funds made available by health authorities, this will provide approximately 500 further places over the next two or three years. Future levels of provision will be considered in the light of assessments of need undertaken within regions. In 1980 there were 30 such places.

It is for health authorities to decide how best to meet the needs of their residents, including those who suffer from mental health problems. This would include sufficient in-patient facilities for those who need admission to hospital on either a short or long-term basis.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 165, if she will list by region name and each proposed hospital whose closure was contested by the community health councils since 1988; whether the hospital closed, merged, changed its function or was downsized; and what was the number of beds each hospital had at its closure date.

Mr. Sackville: The details requested are not routinely provided to the Department during the process for dealing with contested closures. The information requested by the hon. Member could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide the latest estimates of the percentage of children under five in each OECD country who have full-time or part-time child care places, including nursery school places.

Mr. Bowis: Information on child care places for under-fives in the Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development countries is not available. The OECD published in 1993 Education at a Glance, a copy of which is available in the Library. This includes information on participation rates for children aged under five in early childhood education in general for OECD countries.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which matters were raised during General Ilter's visit to the United Kingdom;

(2) what was the purpose of the visit of General Ilter, Commander of the Turkish Gendarmerie, to Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: General Ilter visited the United Kingdom for discussion of topics of common interest with Home Office, Customs and Excise and the Ministry of Defence. In Northern Ireland he was briefed on the principles underlying our security policy there.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the matter of human rights abuses in Turkey was raised with General Ilter, Commander of the Turkish Gendarmerie, during his visit to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. Every opportunity was taken to remind General Ilter that terrorism should be tackled within the rule of law and with full respect for human rights.

EU Intergovernmental Conference

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the stages leading to the European Union intergovernmental conference in 1996.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Article N of the Maastricht treaty provides that "a conference of representatives of the Governments of the Member States shall be convened in 1996" to review certain provisions of the treaty. Discussion of preparations for the conference has not yet begun.

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management system cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, column 768.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Overseas Development Administration use computer applications to provide effective management of computer assets and support costs. The FCO package, from Uni-Tech Ltd., cost approximately £30,000 and took five person weeks to implement. The ODA system, from Workgroup Systems Ltd., cost approximately £18,000 and took two person weeks to implement. It is not possible to identify savings resulting from the improved levels of support to computer users. However, the systems provide improved control of an inventory of some 23,000 items of equipment in the FCO and some 3,000 items in the ODA. None of the thefts referred to can be attributable to the use of these systems.

Mr. Veljko Dzakula

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to seek the freedom of Serbian politician, Veljko Dzakula, from detention by the Krajina police in a prison in Glina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We understand that Mr. Dzakula was released on 24 February.

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to which Chinese national organisations are independent of Communist party influence and control.

Mr. Goodlad: Our assessment is that most, if not all, public organisations in China are subject to a degree of control by the Communist party.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Malaysia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) of 25 February, Official Report, column 498, if he will now make it his policy to make financial and contractual arrangements of soft loans for overseas aid and development projects the subject of a formal announcement.

Mr. Goodlad: The signature of all new soft loan arrangements—umbrella agreements—and individual soft loan projects are usually announced through an ODA press release. However, the detailed financial and contractual agreements between Her Majesty's Government and the recipient Government contains commercially sensitive information and are therefore not the subject of formal announcement.

Consultants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what access to financial records is afforded to consultants appointed by the Overseas Development Administration to evaluate the financial soundness of companies chosen to fulfil contracts, pursuant to aid and trade financial support (a) before the final award of the contract, (b) during the fulfilment of the contract and (c) on completion of the contract.

Mr. Goodlad: The ODA does not appoint consultants to assess the financial soundness of companies applying for aid and trade provision support. Such assessments are the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Indonesia

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received regarding British aid to Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have received 196 letters about British aid to Indonesia since 1 January 1994.

Philippines

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what counter-trade agreements with the Philippines the Overseas Development Administration has been involved in since 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Goodlad: None.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will bring forward proposals to revise the operation of the national lottery to provide that it will return all profits to the community in the form of funding for the arts, charities, and sport, to exempt the profits from tax and to match distributed profits with grants from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have no intention of revising the basis for the operation of the national lottery, which was approved by Parliament in the National Lottery etc. Act 1993. There is no question of matching the sums raised from the national lottery with further Exchequer grants. Taxation is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

WALES

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives the Welsh Office has brought forward to reduce fuel consumption in transport as part of the effort to reduce carbon dioxide emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government's programme to reduce CO_2 emissions is set out in the recently published report "Climate Change: The UK Programme". This includes a range of measures to improve fuel efficiency which apply in Wales as elsewhere.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what guidelines he has issued to non-departmental public bodies regarding the admission of the public to meetings; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish the arrangements made by each non-departmental public body appointed by him to enable members of the public to have access to agendas, minutes and reports of such bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: All executive non-departmental public bodies publish annual reports and accounts which are laid before Parliament. The conduct of meetings is a matter for the bodies themselves, subject to the provisions of their founding statutes or charters.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to consult the Welsh Language Board in future on all developments concerning the national curriculum in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language Board is currently being consulted on the draft regulations required to give effect to the proposal to suspend the national curriculum requirements for Welsh as a second language in non-Welsh speaking schools for pupils aged 14 to 16 until 1999. It is also being consulted on the draft order giving effect to the other proposed changes to the national curriculum for pupils of this age group.

The board will be consulted in due course on the proposed changes resulting from the slimming down of the overall subject content of the national curriculum currently being carried out by the Curriculum Council for Wales.

On 1 April this year Awdurdod Cwricwlwm ac Asesu Cymru/the Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales will come into being. ACAC will have regard to the board's views in formulating its advice to the Secretary of State on future developments and changes to the national curriculum in Wales.

It is open to the board to give advice to the Secretary of State on any matter concerning the Welsh language at any time.

Later this month the Welsh Office will be issuing a short guide describing the various statutory agencies' responsibilities for aspects of Welsh language education. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the statutory basis for the requirement that landowners with sites of special scientific interest on their land enter into a management agreement with the Countryside Council for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Management agreements made under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968 between the Countryside Council for Wales and owners or occupiers of sites of special scientific interest are voluntary, not mandatory.

Dentistry

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount spent per child on general dental services, including in the calcualtion those not registered with a general dental practitioner.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is shown in the following table.

(a) Gross expenditure	(b) Number of registered children	(c) Number of children in the population	(d) Cost per registered child	(e) Cost per child in the population
(£000)			£	£
15,554	421,595	666,664	36·89	23·33

Notes

1. The gross expenditure on general dental services (GDS) in column (a) comprises capitation payments, weighted entry payments, child item of service payments for treatments given under capitation, and child item of service payments for treatments given on an occasional basis, for the financial year 1992-93.
2. Column (b) is the number of children registered with a general dental practitioner at 30 September 1992.
3. Column (c) is for 30 June 1992, estimated home population under 18.
4. Column (d) is calculated by dividing the figure in column (a), by that in (b).
5. Column (e) is calculated by dividing the figure of column (a), by that in (c).
6. Children may also be treated in the Community and Hospital Dental Service as well as in the General Dental Service.

Local Authority Tenants

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to lay regulations to give force to the new right to manage for local authority tenants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Housing (Right to Manage) Regulations 1994 which have been laid before Parliament today implement the citizens charter commitment to give local authority tenants' organisations a statutory right to manage their own homes.

The right to manage will allow properly constituted and representative tenants organisations to assume housing management functions. This is another part of the process of devolving control to the most local level and thus enabling people to have greater control over their own lives. The new right means that tenant management organisations can grasp the benefits of greater cost control, local accountability and responsive services. I hope to see an increasing number of tenant organisations in Wales managing council housing over the next few years.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes she intends to make to the compensation arrangements for bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Soames [pursuant to the reply, 21 January, Official Report, col. 855]: An order which will modify the BSE compensation arrangements as outlined in the announcement of 21 January was laid before both Houses today. The order will come into force on 1 April 1994.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Philippines (Counter-trade Agreements)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what counter-trade agreements with the Philippines his Department has been involved in since 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: My Department has not been involved in any counter-trade agreements with the Philippines. That would be a commercial matter for the exporter.

Life Assurance

Mr. Darling: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ask the Securities and Investments Board to publish guidelines on the investment of life assurance funds, with particular reference to investment of such funds in wholly owned subsidiaries of such institutions.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The responsibilities of the SIB in relation to life insurance under the Financial Services Act relate primarily to marketing and the provision of advice to clients.

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has powers relating to the maintenance of adequate solvency in insurance companies. The regulations do not generally seek to limit the investments an insurance company may make, but may restrict the extent to which they are admissible as part of the required solvency margin.

Petrol

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recommendations have been circulated within the Government from the DTI regarding altering the tax differential between leaded and unleaded petrol; and what implications these recommendations have for the Government's commitment to sustainable development.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No such recommendations have been made. I am, however, interested in the question of cost-benefit analyses of Government decisions, including the case of the excise duty differential in favour of unleaded petrol.

Gas

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost of gas supplied to his Department for heating purposes in each of the past two years.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of gas for the year 1992-93 was £998,598. This figure is for all gas consumption, not only for heating. Information for 1991-92 is not available.

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the gas used by his Department is now purchased from independent suppliers; and what have been the consequent effects on public expenditure.

Mr. Eggar: Thirty-one per cent. of the gas used in DTI's nine headquarters buildings is purchased from independent suppliers producing an estimated saving in the first year of £7,700.

Headquarters buildings account for about 20 per cent. of the Department's gas consumption. Information about supply arrangements outside the headquarters estate is not available centrally.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much Rolls-Royce has received in launch aid since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since 1979 the Department has provided £458·4 million in launch aid to Rolls-Royce.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by each of his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Nelson: Disaggregated information of this sort could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of new furniture for each private office in his Departments during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Nelson: The cost of new furniture in the Chancellor's office was £1,150. There was no expenditure on new furniture in other private offices.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many agency chief executives in his Departments are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Dorrell: One agency chief executive in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments is paid more than £82,925 per year, excluding performance-related bonuses. The person in question was recruited directly to the post from outside the civil service.

Exchequer Property

Mr. Enright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what property, leased or owned for the purposes of the Exchequer, is not in current use.

Mr. Nelson: None. All the properties occupied and used by the Treasury form part of the Government's common user estate which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for the Environment, who will answer in respect of that property. The Treasury has no other property holdings.

Inflation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps the Government are taking to prevent inflation in asset prices from spreading to goods and services;

(2) what assessment the Government have made of the inflationary effect of increases in house prices; and what steps the Government intend to take to prevent house prices from rising further in 1994.

Mr. Nelson: The Government are committed to low inflation and will continue to conduct monetary policy so as to deliver their inflation target.

Monetary policy decisions are based on assessments of a range of monetary and other indicators, including house prices and other asset prices. Asset price movements have in the past been valuable leading indicators of inflation, but the Government do not rely on any single indicator.

As stated in the 1994-95 "Financial Statement and Budget Report," while some recovery in house prices is expected in 1994, inflation is still forecast to remain within the Government's target range.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the Government distinguish between asset inflation, cost-push inflation and demand-pull inflation for the purposes of fiscal and monetary policy; and which of the three principally characterised inflation between 1987 and 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The Government's monetary policy is set to deliver low inflation irrespective of its cause. Figures on a wide range of monetary and other indicators are monitored, including asset prices, earnings, other input prices and activity. These are published regularly in the monthly monetary report, which has included charts for the period referred to.

PSBR

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the proportions and the amounts of the public sector borrowing requirement funded by the trading banks for each year since 1985 in the United Kingdom, Germany, France and Italy; and what amount of United Kingdom gilts in each year were purchased and held by (a) banks, (b) pension funds and (c) other financial institutions.

Mr. Nelson: Data on Government financing by type of debt holder are published by the International Monetary Fund in its "Government Finance Statistics Yearbook". This covers the United Kingdom, Germany, France and Italy. More detailed sectoral analyses of United Kingdom gilt transactions are published by the Bank of England in its "Statistical Abstract".

Value Added Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many collection staff were working for the Inland Revenue in each year since 1980 (a) in London and the south-east and (b) in the United Kingdom as a whole in the area of value added tax.

Mr. Dorrell: No Inland Revenue staff are employed in the area of value added tax. Value added tax is entirely dealt with by Customs and Excise.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the total number of Customs and Excise officers engaged in value added tax inspections in the Doncaster area in each year for the last 10 years;

(2) what was the total number of value added tax inspections carried out in the Doncaster area by Customs and Excise officers in each year for the last 10 years.

Sir John Cope: Information is not available for the whole period requested. For the years to the end of March 1991, March 1992 and March 1993 Doncaster local VAT office assigned 48, 50 and 47 officers respectively to visiting duties. For the year to the end of March 1994, it is expected that 45 officers will be assigned to this work.

A total of 4,088 visits were carried out by those staff in the year ending 31 March 1991, 3,197 in 1992 and 2,956 in 1993. It is planned to complete some 2,500 visits by the end of March 1994. Businesses are selected in accordance with their risk profile which may vary from year to year. Better targeting of resources and the time needed to carry out each visit also has an effect.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of what proportion of the total value added tax revenue is raised in (a) Wales, (b) England, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland.

Sir John Cope: Estimated proportions are:

	Per cent.
Wales	4·6
England	85·2
Scotland	8·0
Northern Ireland	2·2

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the outstanding value added tax debt of registered business in the Doncaster area.

Sir John Cope: Information regarding total outstanding value added tax debt is not analysed by geographical areas. Providing this information for the Doncaster area would involve disproportionate cost.

Excise Duties (Evasion)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis cases of evasion of duty on imports of wine, spirits or tobacco are dealt with in magistrates courts.

Sir John Cope: Proceedings for such cases may be taken in the magistrates court under sections 170(A) or (B) of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979, or under sections 170(1) or (2) of that Act if the magistrates court accepts jurisdiction where it considers its powers of sentencing adequate following representations from Customs and the defendant or his representative.

Sections 170(A) or (B) carry maximum penalties of £5,000. Sections 170(1) or (2) involve fraudulent intent to evade duty and carry maximum penalties of six months' imprisonment and a penalty of £5,000 or three times the value of the goods concerned.

ENVIRONMENT

Rough Sleepers Initiative

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projects which have received rough sleepers initiative funding during 1993-94, the amounts allocated and the London boroughs in which they are located.

Sir George Young: As part of the rough sleepers initiative in central London my Department has allocated grant aid in 1993-94 under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to the housing associations and voluntary organisations shown in the following table.

In addition, the Housing Corporation has made capital allocations of £67 million to 23 housing associations to provide at least 1,500 places in permanent accommodation for people who are in hostels or on the streets to move on to.

Use Classes Order

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has completed his review of the working of the use classes order in relation to houses in multiple occupation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environenmt if he will make a statement on the control of the change of use of hotels to hostels by planning authorities.

Mr. Curry: The review has now been completed. The Government are satisfied that there is a real and specific threat to the amenity of tourist areas from the establishment of such hostels in traditional hotel areas. It is investigating the feasibility of legislation to introduce a licensing system for the establishment of hostels.

As a temporary measure pending the introduction of any such licensing scheme, an amending order being made today will amend the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1987 to require planning permission for the change of use from a hotel to a hostel.

Derelict Land

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the interdepartmental working group on derelict land to report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There is no interdepartmental working group on derelict land. If, however, the hon. Member is referring to the review of the arrangements for dealing with contaminated land, I refer him to the answer I gave on 8 March 1994, Official Report, column 110.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete the register of derelict land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: If the hon. Member is referring to registers of land subject to contaminative uses under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the Government withdrew their proposals on 24 March 1993, Official Report, column 633.

If the hon. Member is referring to the registers of vacant and underused public sector land, these are compiled each year by local authorities and other public bodies. My Department does not have a central register.

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for changes to the area cost adjustment.

Mr. Baldry: The area cost adjustment was given extensive consideration during the 1993 review of standard spending assessments. We do, however, wish to look again at the way the adjustment works within the south-east region outside London. We shall be discussing shortly with the local authority associations the 1994 programme of technical work on SSAs.

Wind Farms

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that wind farms are not located in environmentally sensitive areas or in areas of natural beauty.

Mr. Baldry: Planning policy guidance note 22 gives advice on renewable energy projects which local planning authorities should take into account when they consider planning applications for wind farms. This guidance makes it clear that authorities must always weigh the desirability of exploiting a clean, renewable energy resource against the visual impact which the development may have on the landscape.

The PPG also emphasises that particular care should be taken in assessing proposals for developing all renewable projects, including wind farms, in national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty, the Broads and sites of special scientific interest.

Grand Island Gas Scheme

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much grant was paid to British Gas by Greater Manchester development corporation for the development of the Grand Island scheme;

(2) what is the current situation concerning the grant dispute with British Gas for the Grand Island scheme in Manchester.

Mr. Baldry: The Central Manchester development corporation has paid grant of £4,464,940 to British Gas land division. CMDC is now taking steps to recover this grant.

Development Grants

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what checks are made by his Department to ensure that grant levels paid for development purposes are appropriate.

Mr. Baldry: My Department operates a range of grants. Grant schemes have a stipulated set of conditions including monitoring and appraisal requirements.

City Grant

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning possible abuse of grants analogous to city grant which are offered by urban development corporations in their own areas.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Foleshill Gas Works

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether agreement has been reached with British Gas on the appropriate level of grant needed to ensure the development of the Foleshill gas works site in Coventry.

Mr. Baldry: English Partnerships has made a proposal to British Gas, the site owners, under which a grant could be offered for a first phase of development on the Foleshill site. English Partnerships has also suggested a possible joint venture for the development of a second phase.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spends on child care provision for the under-fives and out-of-school provision for children aged over five either directly, excluding provision for departmental staff, or indirectly through resources made available to local authorities or other organisations; what form of provision is thereby provided; how many places are thereby provided; and if he will make a statement on child care.

Mr. Baldry: The amount included in local authority standard spending assessments for 1994-95 in respect of the education of children under five is £935·2 million. The amount spent by local authorities on provision for child care, and the number of places thereby provided, are matters for individual authorities.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations were made in the development of the single regeneration budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: There has been extensive consultation on draft bidding guidance for the single regeneration budget, both centrally and at local level. Some 10,000 copies of the draft bidding guidance on the single regeneration budget have been distributed; 11 seminars organised by the Department have been held throughout England; and several hundred written responses have been received. The responses will be taken into account in finalising the bidding guidance which is expected to be issued in early April.

Dog Fouling

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what powers individual citizens have to force local authorities to control fouling by dogs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what powers local authorities have to control and deal with dog faeces; what representations he has received to increase those powers; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has to amend the law to classify dog mess as litter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Under the provisions of part IV of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, local authorities have a duty to keep certain public areas, such as parks and highways, clear of dog faeces. Citizens can apply to a magistrates court for a litter abatement order if a local authority fails to carry out this duty.

Local authorities in England and Wales can also adopt "poop-scoop" byelaws which make it an offence for owners not to clear up after their dogs in designated areas. It is however, for each local authority to decide whether or not to adopt such byelaws.

The Tidy Britain Group and others have proposed replacement of poop-scoop byelaws with national legislation to make it an offence for any person to allow a dog to foul any area to which the public have access. The Department's advisory group on litter is currently considering this proposal as well as the suggestion that dog mess should be defined as litter. The advisory group's report is expected to be completed in the near future.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what was the (a) budgeted and (b) actual expenditure by his office on (1) internal and (2) overseas travel by the Prime Minister in 1990-91 and after 28 November 1990, 1991-92, 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94;

(2) what was the (a) budgeted and (b) actual expenditure by his office on (1) internal and (2) overseas travel by the Prime Minister in 1990-91, after 28 November 1990, 1991-92, 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

The Prime Minister: Disaggregated budget information is not available, nor is information for portions of financial years. The outturn for total travel and subsistence costs for domestic and overseas travel recorded in the financial years in question was as follows:

	Domestic travel £	Overseas travel £
1990-91	617,943
1991-92	89,810	860,307
1992-93	71,078	1,190,087

Information on spending in 1993-94 will be available after the end of the financial year.

These figures relate to sums paid in the relevant financial years: in some cases payments may relate to travel in the previous financial year.

No. 10 Downing Street (Costs)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what is the budget for the running cost for the Prime Minister's residence at 10 Downing street for 1994-95; and what was the running cost of 10 Downing street over the last 14 years.

The Prime Minister: Figures on a consistent basis are not available. In 1980-81, recorded spending on 10 Downing street and Chequers on the votes of the Cabinet Office, OPSS, was £1·745 million. In 1981-82, charges were introduced for the use of Ministry of Defence aircraft. Including those charges, spending was £2·415 million in 1981-82 and £2·700 million in 1982-83. In 1983-84, charges were introduced by the Property Services Agency for buildings and services. Including those charges, spending was £3·026 million in 1983-84. In 1984-85, charges were introduced for use of the Government car service and for service personnel at Chequers. Including those charges, spending was £3·787 million in 1984-85 and £4·406 million in 1985-86. In 1986-87, the cost of office services was included in the No. 10 budget. Including those costs, spending since then has been as follows:

Year	£ million
1986-87	4·963
1987-88	5·418
1988-89	6·554
1989-90	7·669
1990-91	8·226
1991-92	8·664
1992-93	9·866

An outturn for 1993-94 will be available shortly; it is likely to be around the same level of spending as in 1992-93. The provisional budget for 1994-95 is £9·486 million.

"Back to Basics"

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 21 February, Official Report, column 849, what has been the total expenditure to date by the Government on the Government's "back to basics" policy; and how many departmental staff are currently working on the Government's "back to basics" policy.

The Prime Minister: As "back to basics" applies across a range of Government policies, the information which the hon. Gentleman requests could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

"Jimmy Young Programme"

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the transcript of his interview of the "Jimmy Young Programme" on BBC Radio 2 broadcast on 7 March; and if he will make a statement on new policy positions announced in the interview.

The Prime Minister: No. The objectives of this Government remain unchanged.

10 Downing Street (Jewellery)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister when the last independent audit of the 10 Downing street jewellery inventory took place; who carried out the audit; and what were the findings.

The Prime Minister: There has been no such audit in recent years, although the items are and have been available for inspection by the auditors in the Cabinet Office or in the National Audit Office. I am satisfied that all the items concerned are in safe-keeping in Number 10.

Ministers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a list of the number of Ministers in each Department with the numbers of Ministers in each corresponding Department in the period 1964 to 1970; and how the responsibilities of the respective Departments have altered.

The Prime Minister: Current information on the number of Ministers in each Department can be found in the "List of Ministerial Responsibilities", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The responsibilities of Departments and the numbers of Ministers changed during the period 1964-1970. Tables of ministeral office holders were published regularly in Hansard.

Cornwall

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on ministerial responsibility for Cornwall.

The Prime Minister: The Government are collectively responsible for all regions of the United Kingdom.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 829-30, by how much United Kingdom output has fallen since the United Kingdom joined the EEC; and what have been the corresponding percentage changes since 1973 in Germany, France, Italy, Belgium and Spain.

Mr. Sainsbury: Changes in output between 1973 and 1983, as measured by the number of cars produced, were as follows:

	Per cent.
United Kingdom	–21
Germany	+3
France	–1
Italy	–39
Belgium[1]	–26
Spain	+113

[1] The comparision for Belgium is for the period from 1976 to 1992.

Motor Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 830, by what percentage employment in the United Kingdom vehicle and parts industry has fallen since 1973; and what have been the corresponding percentage changes in Germany, France, Italy, Belgium and Spain.

Mr. Sainsbury: Between 1973 and 1993 the number of people employed in the United Kingdom motor vehicle and parts industry fell by 58 per cent.

Figures for Germany, France, Italy, Belgium and Spain are not available for the same period. But available figures show changes in people employed in the motor vehicles and parts industry were as follows:

	1976-1993 Per cent.	1980-1992 Per cent.
United Kingdom	–52	–45
Germany	+20	+11
France	+35	–32
Italy	–45	–37

Know-how Projects

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent his Department participates in the know-how projects to assist the development of enterprise in eastern Europe.

Mr. Needham: My Department works closely with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, which has responsibility for the know-how fund scheme, on schemes to encourage enterprise in eastern Europe, including the former Soviet Union. The Department is consulted on applications from United Kingdom companies for grants under the pre-investment feasibility scheme for potential investment projects in the region and for support under the training investment personnel scheme. My Department also provides advice as appropriate on projects to encourage the development of enterprise under the know-how fund country programmes and is consulted on aspects of the joint industrial company awards programme under which entrepreneurs from the region are seconded to United Kingdom companies in order to gain valuable commercial experience. Two officials from the Department have been seconded to the FCO to work on the know-how-fund programme.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the contribution of the university of Hertfordshire to the know-how-funded projects in Romania.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

The university of Hertfordshire has made an important contribution to the know-how fund's activities in Romania through its involvement in the successful launch of the Romanian centre for the improvement of management performance. The know-how fund will continue to support the university's work with the centre into the next financial year. It is planned that the centre will be financially self-sustainable in early 1995.

Departmental Property

Mr. Enright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much office space, currently on lease to, or owned by, his Department, is not in current use.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Eastern Europe

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to assist the countries of eastern Europe to benefit from the experience of the United Kingdom in respect of encouraging small businesses and the privatisation of state-owned industries.

Mr. Needham: The know-how fund, for which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible, is the Government's principal programme to assist the countries of eastern Europe, including the former Soviet Union, to move to free market economies through the provision of advice and expertise. Two of the know-how fund key priority areas are assistance with the development of small and medium-sized enterprises and the encouragement of privatisation.

When Ministers from this Department visit the countries of eastern Europe, they use every opportunity to encourage the Governments concerned to continue on the path of economic reform including following policies which will promote the growth of a vibrant small firms sector and accelerate privatisation.

Manufactures (Imports)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the increase in the United Kingdom of imports of manufactures by the Irish Republic, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Switzerland, Austria and Portugal since 1970; and what was the forecast in the 1970 "Economic Assessment", Cm 4289.

Mr. Needham: Information concerning the increase in United Kingdom imports is given in the following table. Cm 4289 is available in the Library of the House.

United Kingdom imports of manufactures

Proton Cars

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Proton cars were imported from Malaysia in each year since 1990.

Mr. Needham: The figures for imports by manufacturer are not available. Information on United Kingdom new registrations of Proton cars, all of which were imported from Malaysia, are published annually by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders in "Motor Industry of Great Britain: World Automotive Statistics." The most recent data are published in "Monthly Statistical Review". Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Economic Development Agencies (North-west)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the number of economic development agencies in the north-west; and if he will list them.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There is no agreed definition on the basis of which to identify bodies as economic development agencies.

A number of organisations in the north-west are involved in assisting economic development, some independent, and some directly attached to existing bodies such as local authorities and chambers of commerce. The Government seek to promote a coherent and co-ordinated approach by all these bodies, for example through the business link initiative.

Malaysia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in order of pound sterling volumes the 10 principal product imports from Malaysia.

Mr. Needham: The information is provided in the following table.

Top ten imports from Malaysia (£ million, current prices)

Vehicle Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of buses, coaches and mini-buses on British roads (a) in 1970, (b) 1979, (c) 1988 and (d) 1992; what was the proportion of imported vehicles in each year; and what factors underlie the trend in this proportion.

Mr. Needham: The available data are published by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders Ltd. in the annual series of "Motor Industry of Great Britain, World Automotive Statistics". Data for the number of buses and coaches, excluding minibuses, in use can be found in table 40—Great Britain—and table 47—Northern Ireland. The number of vehicles with 10 or more seats imported by the United Kingdom can be found in table 91 of the aforementioned publication. Table numbers refer to the 1993 edition; there may be differences in earlier years. Figures for the proportion of imported vehicles in the total stock are not available.

This publication is available in the Library of the House.

EC Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of United Kingdom trade is with the EC; and what are his sources for the statistic.

Mr. Needham: The latest information on United Kingdom trade with EC and the rest of the world was published in the first release, balance of United Kingdom visible trade December 1993, CSO(94)47, by the Central Satatistical Office on 11 March 1994. The release is available in the Library of the House.

Lloyd's

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all regulatory and statutory changes which were designed to have, or had, the effect of benefiting persons who have been or remained members of syndicates of Lloyd's of London.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The regulation of Lloyd's is based mainly on the Lloyd's Act 1982 and the Insurance Companies Act 1982. Under the latter, the Secretary of State monitors the adequacy of Lloyd's solvency to ensure that its assets are sufficient to pay policyholders' valid claims rather than being designed to benefit members of Lloyd's. Regulation under the Lloyd's Act is a matter for the council of Lloyd's. Substantial changes to the taxation of individual members of Lloyd's were made by the Finance Act 1993. Further changes are proposed in the current Finance Bill; these reflect the admission of corporate members and also align the taxation of individual members with the self-assessment procedures introduced for individuals generally. Taken as a whole, the measures have no significant cost to the Exchequer, and therefore convey no benefit to members of Lloyd's.

Iran

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the trade figures between the United Kingdom and Iran since the restoration of relations in September 1990.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom visible trade is regularly published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Indonesia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the purpose and outcome of his visit to Indonesia in December 1993.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade did not visit Indonesia in December 1993.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with his Portuguese counterpart over EC and United Kingdom trade with Indonesia.

Mr. Needham: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade have held such discussions, although when I visited Portugal recently I stressed the importance of increasing trade with far eastern markets generally.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which British firms have benefited from aid and trade provision assistance; by how much; and for what projects in Malaysia and Indonesia in each year since 1979.

Mr. Needham: Information on the topic was published annually in "Business Monitor MA20, Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom" until 1992, and summary tables spanning 10 years are published in the "Annual Abstract of Statistics". Figures for 1993 are published in the December 1993 issue of "Business Monitor MM20, Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom with countries outside the European Community (Extra-EC Trade)". Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Design Council

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will announce the Government's response to the review of the Design Council undertaken by Mr. John Sorrell.

Mr. Heseltine: I am grateful to Mr. Sorrell for his review of the future of the Design Council, which he presented to my Department on 27 January. I shall place a copy of the review, together with the Government's response, in the Library of the House on 15 March.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 22, if he will provide whatever information is available of those occasions on which he, or other Ministers in his Department, have signed public interest immunity certificates, and for what reasons.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 10 March 1994]: This information is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Manufacturing Industry

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the change in competitiveness of United Kingdom manufacturing industry relative to France.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 9 March 1994]: Between 1973 and 1979, manufacturing productivity and unit wage costs for the United Kingdom and France were as follows:

Annual average growth 1973-79

Per cent.

	United Kingdom	France
Manufacturing production	–0·96	1·54
Manufacturing productivity	0·6	3·7
Manufacturing unit wage costs	18·0	11·2

Source: OECD Main Economic Indicators.

During the last economic cycle, 1979 to 1990, however, manufacturing output and productivity grew more rapidly in the United Kingdom than in France. More recently, the latest available quarterly figures shows that manufacturing unit wage costs have risen, since the same period last year, by 1 per cent. in the United Kingdom and 6 per cent. in France.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Zimbabwe

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the legal rights of United Kingdom citizens in Zimbabwe when threatened with deportation to the United Kingdom;

(2) on what legal basis, other than extradition, United Kingdom citizens may be deported from Zimbabwe to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: That is a matter for the Zimbabwe authorities.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the return from Zimbabwe to the United Kingdom of Nicholas Mullen in February 1989 and their legal basis.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that Mr. Mullen, who had an Irish passport, was deported on 6 February 1989 on the grounds of offences against Zimbabwe Immigration law. Our understanding is that the legal basis for deportations from Zimbabwe is contained in the Zimbabwe Immigration Act 18 of 1979.

Kurds

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the treatment of the Kurds in Syria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received a number of representations about the plight of the Kurdish community in Syria and elsewhere. We regularly raise our concerns about human rights issues with the Syrian authorities.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the treatment of the Kurdish community in Iran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received some representations on the treatment of Kurds in Iran. We are naturally sympathetic to the plight of the Kurdish people throughout the region and are following closely developments in this area, including Iran[illegible]ction against the Kurdish democratic party of Iran o[illegible] the Iran-Iraq border, about which we have made clear our concern to the Iranian authorities.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the treatment of the Kurds in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received a number of letters from honourable Members about the treatment of Kurds in Iraq. Foreign Office officials are in regular contact with representatives of the Kurdish administration.

We condemn Iraq's continued abuse of the human rights of all its citizens, including the Kurds. We urge Iraq to observe Security Council resolution 688, which calls on Iraq to cease repression of its civilians. We condemn the continued blockade of the Kurdish area of northern Iraq, and the cutting off of electricity to Dohuk governorate.

Occupied Territories

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the number of deaths in the occupied territories following the Hebron massacre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We understand that there were around 30 Palestinian deaths in disturbances in the occupied territories in the two weeks following the Hebron massacre on 25 February.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held at the United Nations or in the European Union on the issue of the establishment of safe havens in southern Sudan; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been no such discussions at the United Nations or within the European Union.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about Sudanese-backed terrorist infiltration into Eritrea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Eritrean Government have informed the president of the United Nations Security Council of an incursion into Eritrean territory from Sudan by 20 agents of Eritrean Jihad on 16 December 1993. The Eritreans have subsequently informed the President that gunmen killed an Eritrean official in the Sudanese town of Kassala on 18 February.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further steps he intends to urge upon the international community to maintain pressure upon the Sudanese Government to end the civil war and human rights abuses.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We will continue to support the peace initiative of the Kenyan, Ugandan, Ethiopian and Eritrean Governments and to urge the parties to the conflict to respond positively. With our European Union partners we have decided to impose an arms embargo on Sudan as a further expression of our abhorrence of the continuing violence.

On 10 March, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights passed by 35 votes to nine a further resolution, which we fully supported, highlighting continued human rights abuses in Sudan. We will continue to press bilaterally and with our European union partners for an end to such abuses. The resolution renewed the mandate of the special rapporteur.

Bosnia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has identified whose planes were recently shot down by NATO forces over Bosnia; and from where they were flying.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations investigations continue, but it is almost certain that the planes were flying from Udbina airfield in the Serb-held area of Croatia. It is not yet certain to whom these aircraft belonged.

East Timor

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 20, if he will set out what Her Majesty's Government were told by the Indonesian authorities in response to the inquiries made about the death of Mr. Peters and Mr. Rennie in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: The deaths occurred over seven weeks before the Indonesian invasion of East Timor.

Facts were difficult to establish in a territory for which Indonesia was not the administering authority. But the results of its inquiries, at our and Australia's request, led to the conclusion that Mr. Peters and Mr. Rennie, along with the other members of the Australian TV crew, had been killed in Balibo on 16 October 1975. Local reports at the time suggest that the House in which the crew were sheltering was caught in heavy crossfire between the forces of the three internal warring parties—UDT, APODETI and FRETILIN—and set on fire. There were no survivors.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate of the number of Timorese killed by arms exported from the United Kingdom; what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United Nations Human Rights Commission concerning the actions of the Indonesian Government in East Timor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: None. We have no evidence that British-supplied defence equipment has ever been used against the people of East Timor. With our European Union partners we have welcomed Indonesian and Portuguese agreement to a consensus statement on East Timor at this year's session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the supply of military hardware by British companies to Indonesia for use by Indonesian forces in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: In accordance with our guidelines for considering export license applications, we have not supplied any military equipment to Indonesia which is likely to be used for repressive purposes against the civilian population in East Timor.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current situation regarding human rights in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Sri Lanka's human rights record continues to improve. The Sri Lankan Government committed themselves to a further programme of reform on 7 March at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the Government and the European Union to end Greece's unilateral blockade of Macedonia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have strongly urged the Greek Government to lift these unjustifiable measures. The Commission has written to the Greek Government questioning the legality of their action in respect of the European Community's customs union, the common commercial policy and the functioning of the internal market. It is for the Commission, as guardians of the treaty, to decide whether to institute infraction proceedings before the European Court of Justice.

European Union

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library all draft treaties and proposals relating to economic, monetary and political union as soon as they are received.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Yes. All published proposals emanating from Community institutions or from member states will be placed in the Library.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Minister or Ministers represent the United Kingdom at the European Council's General Affairs meetings; how it is decided how the United Kingdom will be represented at the General Affairs Council; and what matters were discussed and decisions taken at the General Affairs Council in Brussels on 7 and 8 March.

Mr. Hurd: I normally represent the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council and I am normally accompanied by a Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. Where issues concerning other Departments feature on the Council agenda, a Minister from the relevant Department may also attend.

I take the decision on who represents the United Kingdom at these meetings, in consultation with my colleagues.

I attended the Foreign Affairs Council on 7-8 March accompanied by my hon. Friends the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), the Minister for Trade, the Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham), and the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack).

Association councils were held with Poland and Hungary. These were the first to take place under the terms of the European Community's association agreements with those countries.

Ministers agreed a package of proposals to involve the six central and eastern Europe associate countries—Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Bulgaria and Romania—in the work of the CFSP pillar of the European Union. This builds on the initiative which Mr. Andreatta, the Italian Foreign Minister, and I launched in December 1993. The proposals will now be put to the six associate countries.

Ministers discussed the practical arrangements for handling CFSP expenditure and instructed officials to undertake further work on the options.

The President of the Commission, Mr. Delors, presented a progress report on follow-up to the December European Council conclusions on the White Paper on Growth, Competitiveness and Employment. He highlighted four main areas of action: deepening the single market; taking forward the creation of trans-European networks; improving information infrastructures; and making labour markets more flexible.

The Council discussed the own resources decision and reached agreement on most outstanding points. The budget discipline decision was also discussed, but no agreement was reached.

The Commission reported to the Council on market access offers following the completion of the Uruguay round negotiations. The Council decided that the Presidency and the Commission should sign the final act embodying the results of the Uruguay round negotiations, and the agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation, on behalf of the Council on 15 April at Marrakesh. Signature will be subject to verification of the final text and completion of the necessary approval procedures. Representatives of the member states will also sign the final act and the WTO agreement at Marrakesh.

The Council agreed a statement expressing concern at the recent announcement by the United States of its intention to resuscitate the Super 301 procedures of the Trade Act 1974. It requested the Commission to scrutinise the legality and implementation of these provisions to ensure that the European Community's GATT rights are not violated.

The Council heard a report from Sir Leon Brittan on the meeting of the EC-China joint commission in Peking on 28 February.

The President of the European Commission introduced the Commission's communication on immigration and asylum. The communication will now be discussed in working groups within the justice and home affairs pillar. The Government will shortly provide the House with an explanatory memorandum in accordance with the usual scrutiny procedures.

Ministers discussed latest developments in the former Yugoslavia. The Council agreed to extend for six months the Union's joint action to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian aid to Bosnia.

Ministers issued a declaration calling for the resumption of middle east peace negotiations and noting the Union's willingness to contribute to an international presence in the occupied territories, should this be agreed in the United Nations Security Council.

The Council agreed in principle on the extension to the EFTA states, under the European Economic Area agreement, of some 300 single market measures passed between August 1991 and December 1993, the interim acquis. Ministers also discussed aspects of the EEA internal regulation.

The Council discussed the negotiating mandates for voluntary restraint agreements on steel imports from Russia, Ukraine and Kazakhstan.

Members of the Council reconstituted themselves as a ministerial meeting in order to continue the accession negotiations in Norway. This followed the good progress made at the ministerial meeting held between 28 February and 1 March to negotiate the accession of Austria, Sweden and Finland.

By the time of the conclusion of a meeting on 8 March, agreement had been reached on the following main elements:

A wide-ranging package of measures to enable the orderly integration of the four applicants into the common agriculture policy. Agriculture prices in all four countries will be aligned with EC prices on accession. But in Austria, Finland and Norway, it was agreed that, for a transitional period, digressive national aids to farmers should be authorised where support levels differ significantly.

It was agreed that the Austrian region of Burgenland should be designated eligible for objective 1 status under the structural funds. In recognition of the unique problems of northern Scandinavia, it was also agreed to institute a new objective 6 for regions with a very low population density—less than eight inhabitants per sq km. A number of areas in Sweden, Finland and Norway were designated eligible for objective 6. Eligibility for objectives 2 to 5b will be determined before accession.

All four applicants were granted a number of derogations in the fields of VAT and excise. Similar derogations are already enjoyed by a number of existing member states.

The Union has agreed to fund, after accession, the applicants' commitments to the financial mechanism set up under the European Economic Area agreement. The operation of the mechanism, which benefits Northern Ireland, will remain unchanged.

All four applicants will pay their full contribution to the EC budget from the date of accession. But in recognition of the shortfall in CAP receipts in the first year of membership, and the financial costs of bringing their agricultural policies into line with the CAP, the Union has agreed a temporary package of financial assistance to the applicants, worth 2,966 mecu in 1995-98. The four applicants will, collectively, remain net contributors to the Community budget over this period.

The European Union has assured Austria that the essential objectives of the 1992 EC/Austria bilateral transit agreement will be respected. The eco-points system for controlling transit traffic through Austria will continue for a transitional period after accession, if necessary until 2004. There will also be a progressive liberalisation of the arrangements for terminating traffic from accession, with complete liberalisation on 1 January 1997.

All four applicants have been granted a five-year transitional period during which they can maintain national legislation on the purchase of second homes.

Discussion of the institutional consequences of enlargement, and of Norwegian fisheries, are expected to resume on 15 March.

World Summit on Social Development

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decision Her Majesty's Government have made on the establishment of a national committee on the World summit on social development; which Government Departments have been involved in discussions to formulate the United Kingdom Government's approach to the summit; and which Government Department will be leading co-ordination of United Kingdom activity in relation to the summit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There has been no decision to establish a national committee for the World summit for social development. Consultations at official level have taken place with the participation of several Whitehall Departments. These include the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Departments of Social Security, of Trade and Industry, of Employment, and of Health, Her Majesty's Treasury and the Overseas Development Administration. Other interested Departments have been made aware of preparations for the summit. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is co-ordinating the United Kingdom's approach to the summit.

Haiti

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation Her Majesty's Government have in Haiti; what reports have been received concerning abuses of human rights in Haiti; and what representations have been made to the Haitian authorities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain is represented by Her Majesty's ambassador resident at Kingston, Jamaica, and a vice-consul in Port au Prince, Haiti, Reports of human rights abuses are compiled by a special rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights; by United Nations civilian observer in Port au Prince who also register complaints locally; and by non-governmental organisations such as Amnesty International. We have supported United Nations resolutions expressing concern about human rights violations in Haiti. The European Union has also made several statements on this question.

Algeria

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of the Government of Algeria concerning the reasons citizens of Algeria seek asylum elsewhere.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Russia

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of reform and democracy in Russia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Russia has come a remarkably long way since the collapse of the Soviet Union two years ago. She now has a new constitution guaranteeing human rights and a democratically elected parliament. The way ahead will not be easy, not least in terms of economic reform; but President Yeltsin and Prime Minister Chernomyrdin have both stressed their commitment to the reform process.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the annualised level of reimbursement from (a) international and (b) other non-United Kingdom sources paid to the United Kingdom to defray the cost of British military operations associated with Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom can reclaim from the United Nations about 50 per cent. of the total Ministry of Defence extra costs for United Kingdom military participation in UNPROFOR, but the timing of actual reimbursement depends on the United Nations cash flow situation.

UNPROFOR Croatia—UNPROFOR I—started operations in February 1992. UNPROFOR Bosnia Hercegovina command—UNPROFOR II—first deployed in September 1992, but was only brought on to United Nations assessed contribution funding from 1 April 1993. National costs were therefore non-reimbursable in financial year 1992-93. Reimbursement in financial year 1992-93, for the British contribution to UNPROFOR I totalled £191,663. Refunds for financial year 1993-94, UNPROFOR I and II, so far total £18·1 million.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Motability Scheme

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will outline the number of people currently provided with vehicles under the motability scheme, the number of new people coming on to the scheme each year, the current annual cost of the scheme and the estimated annual profit to the motor industry from the scheme.

Mr. Scott: As at 31 December 1993, 178,317 vehicles were being provided under the motability scheme. The number of vehicles provided under the scheme each year since 1983, the first year for which records are available, are in the table. Motability's annual administration cost during the last full accounting year, 1992-93, was £1·8 million. Details of estimated annual profit to the motor industry as a result of the scheme are not available.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what property, leased or owned for the purposes of his Department, is not currently occupied.

Mr. Hague: There are no properties currently unoccupied on the departmental estate. The provision and disposal of property leased for Government Departments is the responsibility of Property Holdings, Department of the Environment, which is replying on behalf of the common user estate.

Housing Benefit

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each local authority (a) the total amount paid by his Department in housing benefit, (b) the number of council properties, (c) the political control of the authority, (d) the average claim per council property and (e) the average claim per claimant in respect of the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: Information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Child Support

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many child support cases have been referred to him by (a) hon. Members and (b) the general public.

Mr. Hague: Information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Between 1 September 1993 and 10 March 1994 Ministers received 5,089 letters from hon. Members concerning child support issues. These included questions about both individual cases and general policy.

The number of letters received from the general public about child support cases is not available.

Savings Disregard

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much the savings disregard of £3,000 would have to be increased to have the same value as when it was introduced in 1988.

Mr. Burt: An increase of £960 would be required to restore the real value of the £3,000 disregard, at 1993-94 prices, to its level in 1988.

Note: Calculation based on Rossi index, rounded to nearest £10.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employees of (a) his Department and (b) agencies established by him are on (i) individual contracts and (ii) performance-related pay; and what were the average salaries and bonuses paid to these people in (1) 1992-93 and (2) 1993-94.

Mr. Hague: There are currently five such employees in the Department's agencies, and one in the war pensions unit which will achieve agency status from April 1994. All have contracts which incorporate performance bonus arrangements. The average salary, including bonuses, paid to these employees in 1992-93 was £55,834. Figures for 1993-94 are not yet available.

Savings Rule

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the basis for calculating the savings rule for people with between £3,000 and £8,000; and how this has changed since the rule was introduced.

Mr. Burt: A weekly deduction of £1 is made for each £250, or part of £250, of capital held between £3,000 and the upper capital limit, which was increased from £6,000 to £8,000 in 1990. This rule gives most help to those with the least savings. The formula is not linked to any particular rate of return that could be secured from investment and has not changed since the rule was introduced.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Arts Council

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many touring weeks have been lost as a result of the reductions made to the Arts Council's national touring allocation for drama.

Mr. Brooke: These are matters for the Arts Council.

Film Exports

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what contribution the export of United Kingdom-produced films has made to the United Kingdom's annual balance of trade in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Brooke: Over the past 10 years for which figures are available, United Kingdom-produced films have contributed the following amounts to the balance of trade:

Year	£ million at current prices
1983	99
1984	104
1985	131
1986	115
1987	147
1988	145
1989	158
1990	179
1991	182
1992	189

These figures do not take account of earnings from overseas companies which pay for production services in the United Kingdom.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the range of rents paid for all accommodation at each of the occupied royal palaces.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 3 March 1994]: Rent paid by official employees of the Queen is presently set at 6 per cent. of after-tax salary wherever they are housed. This is equivalent to 7·5 per cent. of pre-tax salary—not 8·5 per cent. as stated on 9 February, Official Report, column 352. Pensioners allocated accommodation since 1 April 1991 and Crown Estate employees pay 8·5 per cent. of their gross pension or pensionable pay wherever housed.

Rents paid by the Queen's private employees and by Royal Collection Enterprises Ltd. staff are equivalent to local authority rents in the area.

Since my reply to the right hon. Member on 12 January, Official Report, column 201, about costs of accommodation borne by the Department it has been brought to my attention that in accordance with the memorandum of understanding the Department has been bearing the cost of furnishing apartments in the occupied royal palaces occupied by heads of department in the royal household.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Kenya (Cereals)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Kenya as to the possible purchase of surplus EC cereals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. The primary relief need in Kenya is for white maize which is not produced within the EC. We are supplying 15,000 tonnes of white maize bought from African regional sources and financed from our bilateral food aid funds.

Philippines

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the level of aid to the Philippines (a) from the European Community and (b) from the British overseas aid programme, for each year since 1986; and what is (b) as a proportion of (a).

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: (a) European Community aid expenditure on the Philippines for each year since 1986 has been:

	Million ecu	Sterling equivalent million[1]
1986	21·90	16·31
1987	4·50	3·35
1988	14·00	10·43
1989	22·50	16·76
1990	31·66	23·90
1991	5·46	4·07
1992	53·15	39·59
1993	49·06	36·54

[1] ecu—sterling exchange rate £1 = 1·3426.

(b) British bilateral aid expenditure on the Philippines since 1986 has been:

	£'s million
1986	0·205
1987	0·262
1987-88	0·666
1988-89	1·003
1989-90	13·290
1990-91	4·042
1991-92	1·934
1992-93	9·038

(C) As a proportion of (a), (b) is:

	Per cent.
1986	1·3
1987	7·8
1987-88:1988	6·4
1988-89:1989	5·9
1989-90:1990	55·6
1990-91:1991	99·3
1991-92:1992	4·9
1992-93:1993	24·7

In respect of United Kingdom financial year 1989-90 the percentage figure is high because it coincided with payments, made under our aid and trade programme; in 1990-91, EC aid was, as will be seen from table (a), unusually low. Direct comparisons of this sort can be misleading, as is shown by the figures for these two financial years.

Occupied Territories

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what medical assistance he had offered the Palestinians in the occupied territories following the Hebron massacre.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have provided £34,000 via Medical Aid for Palestinians, a non-governmental organisation. This contributed to the expenses of a Jordanian specialist surgical team and associated medical supplies. We are discussing with MAP a donation of up to £40,000 in order to purchase additional life-saving equipment for two of the hospitals concerned in treating the victims.

Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each country the financial amount of overseas aid received in 1993, five years ago and 10 years ago.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This information is given in "British Aid Statistics", published annually, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Expenditure is now recorded on a financial year, rather than calendar year, basis.

Health Projects

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining the policy of the degree of priority to be afforded to future primary health projects in least developed countries within Her Majesty's Government's overseas aid programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our overall aid policy includes better health as an essential element in promoting human development which is one of our seven priority objectives. Programmes to implement this objective are settled at country level in the framework of establishing our overall pattern of assistance to the particular country. The countries we have selected for particular attention with regard to our health care and Children by Choice objectives include: Bangladesh, Nepal, Cambodia, Uganda, Tanzania, the Gambia, Zambia and Malawi which are least developed countries.

Our approach at country level focuses on assisting health sector reform, Children by Choice policies and better reproductive health and combating particularly significant problems with malaria, tuberculosis and HIV.

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what evidence he has of the effects of the Chinese population control programme in creating an imbalance between the sexes in China;

(2) what information he has regarding the incidence of female infanticide, abortion of female unborn children and female slavery as a result of the Chinese population control programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 March 1994]: Her Majesty's Government are aware of reports from China of female infanticide and abortion of female foetuses, and of an imbalance between the sexes. We have received no authoritative information which would lead to relating these reports to Chinese Government policies.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what meetings officials from his Department have had with the Chinese Family Planning Association to discuss the implementation of the Chinese population control programme since November 1992;

(2) what meetings officials from his Department have had with the Committee of Population and the Economy to discuss the implementation of the Chinese population control programme since November 1992;

(3) what meetings officials from his Department have had with the Chinese state Family Planning Commission to discuss the implementation of the Chinese population control programme since November 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answers 11 March 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 5 November 1993, Official Report, columns 599-600. Staff of the British embassy in Beijing have also had contacts with the two other organisations to which the hon. Member refers.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has received since November 1992 from the United Nations Fund for Population Activities regarding human rights violations as a result of the implementation of the Chinese population control programme;

(2) what information he has received from the International Planned Parenthood Federation regarding human rights violations as a result of the implementation of the Chinese population control programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answers 11 March 1994]: The United Nations Population Fund and International Planned Parenthood Federation have not provided authoritative information on such human rights violations. These organisations are encouraging the Chinese authorities and the Chinese Family Planning Association to establish mechanisms for reporting and dealing with any such violations.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has received from other Government Departments regarding the need to continue overseas aid provision to China.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 March 1994]: By long-standing convention discussions of this sort between Departments are confidential.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what meetings officials from his Department have had with the United Nations Fund for Population Activities to discuss the implementation of the Chinese population control programme since November 1992;

(2) what meetings officials from his Department have had with the International Planned Parenthood Federation to discuss the Chinese population control programme since November 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answers 11 March 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey to Lord Braine of Wheatley in another place on 20 January 1994, House of Lords Official Report, column 53.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings officials from his Department have had with the campaign Free Tibet to discuss the implementation of the Chinese population control programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 March 1994]: Officials of the Overseas Development Administration and diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have had contacts with the campaign Free Tibet, including a meeting on 1 December 1993 at which human rights issues were discussed.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to differences between the implementation of the Chinese population control programme in China and Tibet.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 March 1994]: There are variations in the family planning programmes between individual provinces throughout China, including Tibet. An analysis of the regulations will be undertaken by the Chinese Family Planning Association during 1994.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has on trends in the level of breaches of human rights arising from the Chinese population control programme since November 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 March 1994]: Authoritative information is not available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Attorney-General how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by each of his private offices in 1993-94.

The Attorney-General: (a) none and (b) none.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost of new furniture for the private offices in his Department during the year 1993-94.

The Attorney-General: The cost was £2,900.

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

The Attorney-General: The cost was £1,300.

Racial Hatred

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions for incitement to racial hatred under the Public Order Act 1986 he has authorised in each year since 1987; and on how many occasions the prosecution has been successful.

The Solicitor-General: In each of the years since 1987 consent has been given to prosecute the following numbers of persons for offences contrary to part III of the Public Order Act 1986:

	Number
1987	0
1988	2
1989	1
1990	2
1991	3
1992	3
1993	2
1994	1

Seven cases resulted in conviction and one in acquittal. In addition, one defendant was bound over, one died before trial and one case was discontinued by the Crown Prosecution Service. Prosecutions have been started, but have not been concluded, in three cases. In one further case, although consent was originally granted, it was later withdrawn on public interest grounds.

Student Unions

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the current standing of the 1983 guidance issued in respect of expenditure by student unions; how many complaints about breach of the guidance have been received; how many have been investigated; how many were substantiated; and with what results.

The Attorney-General: The guidance on expenditure by student unions, first issued in 1983, is still valid and applicable save that it refers to section 24 of the Charities Act 1960 which has been repealed and re-enacted in the same terms by section 29 of the Charities Act 1993.

The guidance is intended to assist union officers who may find themselves called to account for their actions as trustees of charitable moneys in the discharge of their responsibilities for union funds.

Complaints of breach of charity law made to me are referred to the Treasury Solicitor for investigation. No single continuous record is maintained, but a search of files shows that since the guidance was issued, 53 complaints have been referred to the Treasury Solicitor, all of which have been investigated.

In one case there is now no record of the result and two other cases are current.

Of the remaining cases, seven were found to be substantiated. The action taken in these cases is as follows:

(a) in one case an injunction was obtained after one ultra vires payment to halt a proposed further payment,

(b) in four cases repayments (in whole or in part) of ultra vires payments were secured,

(c) in one case the union agreed not to make a proposed ultra vires payment and made arrangements to recover previous ultra vires payments, and

(d) in one case the union agreed to discontinue ultra vires payments.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Information Super Highways

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he has taken to promote the development of information super highways in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information super highways are an emerging technology on which much interest has focused recently, particularly on the possible access to services for the citizen that such technology could offer. There are to date only a few pilots in operation globally, most notably in the United States.

Clearly, these developments are being watched with interest. The Government are also working closely with other members of the European Union in considering the requirements for such networks within Europe. The CCTA —Government centre for information systems—has already begun work on a study to look in detail at the possible development of information super highways within the United Kingdom It will be working closely with the Department of Trade and Industry in considering this issue.

It is important that the roles of the private and public sector are taken into account. Full and thorough analysis of the global pilot projects will be needed to evaluate their benefits to the citizen and to the public and private sectors both within the United Kingdom and across Europe as a whole.

National Science Week

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the proposed national science week; and what contribution he will make to it.

Mr. Waldegrave: The national week of science, engineering and technology—"SET[7]"—will begin on Friday 18 March 1994. It is being organised, with Government funding, by the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and will involve over 1,000 events taking place in some 230 towns and cities nationwide. SET[7] will, I am confident, make a significant impact by promoting a better appreciation among the general public of the invaluable contribution that science, engineering and technology make to our well-being as a nation.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State and I will be doing our best to get to as many events as possible during SET[7]. Among other things, I will be opening the week at the natural history museum on the Friday morning; I will also deliver the Friday evening discourse at the Royal Institution; my family and I will be visiting the Bristol Exploratory on Saturday; on Monday, I will be opening the new science line telephone answering service at Channel 4's headquarters; on Wednesday, I shall be attending a Royal Society of Chemistry presentation ceremony at the House of Commons; and on Friday 25 March, I will be holding a breakfast briefing on the week in the House. I will also, of course, be doing a number of radio and television interviews.

British Antarctic Survey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what the Government have paid to the British Antarctic Survey in each of the past 10 years; and what grant is proposed for 1994-95.

Mr. David Davis: The Government make money available to the research councils through the science budget. The amounts of such money allocated to the British Antarctic Survey from its parent body, the Natural Environment Research Council, are as follows:

	Capital £ million	Recurrent £ million	Total £ million
1984-85	1·435	9·354	10·789
1985-86	2·873	9·375	12·248
1986-87	2·458	9·211	11·669
1987-88	3·156	10·898	14·054
1988-89	12·032	12·693	24·725
1989-90	18·559	14·064	32·623
1990-91	30·023	16·067	46·090
1991-92	9·030	17·064	26·094
1992-93	4·010	18·016	22·026
1993-94	2·177	19·491	21·668

The proposed grant for 1994-95 is £24·31 million, including £2·15 million for capital expenditure.

Public Bodies

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, columns 899-900, if he will provide a list of known (a) Conservative and (b) Liberal Democrat supporters appointed to public bodies to which he referred.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The list I provided in my answer on 4 March was constructed by me for use in the Opposition Day debate on 24 February. I have no other list.

HMSO

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster pursuant to the answer of 2 March, Official Report, columns 767-68, what was the result of the response to each HMSO campaign listed.

Mr. David Davis: HMSO's revenue from the sale of publications and videos in 1993 increased by 5·6 per cent. over the previous year, while revenue from the sale of IT products increased by 37 per cent. Sales of BSI titles at HMSO bookshops over the first five months since becoming main agents totalled £146,000. The campaign to strengthen awareness in central and local government, the health service and public utilities took place more recently and it is too soon to assess the impact.

Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many questions he has declined to answer on the grounds that to do so would incur disproportionate cost.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since my Department was established in May 1992 I have declined to answer six questions on a disproportionate cost basis. I have also declined to answer parts of 10 further questions on the same basis.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

CAP

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure she has for (a) the total value of moneys purloined from the common agricultural policy's export refund and price support schemes and (b) how much the common agricultural policy has lost through the evasion of customs duties and farm levies; and if she will estimate the proportion of defrauded funds that are recouped.

Mr. Jack: Cases reported by member states of irregularity, including details of the amounts recovered, under the EAGGF guarantee, fund, which includes CAP export refund and price support schemes, and cases of irregularity under the own resources regulation, which includes customs duties and farm levies under the CAP, are shown in table 1.1 of the annual report from the Commission on the Fight Against Fraud[1], a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Details of the value of own resources irregularities recovered are not separately identifiable.

Irregularity in this context encompasses all reported overpayments, whether caused by simply negligence or deliberate intent to defraud. Statistics on the number of irregularities should not therefore be interpreted as an indication of the extent of detected fraud within the Community.

[1] 1992 Report, COM(93) Final of 20 April 1993—Table 1.1, cases of fraud or irregularity reported above deminimus level of 10,000 ecu Own Resources and 4,000 ecu Guarantee Fund.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what level of European Community expenditure will be necessary to sustain the current level of production.

Mr. Jack: Level of agricultural production is ultimately determined by the aggregate decisions of individual farmers, who when making these decisions will take into account forecast returns for each crop, including Community support payments to which they may be entitled.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will estimate by how much common agricultural prices have risen in weak currency countries as a direct result of the system of pegging farm prices to the deutschmark via the switchover system for each country.

Mr. Jack: Common agricultural policy support prices in all European Community member states are 20·75 per cent. higher in national currency terms than they would be without the application of the switchover coefficient. The effect of this coefficient has, however, been offset to some extent by associated reductions in the common ecu level of support prices: the net effect is that prices are just under 19 per cent. higher. However, support prices are set by the Council of Ministers in the annual price-fixing negotiations. It is not possible to say what prices would have been set had the switchover system not existed.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the common agricultural policy's budget is accounted for by (a) administrative costs, (b) storage costs, (c) disposal costs and (d) export restitutions in the current financial year.

Mr. Jack: The CAP budget for 1994 has been set at 36,465 mecu—£27,566 million. This does not cover expenditure incurred by either the Commission or the member states in the administration of the CAP, with the exception of some anti-fraud measures, which account for about 0·4 per cent. of the budget. Intervention storage, including depreciation costs and profits on sale, and export refunds account for 9 per cent and 20·8 per cent., respectively. With regard to disposal costs, surpluses are generally either exported on to world markets with the aid of export refunds, or purchased into intervention storage, from which they are eventually sold out again. Some perishable products, such as fruit and vegetables and fish, may be withdrawn from the market, and may, for example, be used for non-food purposes or be donated to charities. Some of this produce, because of its perishable nature, may be destroyed. Withdrawals and similar operations account for 2·6 per cent. of the 1994 budget.

Beef

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will state (a) the price at which British wholesalers buy beef per tonne, (b) what she estimates the price of beef per tonne would be in a free market without European Community price intervention, (c) the levels of European Community production and consumption of beef, (d) the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on beef subsidies and (e) the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the beef market.

Mr. Jack: The cattle reference price for the week commencing 17 February 1994 was £1,152·30 per tonne. However, it is not possible to make precise estimates about what prices might result if there were no market support in the EC. A large number of assumptions would be required in order to assess how domestic and world markets would react if Community policy were to be changed.

It is provisionally estimated that EC production of beef in 1993 was 7,980 thousand tonnes and EC consumption was 7,755 thousand tonnes.

The level CAP expenditure on beef subsidies in the 1993 EC budget years was some £3,131 million and the Exchequer costs of CAP support for beef in the United Kingdom is estimated at £308 million for the 1993-94 financial year. The United Kingdom also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of beef support in other member states.

Apples

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals are under consideration for introduction by the European Community in respect of grubbing grants for apple orchards; and what is her policy on this matter;

(2) what proposals are under consideration for altering the intervention system for apples within the European Community; and what is her policy on this matter.

Mr. Jack: The Council of Ministers has asked the Commission to come forward with proposals to reform the EC regime in fruit and vegetables. Their proposals are awaited; our view is that the intervention system for apples, and other products, sustains over-production and distorts the market, to which the regime should pay more attention. Our view on grubbing grants, should those be included in the Commission's proposals, will depend on the shape of the package as a whole. Such schemes have been unsuccessful in the past when introduced in isolation.

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in her Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Jack: The cost of receptions is included in the Department's overall administration costs which are published every year in the MAFF-IBEA departmental report.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of new furniture for her private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Jack: The cost of such furniture is included in the Department's overall administration costs which are published every year in the MAFF-IBEA departmental report.

Horses

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the effect of the introduction of maximum residue levels on the veterinary care of horses in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Under Council regulation 2377/90, maximum residue limits must be established by 1996 for active ingredients in veterinary medicines used in food producing species. The status of horses as food producing animals was established under directive 64/433/EEC relating to the sanitary conditions for the production and marketing of fresh meat. The European Commission has now confirmed however that, in line with existing United Kingdom policy, if a horse is not destined for human consumption, maximum residue limits will not be required. In addition, the Commission has emphasised that it is not the intention of the regulatory authorities to deny veterinarians the possibility of treating any animals.

In the United Kingdom, therefore, we shall continue to require that where no MRLs have been established, the medicinal product should be clearly marked as not to be used on any animal that might be intended for human consumption. This applies to all horses irrespective of value. I am satisfied this provides the necessary guarantees to consumers of the safety of food whilst safeguarding animal health and welfare. The introduction of MRLs should therefore have no effect on the veterinary care of horses in the United Kingdom.

Cereals

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the United Kingdom did not apply for derogation on the moisture content of cereals in the 1993 harvest.

Mr. Jack: The state of interventionable grain at harvest did not justify the application of the moisture content derogation on this occasion.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which major cereal-producing countries in the EC obtained derogation on the moisture content of the 1993 cereal harvest.

Mr. Jack: Of the four largest cereal producers in the EC, France and Germany both obtained the moisture content derogation for the 1993 harvest. Italy and the United Kingdom did not apply.

Fishing (Norway)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what species and quantitites of fish are caught by Norway in waters within the Fishery Limits Act 1976.

Mr. Jack: The Fishery Limits Act 1976 established British fishery limits extending to 200 miles from baselines or, where appropriate, to the median line. Since the establishment of the common fisheries policy in 1983 these waters, except for those out to 12 miles from baselines, are Community waters. Norway's entitlements to fish in Community waters are fixed annually under bilateral EC-Norway agreements in relation to specified ICES—International Council for the Exploration of the Sea—zones. Listed in the table are the species and quantities of fish for 1994 which Norway is entitled to take in the Community waters around the United Kingdom:—

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what species and quantities of fish were caught by (a) British, (b) German and (c) Spanish vessels within Norwegian fishing limits in (i) 1977, (ii) 1982, (iii) 1986, (iv) 1990 and (v) 1993.

Mr. Jack: The table details landings from Norwegian waters, by vessels of the three nationalities in question, in each of the years 1986, 1990 and 1993.

Comparable data for the earlier two years are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion and quantity of Norwegian fish exports went to (a) the United Kingdom (b) Denmark, (c) the Netherlands and (d) France in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: Norwegian exports of fish and fish products to the European Union in 1992 totalled 411,808 tonnes, of which:

	Tonnes	Per cent
United Kingdom	43,263	11
Denmark	116,575	28
Netherlands	25,772	6

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many agency chief executives in her Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Jack: None.

Cattle Transport

Mr. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions she has had with (a) France and (b) other European Union countries regarding European Union restrictions on the transport of British cattle to Switzerland: and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: None. European Community animal health rules prevent the export from the United Kingdom to non-EC countries via other member states of live cattle, other than those of less than six months of age or which have been imported into the United Kingdom after 18 July 1988.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will publish the criteria for contractors taking on the disposal of BSE-infected carcases.

Mr. Soames: Contractors disposing of BSE-suspect carcases by incineration must first obtain relevant planning and pollution approval from the appropriate local authority.

Contractors must also comply with contractural obligations drawn up by this Ministry to minimise the contamination of premises, prevent contamination of water and air and provide for safe handling of material by operators.

Mr. Pickhall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many BSE-infected carcases were incinerated in each region in 1991-92, 1992-93 and thus far in 1993-94.

Mr. Soames: The number of suspect BSE carcases slaughtered in each region and subsequently incinerated, from 1991 to 1994, is as follows. This information can be obtained only on a calendar year basis.

Region	1991	1992	1993	1994

Integrated Administration and Control

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the 1994 forms and explanatory booklet relating to the integrated administration and control system will become available in England and Wales.

Mrs. Shephard: The material is now available and is being sent out to farmers. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much her Department spends on child care provision for the under-fives and out-of-school provision for children aged over five either directly, excluding provision for departmental staff, or indirectly through resources made available to local authorities or other organisations; what form of provision is thereby provided; how many places are thereby provided; and if she will make a statement on child care.

Mr. Jack: In the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food expenditure on child care is only for the benefit of Ministry staff and provision is subject to the need to establish a value-for-money case.

Fish Landing Prices

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the European Commission in relation to minimum landing prices for fish.

Mr. Jack: [holding answer 8 March 1994]: In recent discussions in the Council of Ministers, our representations on minimum import prices have been guided by the fact that we believe they have only a short-term role in exceptional circumstances. We will continue to oppose their permanent application. From a United Kingdom perspective, minimum import prices have the serious disadvantage of making our processing industry pay more for essential raw material which cannot be obtained from Community sources.

Milk

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity and value of milk and milk products formerly distributed under the school milk scheme have been redirected since 1 April 1993; and what have been their destinations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No definitive information is available on the quantity, value or use to which the milk and milk products no longer utilised under the school milk scheme have been put.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 874, if he will publish in the Official Report a substantive answer to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Cardiff, West for answer on 16 December 1993 concerning the administrative expenditure of his Department.

Sir John Wheeler: The information which I provided the hon. Member in a letter dated 11 January was as follows:

i. The provisional outturn from 1992-93 is £697 million.

ii. The running costs limit for 1993-94 is £730 million (£707 million at 1992-93 prices). An estimated outturn will be published in the Spring in the "1994 Departmental Report and the Unified Budget Statement".

The 1994 departmental report on expenditure plans and priorities which is available in the Library, gives updated information on these matters.

Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he hopes to publish Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's first annual report as Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today arranged for copies of Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's first annual report as Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres to be placed in the Library.

I welcome the report, which contains a very comprehensive and detailed examination of the procedures governing the custody of detainees in the police offices.

I am pleased to note that Sir Louis reports that he has "found absolutely nothing that might give anyone the slightest cause for concern about the care and treatment of detainees held in the custody of uniformed officers of the RUC".

It is most important that the police offices should permit the very necessary detention provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Act to be operated properly and effectively. The police must be able to take all proper measures to secure the information they need in the interests of justice, and suspects while in custody must be treated fairly and in accordance with all relevant statutory and administrative safeguards. The Independent Commissioner provides a valuable source of information and advice in that regard, and I am most grateful to Sir Louis Blom-Cooper for his work throughout the past year.

I intend to give careful and detailed consideration to the report.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of such purchases is included in the entertainment expenditure for the Department, which is published in the departmental annual report.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Sir John Wheeler: Such purchases are included within the Department's overall administration expenditure which is published every year in the departmental annual report.

Lough Neagh

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to conserve fish stocks in Lough Neagh.

Mr. Ancram: The Fisheries Consolidated and Amendment Byelaws (NI) 1989 (1989 No. 483) as amended by the Fisheries Amendment Byelaws (NI) 1992 (1992 No. 483) contain measures to conserve fish stocks in Lough Neagh. The byelaws are available in the Library.

The 1992 byelaws increased the minimum size of mesh which may be used in set nets or trammel nets for the taking of pollen, trout, perch, pike and beam respectively. They increased the minimum takeable size of pollen and trout respectively and introduced a minimum takeable size for perch. They also introduced an annual close season

—1 March to 31 May—and a weekend closure—0600 hours Saturday to 0600 hours Monday—in respect of commercial fishing for perch, bream and pike.

These measures are enforced by the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated length of illegal nets confiscated on Lough Neagh in each of the last three years; and what action is being taken by the Fisheries Conservancy Board to control illegal netting on Lough Neagh.

Mr. Ancram: The length of illegal nets confiscated on Lough Neagh is set out in the table:

Year	Length of nets—metres
1991	15,340
1992	52,590
1993	38,185

The Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland controls illegal netting through regular patrols on the lough. The number of patrols has doubled since early 1993.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he plans to introduce quotas for fish harvested from Lough Neagh.

Mr. Ancram: No. There are no powers to impose quotas in respect of freshwater fish species and existing controls are considered to be adequate to conserve fish stocks in Lough Neagh.

Constitutional Talks

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on further constitutional talks on the future of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend recently met the leaders of the three Northern Ireland parties that have been engaged in private bilateral discussions with me. He showed them a document containing ideas for giving direction to the talks process based on earlier discussions and covering all the main relationships. I am holding further meetings with representatives from the parties to discuss these ideas. At the last intergovernmental conference on 10 March both Governments mandated further intensive work to provide a framework to carry the talks process forward.

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of such receptions is included in the entertainment expenditure for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments which is published in the departmental annual report.

Blood Donation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in which of the Northern Ireland health board areas there is a surplus of donated blood; and in how many areas blood plasma is in short supply.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 10 March 1994]: The Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service is a regional service and figures are not collected on a board basis. Since April 1993 blood collection and needs for Northern Ireland have been in balance. There has been no shortage or surplus of either donated blood or blood plasma.

LORD CHANCELLORS DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

4. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to facilitate representative actions on behalf of groups of victims in drug safety, consumer safety, safety at work and medical standards under legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board and others have suggested changes in the procedures surrounding multi-party actions which are being considered.

Debt Recovery

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he is taking to improve procedures for the recovery of debts due as a result of court judgments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Both the Lord Chancellor and I are committed to improving the efficiency of the court system through simplifying and streamlining procedures, reducing paperwork and reducing the need to attend court. In my answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 18 February 1994, column 1006, I mentioned the changes to county court procedures made in recent years and the plans for the introduction of some minor amendments to debt recovery procedures later this year. In addition, work is currently being done to improve the oral examination procedure with a view to introducing the new system by the beginning of 1995. There are also plans to look at ways of simplifying and improving the garnishee and charging order procedures later this year. Any proposed changes will be subject to our usual wide-ranging public consultation and it would not, therefore, be appropriate to make a statement about these initiatives at this stage.

Road Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what were the numbers of road accidents (a) per police officer and (b) per 100,000 population for each year since 1979 and this year to date for (i) South Yorkshire, (ii) North Yorkshire, (iii) West Yorkshire and (iv) Humberside police authority areas.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Howard: Such purchases are included within my Department's overall administration expenditure which is published every year in the annual report.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Howard: Such consumption is included in the entertainment expenditure for my Department which is published in the annual report.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Howard: Exceptionally, where there has been a major incident, the Prison Service has set up a temporary free telephone number for the use of relatives of those affected. The expenditure is small and could be quantified only at disproportionate expense. Freepost facilities are not used.

National Alliance of Women's Organisations

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give his reasons for withdrawing core funding from the National Alliance of Women's Organisations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office has never paid core funding to the National Alliance of Women's Organisations, so there is no question of its being withdrawn.

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Howard: The cost of such receptions is included in the entertainment expenditure for my Department which is published in the annual report.

Women's Voluntary Sector

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support his Department gives to the women's voluntary sector.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office does not support work carried out by voluntary organisations exclusively on women's issues. Under the drugs prevention initiative funding has been provided for 20 separate drug prevention projects targeted specifically at women.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will allow asylum seekers in Britain to be joined by family members who have been given asylum in other European countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Close family members are entitled to join refugees granted asylum in this country. The same arrangements would not be justified for asylum seekers before it has been established whether they qualify for refugee status and have a long-term future here.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time that asylum seekers are held in detention; and what are the figures for each year since 1990, including provisional figures for 1994 to date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who have been given exceptional leave to remain have not had their exceptional leave to remain status renewed in each year since 1991 and in 1994 to date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Precise figures are not available but, in each of the three years 1991-93, the number of asylum applications refused an extension of exceptional leave does not exceed a figure of the order of 15. Information for 1994 to date is not yet available.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 151 to show many of those asylum seekers held in detention who had applied (a) before 26 July 1993 and (b) after 26 July 1993 had been in detention for the whole of their stay in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 151, how many of the asylum seekers currently detained are being held in ordinary prisons; how many of these are being held with people convicted on criminal charges; and how many of these are being held with people awaiting trial.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 9 March 1994, 274 asylum seekers were detained in Prison Service establishments, including 82 at the Home Office holding centre, Haslar, which is used almost exclusively for immigration detainees.

At Haslar there are 14 convicted prisoners who undertake tasks connected with the running of the centre which the detainees cannot be required to do. The further details requested are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The general policy is not, however, to hold immigration detainees together with convicted inmates unless the detainees are themselves convicted prisoners or strict segregation would be to their disadvantage by preventing them from having access to facilities enjoyed by others.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom were detained (a) in hostels or detention centres, (b) in police custody, in hostels or detention centres, (b) in police custody, (c) in prisons and (d) in other places on 1 January and on 1 October, 1 July and 1 April 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Young Offenders

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on whether future secure accommodation for young offenders should be sited in the grounds of adult prisons.

Mr. Maclean: The search for suitable sites on which to locate the new secure training centres for persistent juvenile offenders has included an evaluation of Prison Service sites, both those which are redundant and those surplus to requirements. No final decisions have been taken, but if Prison Service sites are used for one or more of the centres, they will operate as self-contained and fully autonomous units.

Sheehy Inquiry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the detailed accounts of the Sheehy inquiry.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 2 December 1993, columns 665-66.

Detainees (Access to Doctors)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what access people held in detention by the immigration service have to a doctor.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is our normal practice to ask port medical inspectors to examine those passengers who are detained upon their arrival in the United Kingdom. Those subsequently detained in immigration detention centres have access on a daily basis to either a resident or visiting doctor. The Prison Service is responsible for providing similar access to a doctor for those Immigration Act detainees accommodated in prisons, and the police for those held for short periods in police cells.

Criminals (Payments)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make it a criminal offence to make payments to convicted criminals, their relatives, or agents for publishing, by any means, details of their criminal past or crimes.

Mr. Maclean: None. It would not be feasible to devise legal restraints sufficiently broad to prevent criminals, or their associates, from profiting from published accounts of their criminal activities, while at the same time avoiding unjustifiable restrictions on media reporting of matters of legitimate public interest. Enforcement could be particularly difficult since payment could be made indirectly, covertly or outside the jurisdiction of the courts.

Video Evidence

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what equipment his Department is using to prepare video evidence for use in courts; and what assessment he has made of the quality.

Mr. Maclean: The procurement of equipment for the preparation of video evidence is a matter for chief officers of police but the Home Office has issued technical guidelines to assist them. Video playback equipment for viewing video evidence is now available in 71 Crown court centres. The Home Office has commissioned research into the new provisions for child witnesses in the Criminal Justice Act 1991, which will include an assessment of the quality and acceptability of video taped statements. Also, an interdepartmental working group was reconvened in February 1994 to consider the effectiveness of current arrangements for the presentation of video-recorded evidence at court.

Heroin

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the findings of the reports "Trends in the Cost Effectiveness of Enforcement Activity in the Illicit Heroin Market 1979-1990", published by the centre for health economics at York university; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We shall be considering the report, which was published on 7 March 1994. Heroin trafficking is a clandestine activity and so, as the authors readily acknowledge, the report relies on many assumptions, estimates and crude measures of the effectiveness of enforcement. It is also debatable whether conclusions can be drawn about the effectiveness of drug enforcement from assumptions about the market in one particular drug.

In any case there have been significant developments in drug enforcement since the period covered by the report including improvements in the provision of drugs intelligence and the introduction by Customs of the new and successful flexible anti-smuggling teams.

Drugs (Police Informants)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police informants involved in informing on drug-related crimes have been prosecuted for acting as agents provocateur in each year since 1979.

Mr. Maclean: Information on prosecutions of police informants is not collected centrally.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of drug seizures made by the police and HM Customs and Excise were facilitated by police informants in each year since 1979;

(2) how many police informants have been engaged by the police to provide information on drug-related crime in each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not available.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of the former Yugoslavia, by current republic, are (a) permanent residents, (b) students, (c) visitors, (d) asylum applicants and (e) refugees in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At 31 January 1994 an estimated 6,640 nationals of former Yugoslavia, excluding dependants, were awaiting a decision on their application for asylum in the United Kingdom. During the period 1 January 1985 to 31 January 1994 a total of nine nationals of the former Yugoslavia were granted asylum, and 114 were given exceptional leave. An analysis by republic of origin, and the other information requested for those in the United Kingdom, are not available.

Algeria

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of Algeria are in Britain as (a) permanent residents, (b) students, (c) visitors, (d) asylum seekers and (e) refugees.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At 31 January 1994, an estimate of about 350 nationals of Algeria, excluding dependants, were awaiting a decision on their application for asylum in the United Kingdom. During the period 1 January 1985 to 31 January 1994 a total of 15 nationals of Algeria were granted asylum, and 31 were given exceptional leave. The other information requested for those in the United Kingdom is not available.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he or his officials have (a) requested or (b) received advice from the Attorney-General or his officials concerning the legality of the procedures by which he is seeking to reform the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. Maclean: It is the convention neither to confirm nor deny having sought or received the advice of the Attorney-General on legal matters.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Attorney-General and if the legality of the procedures by which he is seeking to reform the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board was discussed at that meeting.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Secretary and the Attorney-General meet regularly. Their last formal bilateral meeting was on 21 September 1993. It is not the practice to disclose what matters are discussed when they meet.

Detention Centres

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people held in (a) Haslar and (b) other detention centres have refused food for more than one day in the past year; what discussions are held with such individuals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is as follows.

In the 12 months ending 10 March 1994, 32 detainees have refused food for three days or more at the Home Office holding centre, Haslar.

In the period 10 May 1993 to 10 March 1994 the numbers of detainees who have refused food for three days or more in Immigration Service detention centres are as follows:

	Number
Campsfield House[1]	21
Harmondsworth	7
Queens Building, Heathrow	1
Total	29

[1] Since its opening on 29 November 1993.

Each case is handled on its merits, but it is made clear to detainees that they are not assisting their cases by taking such action.

Sammy Davis

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the removal of Sammy Davis from Britain; what response he gave to the Joint Council for the Welfare of Immigrants and the hon. Member for Islington, North; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Representations about the deportation of Mr. Sammy Davis were received from a noble Lord, four hon. Members, eight Members of the European Parliament, 14 organisations and 20 members of the public. Nevertheless, my right hon. and learned Friend decided that in all the circumstances the decision to deport Mr. Davis was correct. The reasons for this decision were fully explained to the hon. Member and to the Joint Council for the Welfare of Immigrants before Mr. Davis left the United Kingdom on 8 March.

Racial Attack Group

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the inter-departmental racial attack group last met; who is represented on the group; and when the group is next scheduled to meet.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has recently reconvened the racial attacks group. It had its first meeting on 25 February 1994 and next meets on 9 May 1994.

The group is chaired by the Home Office and draws members from the Home Office, the Scottish Office, the Department of the Environment, the Department for Education, the Department of Health, the Crown Prosecution Service, the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, and representatives from the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Metropolitan police and the Commission for Racial Equality. In addition, other groups and individuals will be invited to contribute to the working of the group as circumstances and subject matter dictate.

Foreign National Flags

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what current regulations and restrictions there are for prohibiting the flying of a foreign national flag from a building other than the embassy which is the property of the country concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

Provisions in the Town and Country Planning Act (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992 permit the flying of the national flag of any country, provided it is on a single, vertical flagstaff and displays no advertisement or subject matter additional to the flag's design. If the flagstaff is not vertical, it may require planning permission. If any building to which the flagstaff is attached is statutorily "listed", it may require listed building consent.

My right hon. Friend has no proposals to amend these provisions.

TRANSPORT

Public/Private Partnerships

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those transport projects involving public/private partnerships, initiated since 1989 which (a) await parliamentary approval, (b) have been approved but are not yet to begin construction, (c) are under construction or (d) are completed or opened;

(2) if he will list those transport projects involving public/private partnerships, initiated between 1979 and 1989 which (a) await parliamentary approval, (b) have been approved but are not yet to begin construction, (c) are under construction or (d) are completed or opened.

Mr. MacGregor: The information is as follows:

	1979-1989	Since 1989
(a) Awaiting parliamentary approval	—	Second Channel Tunnel Rail Link
		Crossrail
		Croydon Tramlink
(b) Awaiting construction	—	Birmingham Western Orbital Route
		West Coast Main Line
(c) Under construction	Jubilee Line Extension	Ashford International Station

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his current estimate of the cost of rail privatisation in the forthcoming financial year;

(2) what is the current estimate for the costs of rail privatisation for the forthcoming financial year.

Mr. Freeman: Planned expenditure by my Department, the Office of the Rail Regulator, and the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising for 1994-95 is £28·9 million. British Rail's and Railtrack's estimates of costs associated with reorganisation are a matter for them.

The breakdown of this estimate is given in the following table:

Expenditure on rail privatisation 1994-95	Staff and internal costs (£ million)	External consultants (£ million)	Total (£ million)
Department of Transport	2·0	12·0	14·0
Office of the Rail Regulator	3·8	1·6	5·4
Office of Passenger Rail Franchising	3·6	5·9	9·5

Aircraft (Smoke Hoods)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the fitting of smoke hoods in aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. It is for the authority to determine the requirements for passenger safety equipment. In the past five years my Department has received the following representations on the subject of smokehoods:

	Number
Transport Select Committee Meetings	3
Early Day Motions	3
Parliamentary Questions	17
Letters from Members of Parliament	23
Letters from the public/smokehood manufacturers	8
Meetings between DOT Ministers and Interested parties	2

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. MacGregor: The total cost of furniture for my private office for the year 1993-94 was £1,149·15.

British Rail

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, columns 244-45, whether the public service obligation grant to British Rail was taxed (a) in the year to 31 March 1992 and (b) in the year to 31 March 1991.

Mr. Freeman: Although the revenue element of PSO grant is taxable, and is taken into account as income in calculating BR's liability for corporation tax, none has been payable for the last few years because BR has had a trading loss even after taking the grant payment into account. The capital element of PSO grant is also taxable, but is taken into account by reducing the amount of expenditure which would otherwise have qualified for tax depreciation allowances.

Network SouthEast Stations

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of all the stations under the Network SouthEast operational area indicating whether they are (a) staffed at all times when rail services are operating, (b) unstaffed at certain times of day, (c) unstaffed at weekend or (d) unstaffed at all times, and listing the number of (i) reported assaults, (ii) other reported crimes, (iii) other incidents, (iv) complaints relating to the availability of tickets and (v) other complaints that have occurred at each station over the past year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally and, therefore, is not available in the form requested.

Within the operational area of Network SouthEast, which includes five stations belonging to InterCity, there is a total of 948 stations. Of these, as at June 1993, 191 were totally unstaffed, 104 were staffed at all times when rail services were operating, with the remaining 653 being staffed at certain times during the day. I am placing a list of staffed and unstaffed stations in the Library of the House.

The British Transport police keep statistics of crimes by category rather than by station. The Network SouthEast operational area falls within two of the BTP's operational areas, London north and London south. The total reported crime for the London north area in 1993 was 14,680 and 17,826 for London south. There were a total of 645 reported assaults throughout Network SouthEast in 1993 together with 800 reported robberies.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Norris: One. Mr. L. J. Haynes took up post on 14 February as chief executive designate of the Highways Agency. He was recruited from outside the civil service following an open competition.

New Road Schemes

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the extent to which his proposed new procedures for expediting new road scheme approvals will be compatible with existing European Union rules.

Mr. Key: The proposed changes to the Highways Inquiries Procedure Rules 1976 and the Compulsory Purchase by Ministers Inquiry Procedure Rules 1967 are compatible with existing European Community rules.

HGVs (Taxation)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to amend the criteria for restricted HGV taxation class to exclude all vehicles with a plating certificate; what are the reasons for these plans; and if he will ensure that no amendments are made until the next licence renewal or the end of 1994 whichever is the later.

Mr. Key: The restricted HGV taxation class is for vehicles with no plated weight. After April 1994 and only when current licences expire, a small number of vehicles which have been issued with a plating certificate specifying a plated weight but which are currently exempt from plating and testing will, on legal advice, be excluded from the restricted HGV tax class.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to narrow the criteria for heavy and light locomotives and motor tractors, as defined in the Road Traffic Act 1988, in relation to the equipment that may be carried, to qualify for showman's concessionary HGV licensing class; what are the reasons for these plans; and if he will allow a phasing in period to allow showmen and others to adapt their vehicles to meet the Department's new criteria.

Mr. Key: There are no plans to change the definitions of a heavy or light locomotive or a motor tractor in the Road Traffic Act 1988. For the purposes of the Road Traffic Act none of these vehicles, by definition, is designed itself to carry a load—though a crane, a dynamo or welding plant or other special appliance or apparatus which is an essentially permanent fixture, is not regarded as a load. Under the Vehicle Excise Act, if operated by a travelling showman, they should be licensed in the showman's haulage tax class, or else, if carrying any of the equipment mentioned above—which would, for vehicle excise purposes, be considered goods or burden—the showman's HGV tax class.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is being taken to avoid potential danger to the public through usage of under-strength bridges by coaches which exceed the current United Kingdom weight limit.

Mr. Key: The Department has a clear enforcement policy in respect of coaches and other vehicles which do not comply with current weight restrictions in the United Kingdom. The safety and protection of the public is fundamental to this policy.

Railway Rolling Stock (Brakes)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has received from British Rail on the safety of freight wagon brakes.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate that freight wagon brakes are subject to planned preventative maintenance, visually examined at regular intervals, and tested at each change in the make-up of a train.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the safety of brakes on BR rolling stock;

(2) if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the safety of simplified braking systems on freight wagons.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has regular meetings with the chairman during which various railway safety matters are discussed. I understand from the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate that it is continuing its discussions with British rail on these matters.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will forbid the introduction of European braking systems on British Rail rolling stock until they have received clearance from the Chief Inspecting Office of Railways.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate advise me on matters of railway safety. The inspectorate is continuing its inquiries into the proposed changes to a simplified brake testing system on certain freight wagons. It has requested both statistical and technical information from British Rail—Trainload Freight, in order to give detailed consideration to the proposal.

Traffic Cones Hotline

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints have been received by the traffic cones hotline; how many have been followed up; how many have resulted in the removal of cones; and what publicity the hotline has been given.

Mr. Key: Some 2,500 calls have been answered by the cones hotline between its introduction in June 1992 and 9 March 1994. Of these, some 1,200 have been followed up as formal complaints or observations. In three cases inquiries have led directly to the removal of cones. The cones hotline telephone number is displayed at the end of each set of major roadworks on the motorway and trunk road network. It has also been registered with directory enquiries. A press notice about the hotline was issued by the Department on 1 March 1994.

A1

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with representatives of public transport groups in Gateshead prior to his decision on the preferred route for the A1 western bypass through Gateshead.

Mr. Key: The Department met Tyne and Wear passenger transport executive and the local highway authority Gateshead metropolitan borough council to discuss public transport issues as part of the consultation on the A1 Gateshead western bypass scheme.

Specialist sub-consultants in transportation were appointed to carry out an appraisal of the public transport issues involved and their report was fully considered before a decision was made on the preferred route.

A review of existing information regarding current public transport services and future proposals in Tyne and Wear was carried out. Consultations were held with the local authorities in the area including Gateshead MBC.

The final report concluded that

"the impact of public transport improvements on the A1 corridor is likely to be small, even with the best possible system".

Further, the final conclusion indicated that "they (public transport improvements) are not an alternative to improving the road network at this particular location".

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in the programme to dual carriageway the A1 between Newcastle and Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Two sections of dual carriageway have been completed and opened to traffic at Marshall Meadows and Browneside. Two schemes to complete the dualling of the Alnwick bypass are in preparation. A scheme to complete the continuous dualling between Newcastle and north of Alnwick is in the road programme currently under review. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport expects to announce the results of the review shortly.

In Scotland proposals have been published for dualling between Tranent and Haddington and two small schemes south of Dunbar. A further five dualling schemes are in preparation.

Further progress on the upgrading of the A1 will depend upon potential schemes meeting environmental, economic and safety objectives, the overall availability of resources and the relative claims of potential schemes elsewhere in the country.

Traffic, Hastings

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what weighting has been given in his Department's traffic projections for the bypasses along the A259 through Hastings and Rye, to the full and successful completion and operation of the Hastings shopping centre;

(2) what weighting has been given in his Department's traffic projections for the bypasses along the A259 through Hastings and Rye, to the full production by current industry along the Rye Harbour road and to the successful and operating development of the industrial area along that road;

(3) what weighting has been given in his Department's studies of the traffic along the A21 to the full and successful completion and operation of the Hastings shopping centre.

Mr. Key: The effects of existing and projected development and of a range of assumptions about economic growth have been fully taken into account in the forecasts of traffic which have been used for the A21 and A259 scheme appraisals.

Entrance Project, Southampton

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider his refusal to fund the Entrance project in Southampton.

Mr. Key: Not at this stage. We are considering the issues raised by this project with Hampshire county council.

British Rail Pension Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the future of the British Rail pension fund.

Mr. Freeman: There have been frequent detailed discussions on the future pension arrangements between officials from the Department, the BR board and the BR pension trustees. In addition, since the beginning of the year, I have met representatives from the three main railway trade unions and the British Transport Pensioners Federation.

We expect to bring forward proposals shortly for the future of BR pensions funds.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by address all properties acquired by his Department along the line of the proposed east London river crossing and which are (a) occupied by tenants of his Department, (b) vacant but available for letting, (c) vacant but awaiting repair and renovation prior to letting, (d) vacant but unsuitable for letting and which could not be renovated at reasonable expense, (e) let or leased to the London borough of Greenwich and (f) let or leased to housing associations.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 11 March 1994]: I will write to the hon. Member to supply him with the addresses of the 158 properties along the original route of the east London river crossing acquired by the Department.

The bare facts are that, of those, 133 are currently let, four are vacant but available for letting and 21 are vacant awaiting assessment for repairs and renovations. It is probable that some properties could not be renovated at reasonable expense and in such cases letting will not be possible.

Of the 133 properties currently let, 49 are let to the London borough of Greenwich and 30 to housing associations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Commercial Organisations

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will list all commercial organisations that have been allocated space in the Palace of Westminster, giving in each case details of space allocated, rent and other charges paid per annum, the procedures that govern such arrangements and the dates on which they started.

Mr. Ray Powell: Accommodation in the Palace has been allocated to commercial organisations as follows:

	m^2
Press Gallery	350
Post Office	150
British Telecom/TRG Telecom	150
BBC	130
Press Association	80
Transport Office	35
Susan Hamilton Agency	20
Reuters	20
Rediffusion	10
Florist	7·5

The accommodation of these organisations within the Palace derives from long-standing agreements and decisions reached by the relevant authorities and Committees of both Houses. It is not possible to identify in any meaningful way the dates on which the respective agreements began. No revenue is received in respect of the provision of this accommodation.

Divisions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hours were spent on Divisions in each of the last five Sessions.

Mr. Newton: Because precise timings are not available for individual divisions, any figure must be an approximation. It may be assumed that divisions take, on average, 14 minutes each. On that assumption, the following shows, by Session, the number of divisions; the total hours taken; and, since the length of the Sessions veries widely, the average time per day in each Session.

	Number of Divisions	Hours taken	Per day
1988-89	409	95·26	0·33
1989-90	345	80·30	0·29
1990-91	233	54·22	0·20
1991-92	114	26·36	0·19
1992-93	402	93·48	0·23

Register of Members' Interests

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what are the percentage changes between the most recent and the previous HMSO published editions of the Register of Members' Interests in respect of (a) number of pages, (b) cover price and (c) costs of printing and publishing.

Mr. Newton: The percentage increase between the most recent and the previous edition of the Register of Members' Interests, HC 205 (93-94) and HC 325 (92-93) respectively are:

	Percentage
Price	+30·5
Estimated printing and publishing costs	[2]1·4

[1] Calculated on printed pages.
[2] Calculated per printed page.

HMSO regrets that the estimate of printing and publishing costs included in HC 325 (92-93) was incorrect. The figure should be £15,009.

EMPLOYMENT

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no agency chief executive in this Department who is currently paid more than £82,925.

Mines (Accidents)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of serious accidents and fatalities in (a) British Coal pits and (b) private licensed mines for each year since 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The table shows the number of fatal and major injuries from that date:

	British Coal		Licensed mines
Year	Fatal injuries	Major injuries	Fatal injuries	Major injuries
1986-87	15	952	3	30
1987-88	9	729	3	27
1988-89	18	685	2	25
1989-90	18	587	1	23
1990-91	11	501	1	13
1991-92	10	469	2	17
1992-93	3	326	3	7

Note: The introduction of the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurences Regulations on 1 April 1986 further widened the coverage of the major accident category and therefore figures from 1986 onwards are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of serious accidents and fatalities per 100 miners employed in (a) British Coal pits and (b) private licensed mines for each year since 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member for to the answer I gave him on Monday 24 January, Official Report, column 13.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cost of administering unemployment benefit in the Doncaster area in each of the past four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 14 March 1994.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the cost of administering unemployment benefit in the Doncaster area over the last four years.

It may be helpful if I explain that the Employment Service (ES) has responsibility for delivering a number of benefits in addition to unemployment benefit, as well as a range of other services to people seeking employment and training opportunities. Since 1990 the ES has been pursuing a policy of bringing together Unemployment Benefit offices and Jobcentres, with the aim of providing a more efficient and effective service to our clients. Individual ES staff are responsible for all aspects of ES work and it is not possible to provide accurate or meaningful breakdowns of the costs of specific activities after 1990. Therefore, I have provided figures, for the most recent years, relating to the costs of delivering the full range of our services in Doncaster. But I have additionally provided an estimated breakdown of the cost of administering unemployment benefit for you, but I must stress this is an estimate and can only be used as a guide. The figures for 1990-91 are before the Doncaster Unemployment Benefit Offices and Jobcentre costs were merged, and are actual data.

The figures also exclude fixed premises costs, ie the costs of leasing and purchasing premises and the associated running costs. The various methods of collecting this information over the years makes it time consuming and costly to trace those costs relating to the Doncaster offices.

Given these provisions, the relevant costs, which include staff salary and other running costs, such as fuel and telecommunications, are in the attached table.

I hope this is helpful.

Year	Total cost (£)	Administering unemployment benefit (£)
1990-91	1,596,296	[1]1,291,148
1991-92	2,226,527	[2]1,424,977
1992-93	2,543,453	[2]1,627,810
1993-94[3]	2,754,376	[2]1,707,713

[2] Estimate.
[3] Projected.

Job Club Contracts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the training companies which currently have job club contracts in the Doncaster area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 14 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about Jobclub contracts in the Doncaster area.

The attached table lists those organisations operating Jobclubs on behalf of the Employment Service as of 10 March 1994.

I hope this is helpful.

Employment Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many females occupy senior officer positions in the Employment Service in Wales (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of all such posts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Barry Jones, dated 14 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the numbers of women occupying senior officer positions in the Employment Service in Wales.

There are nine posts at Grade 7 level and above in the Employment Service in Wales, one of which is filled by a woman. This represents 11 per cent of the total.

You will wish to know the Employment Service in Wales, along with Employment Service nationally, aims to be an Equal Opportunities employer.

We have produced an Equal Opportunities Policy, signed by my Director in Wales and the Trade Union Side, which has been copied to all my people in the Principality.

There is, too, a five year equal opportunities action plan which sets out targets for disabled, ethnic minority and women representation at various grades.

Particular attention is paid to the development of those who work part-time, the majority of whom are women, as it has been recognised that alternative working patterns are a key element in the retention and development of a valuable, fully trained workforce.

I hope this is helpful.

DEFENCE

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: The cost of such receptions is included in the entertainment expenditure for my Department which is published in the supply estimates.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: Entertainment expenditure for my Department is published annually in the supply estimates.

Jet Provost Aircraft

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Jet Provost aircraft have been sold in the current financial year; and if he will list the associated equipment sold with the quantity and the price received for each item.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has contracted to sell 62 Jet Provost aircraft in the current financial year. In the same period 87 engines, six tip tanks and 10 trollyaccs have been sold. Prices are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the marks or categories of the Jet Provost aircraft sold in the current financial year; what flying time was left to each aircraft under existing operational rules; and what price was received for each aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: Type 3A, type 4 and type 5A Jet Provost aircraft have been sold in the current year. Jet Provost aircraft are not lifed in hours but by a fatigue index factor which is based upon the operational conditions under which the aircraft are flown; and these will determine further flying life. The prices are commercial in confidence.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) financial and (b) personnel contribution is made by the Federal Republic of Germany towards international activities in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

Germany pays 8·977 per cent. of costs, on the UN scale of assessment, towards peacekeeping operations. In 1993 its assessment for UNPROFOR was $489·8 million. Total humanitarian aid to the former Yugoslavia for the period January 1993 to 16 February 1994 donated by Germany to UN agencies, according to the latest UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs figures, is $25,318,046. There are no German military personnel serving in the former Yugoslavia. We do not have details of German civilian personnel.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annualised cost of British military operations associated with Yugoslavia.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 4 March, Official Report, columns 942-43.

DEFENCE

NATO

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current level of direct financial contributions to the NATO organisation by each of the member countries; and what is proposed for future years.

Mr. Hanley: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Air Training Corps

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nearest available alternative to RAF Halton as a flying base for the Air Training Corps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The nearest available airfield which could be used as a flying base for the ATC is RAF Henlow. However, this would not necessarily be a practical alternative since the volunteer gliding schools are regional in character, and RAF Henlow is well outside the catchment area for the local ATC and combined cadet force units.

RAF Halton

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) How many years RAF Halton has been used as an operational airfield; and if he will make a statement; (2) for how many years the ATC has flown aircraft from RAF Halton.

Mr. Hanley: Military flying has taken place at Halton for 82 years. It was first used by the Army between 1912 and 1981; since then, it has been used for RAF operational flying. The ATC has flown aircraft from RAF Halton for 46 years.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give his Department's estimate in decibels of the noise nuisance caused to local residents of aircraft flying from RAF Halton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Over a two-week period last year, monitoring equipment positioned on the property of those complainants most affected by noise from flying at RAF Halton revealed that aircraft operations increased the average background noise by up to 8dB(A).

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces personnel were tested for HIV/AIDS in each of the last four years; what factors he has taken into consideration for deciding whether such tests should be made compulsory and regular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Information on the number of service personnel tested for HIV is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In accordance with stated Government policy, there is no compulsory HIV/AIDS testing of service personnel, but those who consider themselves to be at risk are encouraged to undergo voluntary testing.

Drug Testing

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Government policy on drug testing for military personnel.

Mr. Hanley: My Department is at present considering the introduction of compulsory random drug testing to supplement existing measures to deter service personnel from drug abuse; the Army conducted trials last year to examine the procedures involved.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: Freephone facilities are not at present operated by my Department.

A freepost address is used by the armed forces to enable potential recruits to respond to regular and reservist recruitment campaigns. The cost of this service could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The forces aerogramme can be posted free of charge to and from service personnel serving in designated operational areas and their next of kin. Since 1986, the annual cost of this facility has been some £220,000. Earlier financial information is not available. During the Gulf crisis, this figure rose to £1,400,000. The most recent figure available, for the financial year 1992-93, is £262,000 reflecting increased usage as a result of operations in the former Yugoslavia.

Pregnant Service Women

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women who formerly served with (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the Army and (c) the Royal Air Force and who were dismissed from the service because they were pregnant have received compensation by way of industrial tribunals finding for them; what were the individual sums paid; what is the total sum paid so far to claimants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: As at 8 March 1994, 1,790 women—350 Royal Navy, 686 Army, 754 RAF—who were dismissed from the services on the grounds of pregnancy had received compensation from the Ministry of Defence to the value of £7,575,912. Such payments have resulted from industrial tribunal awards but most payments followed acceptances by claimants of MOD offers of compensation. To identify individual sums paid could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number of outstanding cases due to be heard by the industrial tribunals concerning claims for compensation by women who were dismissed from the service because they were pregnant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Some 2,000 cases concerning claims for compensation by women who were dismissed from the services on the grounds of pregnancy remain to be settled and some 1,200 of these are currently listed for hearing at industrial tribunals.

Hunting

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on how many occasions personnel from the Britannia royal naval college in Dartmouth have hunted with the Britannia Beagles Association during duty hours for each year since 1989;

(2) if he will make a statement about the benefits to officers' training of hunting with dogs;

(3) if he will list the number of officers of each rank who have hunted with the Britannia Beagles Association during duty hours, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: Hunting with dogs, either on foot or on horseback, promotes physical fitness and good tactical ground appreciation, both of which are of great value to military training.

Although beagling, like all other recreational activities, is not part of the BRNC Dartmouth training curriculum, and is not therefore undertaken by personnel while on normal duty, members of the Britannia Beagle Association may, if they wish, run with the beagles during compulsory sports afternoons, which are aimed at developing character and promoting fitness, or during off-duty hours.

Records are not maintained by my Department of the number of officers who have hunted with the Britannia Beagles Association, whether during compulsory sports afternoons or during off-duty hours.

Beauforts Dyke Sea Dump

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the Beauforts Dyke sea dump situated between Larne and Stranraer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has received a number of inquiries about phosphorus objects which have been washed ashore in Scotland, Northern Ireland and the Isle of Man in recent years. Some of these suggested that the objects may originate from the former Beauforts Dyke explosives dumping site. Subsequent Ministry of Defence investigations have been unable to identify the origin or purpose of these objects except that our records show that no phosphorus objects were ever stored at Beauforts Dyke.

Civilian Establishments

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 202, if he will list, from information publicly available, his Department's civilian establishments, their locations and the number of people they each employ.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 8 March, Official Report, column 202.

Military Bases

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 202, if he will list, from information publicly available, the United Kingdom's home military bases, their locations and the number of service personnel based and civilians employed at each of them.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 8 March 1994, Official Report, column 202.

WALES

European Structural Funds

14. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the failure of parts of Colwyn borough to get approval for objective 5(b) status under the EU structural funds.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am disappointed that we secured a smaller than hoped for objective 5(b) coverage for Clwyd in spite of a long and hard struggle with the Commission. At a very late stage the Commission insisted on changes to the population basis on which the discussions were being conducted. As a result, reductions had to be made to the United Kingdom's proposals. Within Wales, Colwyn was considered by the Commission to present the weakest case for objective 5(b) status.

Incomes

15. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the extent to which the average income of workers in Wales is compatible with his economic strategy.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend's strategy is based on improving standards of education and training; improving access to markets; and ensuring a good supply of development land and facilities for industry and commerce. The continuing success of this strategy should enable average earnings in Wales to increase still further.

Government Reorganisation

16. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given since April 1992 together with the Home Secretary, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to ways of improving the system of government of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government keep under review ways of improving the system of government in the United Kingdom.

Industry and Agriculture

17. Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to meet German Government Ministers to discuss common concerns in industry and agriculture.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to meet German Federal Government Ministers.

Gross Domestic Product

18. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the most recent estimates of gross domestic product per capita for the people of (a) Wales and (b) Britain.

Mr. Redwood: In 1992, the latest available, GDP per head was estimated at £7,515 in Wales and £8,813 in Great Britain in 1992.

Satellite Communications

19. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken to encourage high technology firms in the area of satellite communications to set up manufacturing plant in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Inward investment in this and other areas of the information technology sector is promoted actively through IT Wales, with encouraging results.

Public Bodies

20. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he will introduce to make quangos accountable to the people of Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Non-departmental public bodies in Wales are accountable to Parliament—as we have seen in recent months.

I report to the House on money and policy, and the accounting officer on regularity.

Civil Service

21. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to increase the total of civil service jobs in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Responsibility for assessing the advantages of relocating Government work rests with departmental Ministers. Within the framework of the guidelines covering relocations, every effort is made to attract civil service jobs to Wales.

St. Dogmaels Landslip

22. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take in relation to the St. Dogmaels landslip.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My officials visited the site last week and have provided me with a full report on the situation. My officials and I stand ready to offer advice and assistance where possible.

Gross National Product

23. Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the gross national product per capita currently in Mid Glamorgan and in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Figures on GNP are not available below United Kingdom level. GDP however is available for 1991, which showed Mid Glamorgan at £5,883 compared with Wales £7,218. The estimates tend to understate output in areas where people commute elsewhere for their work.

Unemployment

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of male unemployment in Wales at the latest available date; and what was the percentage unemployment rate.

Mr. Redwood: In January 1994, there were 100,500 male unemployed claimants in Wales, representing 13·7 per cent. of the work force.

Rural Railways

25. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received during the last 12 months on the future of rural railway services.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I have received a total of 36 representations.

Pigmeat

26. Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to relieve the effects of pigmeat overproduction upon producers in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The problem in the pigmeat market is one of oversupply, largely from elsewhere in the European Union. Prices should recover once production has declined.

Disabled Facilities Grant

27. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he transferred the funding of the disabled facilities grant from the supplementary credit allowance to the basic credit allowance.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Disabled facilities grants have been funded from local authorities' basic credit approvals since April 1992.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: A total of £31,465 is expected to be spent on freephone and freepost facilities in 1993-94. This expenditure is related to citizens charter activities and the provision of information on the council tax and on agriculture grant applications. Information on such expenditure in previous years is not readily available.

Pupils (Costs)

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the unit cost per pupil in each local education authority in Wales in 1992-93 for (a) nursery/primary and (b) secondary pupils.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Provisional data on the net expenditure per pupil in maintained schools in each local education authority area in Wales for 1992-93 are given in the table.

	£ per pupil Nursery/Primary[1]	£ per pupil Secondary[1]

Schoolchildren (Vaccinations)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information is held by his Department on the number of schoolchildren who have been vaccinated in schools as part of the school health service.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Complete information on the number of school children vaccinated as part of the school health service is not available centrally. However information on the number of children aged five to 15 vaccinated in any setting in Wales is given in the table. All information relates to the financial year 1992-93.

Number of children aged five to 15 who:

Tesco (Grant Aid)

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the total sum of grant aid to be made available to Tesco plc by his Department to assist with the building of its new distribution depot at Magor, Gwent; over what period the grant will be paid; and in how many instalments of what value;

(2) what job creation or other criteria need to be met by Tesco plc at its new distribution depot at Magor, Gwent, in order to receive the grant offered to it by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, I am unable to comment on the details of any specific application for grant assistance.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Redwood: No agency chief executives in the Welsh Office are currently paid more than £82,925.

Motorways

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of motorway are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned in Wales either (i) as new motorway or (ii) as existing motorway being widened.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The mileages are:

(a) Open—77 miles
(b) Under construction—7½ miles
(c) Planned—15 miles (new)
12 miles (widening of existing).

Wages Councils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Trades Union Congress to discuss the consequences of the abolition of wages councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to meet the TUC to discuss this issue. The abolition of wages councils is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress made in Welsh local authorities towards the recycling of 25 per cent. of household waste.

Mr. Redwood: Information relating to the numbers of bottle banks and amounts of glass collected by local authorities has been published in the 1992 series of the "Environmental Digest for Wales". Definitive information on other aspects of recycling will not be available until all authorities finalise their recycling plans under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to allow supplementary credit approvals to be used for recycling investment.

Mr. Redwood: Local authorities may apply for grant and supplementary credit approvals for waste recycling facilities under the strategic development scheme.

Head Injuries

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which hospitals in Wales employ multidisciplinary rehabilitation teams for treating local patients who have suffered severe head injuries.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Details of the information requested are not held centrally. However, the major neurosurgical units at Morriston hospital and the University hospital of Wales, Cardiff, have multidisciplinary rehabilitation teams for neurosurgical conditions, including brain injury. These regional centres also treat local patients. Neurosurgical patients from north Wales go to Walton hospital, Liverpool. Post-acute rehabilitation may take place closer to patient's homes, in local hospitals or in the community, but information on local provision is not held centrally.

M4

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce variable text signs to warn motorists of problems on the M4 on the approaches to the motorway in south Wales sited at places that would allow drivers to take alternative non-motorway routes.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The motorway network in south Wales has a system of variable message signs providing advanced warning for the Severn bridge. These signs will be upgraded in preparation for the completion of the second Severn crossing and additional variable message signs will be installed on the immediate approaches to the crossings. At present, the Welsh Office has no plans to extend this network.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to (a) appoint a road manager for the M4 and (b) introduce active traffic management measures to reduce congestion arising from accidents on the M4.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have no plans to appoint a road manager for the M4. The Welsh Office manages the M4 in conjunction with the county highway authorities as its agents.

Traffic management measures already exist. These will be added to should circumstances indicate the need.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to section B, subhead B1 of vote 7 of his Department's spring supplementary estimates, if he will list each additional loan to NHS trusts, and the principal capital items for which they are required; and if he will list those trusts which have interest bearing loans outstanding.

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows:

	Amount £
Bridgend and District NHS trust Princess of Wales hospital, psychiatric unit	4,703,000
Carmarthen and District NHS trust West Wales hospital ward blocks	2,345,000
Ceredigion and Mid Wales NHS trust North Road Development	432,000
Clwydian Community Care NHS trust Psychiatric unit, Ysbyty Glan Clwyd	2,013,000
Glan Clwyd district general hospital NHS trust Upgrading of wards, paediatric unit	1,515,000
Glan Hafren NHS trust Reorganisation of acute service	3,306,000
Gwent Community Health NHS Trust Community hospital developments	3,000,000
Llandough hospital NHS trust Barry neighbourhood hospital	3,615,000
Llanelli Dinefwr NHS trust Minor capital schemes	341,000
Pembrokeshire NHS trust Minor capital schemes	670,000
Powys health care NHS trust Brecon war memorial	2,545,000
South and East Wales ambulance NHS trust Vehicle replacement	600,000
Swansea NHS trust Operating theatres	1,097,000
Wrexham Maelor hospital NHS trust Wrexham Maelor phase IIA	3,723,000
Total	29,905,000

All NHS trusts have a long-term loan established via their originating capital debt or new long-term loans agreed with the Welsh Office.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to issue guidelines to trusts in the NHS in Wales on the refinement of the estimating procedure for the level of interest-bearing loans they will require.

Mr. Redwood: Through the process of setting, on an annual basis, the external financing limit for each trust, the element for new loans to fund capital developments is determined. Currently, there are no plans to issue further guidance but the position is kept under constant review via the monitoring regime applicable to trusts in Wales.

Milk Marque

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to establish a regional office of Milk Marque in Wales, to cover the whole of Wales as a single region.

Mr. Redwood: Decisions on where Milk Marque should locate its area offices is an operational matter for the Milk Marketing Board initially and for Milk Marque after vesting day.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spends on child care provision for the under-fives and out-of school provision for children aged over five either directly, excluding provision for departmental staff, or indirectly through resources made available to local authorities or other organisations; what form of provision is thereby provided; how many places are thereby provided; and if he will make a statement on child care.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office circular 13/93 stated that the Government see a continuing need for expansion in the range and scale of day care services available to parents and children. It referred to the duty on local authorities under the Children Act 1989 to review the level and pattern of such services, including those available through the medium of Welsh, and to the basis this would provide for planning future provision for their area.

Tables 11.1 and 11.2 of "Activities of Social Services Departments: Year Ended 31 March 1992" show, for example, that numbers of places with registered childminders and in day nurseries have increased by 71 per cent. and 207 per cent. respectively since 1988. Nearly 70 per cent. of children aged three and four attend a maintained school. Detailed figures are contained in "Statistics of Education and Training in Wales: Schools No. 2 1994".

Local authority resources provided under the local government revenue settlement are unhypothecated. It is for each local authority to decide in line with its statutory duties and local needs and priorities how much they provide for these services.

No information is held centrally about expenditure on child care provision by the national health service in Wales.

The Welsh Office has made available £153,000 in 1993-94 for after school and holiday care through the out-of-school grant initiative which the Chwarae Teg consortium is co-ordinating on behalf of the training and enterprise councils. No information is yet available on numbers of places provided. Grants in support of child and family services and for the promotion of the Welsh language, together amounting to some £1,180,000, have gone to voluntary organisations whose members provide day care service for children under eight.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those capital expenditure items that have given rise to the supplementary amount of £263,000 required by his Department under subhead A3 of vote 9 of the Welsh Office spring supplementary estimates.

Mr. Redwood: The increase for capital expenditure obtained under subhead A3 of class XV, vote 9 of the Welsh Office spring supplementary estimate was £283,000. This was covered by unspent resources within my Department's planned total of public expenditure, which was not therefore increased. The bulk of the expenditure is towards the costs, of relocating the training, education and enterprise department from Companies house, Cardiff to the Welsh Office's main building at Cathays park. This follows the release of floor space by the Export Credits Guarantee Department, it will lead to a substantial annual savings in accommodation costs, of around £250,000 per annum. The balance is being spent on (i) capital requirements—furniture and information technology—of the Advisory Committee on Staffing Matters in connection with local government reorganisation, £38,000, and (ii) Welsh Office information technology, £33,000, which represents take-up of entitlement to end-year flexibility following an underspend in 1992-93.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development agency in relation to the motions of no confidence in the board and in the executive directors passed by the UNISON WDA staff branch.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 11 March]: None.

GPs (Gymnasiums)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to family health service authorities concerning the prescribing by general practitioners of sessions in a gymnasium for NHS patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 11 March 1994]: I understand that a growing number of GPs are making arrangements with their local leisure centres for vouchers which the doctors can give to patients whom they have assessed as likely to benefit from a suitable course of exercise. This is a matter for GPs' clinical judgment: these are local initiatives, I have no current plans to issue guidance on the subject.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will approve a proposed development, which he has rejected, for a local authority or voluntary-aided school upon educational grounds should the school become grant maintained.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend considers all statutory proposals relating to a significant change of character in grant-maintained and local education authority schools on their merits, and takes full account of all the circumstances.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his estimate of the expenditure upon capital works which will be undertaken by grant-maintained schools in the current year and in 1994-95.

Mr. Robin Squire: Capital grant of £85·7 million was set aside for 1993-94 and £114·9 million is available for 1994-95 to grant maintained schools for expenditure on capital work, reflecting their increased numbers.

Grant-maintained schools are also free to use annual maintenance grant and other funds available to them for capital expenditure.

Cornish Language and Culture

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to restore the education and support training funding in Cornwall to assist the teaching of the Cornish language, Cornish history and culture.

Mr. Robin Squire: None. The Department funded this work for five years as a pilot project which the education support grant programme related to educational needs in a multi-ethnic society. It is for the local education authority to determine whether or not to continue the work as part of its mainstream provision.

City Technology Colleges

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his estimate of the number of surplus places in each city technology college.

Mr. Robin Squire: Some city technology colleges are still building up to full capacity. Total numbers will rise from about 12,000 pupils now to about 15,000 pupils in steady state. Recruitment at age 11, however, is in all cases oversubscribed; there are typically around three applications for every place.

Schools (Surplus Places)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give, for each local education authority for which figures are available, the number of surplus places in (a) maintained primary schools and (b) maintained secondary schools in January 1992 and January 1993; and what percentage each is of the capacity of school places in each category.

Mr. Forth: The Department collected comprehensive information on surplus school places through a detailed survey in 1991. For the figures derived from that survey, I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) on 31 January 1994, Official Report, columns 517-21.

We intend to make regulations later this year under section 21 of the Education Act 1993 requiring all LEAs and, where it has relevant responsibilities, the new Funding Agency for Schools, to submit information to the Secretary of State annually, beginning in 1994, on the numbers of surplus places in LEA-maintained and grant-maintained schools respectively.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much his Department spends on child care provision for the under-fives and out-of-school provision for children aged over five either directly, excluding provision for departmental staff, or indirectly through resources made available to local authorities or other organisations; what form of provision is thereby provided; how many places are thereby provided; and if he will make a statement on child care.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1993-94, my Department has made grants totalling £1,004,000 to national organisations —including the Pre-School Playgroups Association, the British Association for Early Childhood Education and the National Children's Bureau—concerned with promoting good practice in educational provision for the under-fives. This Department does not currently fund out-of-school provision for children aged over five. Information on local education authority expenditure on under-fives is not held centrally. In 1992-93, local education authorities in England spent some £6,954 million on provision for all pupils in maintained nursery and primary schools. In 1993, 656,000 children aged under five attended maintained nursery and primary schools, and nearly 700,000 attended pre-school playgroups. Other forms of provision for children under five are matters primarily for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the projected total cost, as identified by the 1993 Hunter building conditions survey, of repairing and restoring the colleges which are the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council to maintain.

Mr. Boswell: The survey commissioned from Hunter and Partners by the Further Education Funding Council estimated that the total cost of remedial works at colleges entering the further education sector was £839 million, of which £359 million was needed for urgent health and safety work. The maintenance of college premises is the responsibility of the colleges themselves; but the Further Education Funding Council is assisting them through capital grant with the costs of the necessary work.

St. Patrick's School, Birkby

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what consultation processs occurred with the head teacher of St. Patrick's Catholic primary school, Birkby, Huddersfield, before his Department issued an instruction to the governors of the school to conduct a ballot on the question of grant-maintained status;

(2) what consultation he had with the Bishop of Leeds before issuing instructions to the governors of St. Patrick's Catholic school, Birkby, Huddersfield with regard to grant-maintained status;

(3) what reason he had for issuing a directive to the governors of St. Patrick's Catholic primary school, Birkby, Huddersfield, to carry out a ballot of parents on the issue of grant-maintained status;

(4) what consultation he had with the chairman of governors of St. Patrick's Catholic school, Birkby, Huddersfield, before issuing instructions to the governors in relation to grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: On 31 August 1993, the governing body of St. Patrick's Catholic primary school received a parents petition in favour of the school holding a ballot on grant-maintained status. As that petition met the requirements of section 60(2) of the Education Reform Act 1988, the governing body were placed under a duty to hold a ballot.

The Department wrote to the chairman of governors of the school on four occasions during October 1993 about this. The governing body having failed to initiate a ballot within the period required by the Act, the Department informed the chairman of governors on 2 December 1993 that the Secretary of State was minded to direct the governing body to hold a ballot.

In the light of the chairman of governors' response to that letter, the Secretary of State directed the governing body to hold a ballot and to give notice in writing of that ballot to the local education authority and to the trustees of the school.

Neither my right hon. Friend nor the Department has consulted the head teacher of the school or the Bishop of Leeds about this matter.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Patten: Nil.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Patten: Information at this level of distillation is not readily available.

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Patten: The cost of such receptions is included in the administration expenditure for my Department, which is published in the annual report.

Schools, London

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary local authority controlled schools in (i) London and (ii) Lewisham he has visited in the last 12 months.

Mr. Patten: I have visited four local authority secondary schools in London in the last 12 months. None of these schools is in Lewisham.

School Discipline

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the implications of the Children Act 1989 for discipline in schools.

Mr. Forth: None.

Schools, Gloucestershire

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the date on which all schools in Gloucestershire that have been transferred from grammar to comprehensive status in the last 20 years changed status.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 8 March, Official Report, column 288.

Undergraduates (Subjects)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table giving for every year since 1979 the total number of undergraduates in (a) mathematics, (b) physics, (c) chemistry, (d) all science subjects and (e) all subjects.

Mr. Boswell: This information is shown in the table. All figures relate to England only.

From 1980 to 1991, figures come from the DFE School Examinations Survey and the FE113 survey. They relate to school leavers and students in FE instutions, of any age.

From 1992, the figures come from the DFE database of information for the school performance tables. They relate to pupils of any age, and students in FE of any age.

Grant-maintained Technology Colleges

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools, other than those 12 announced on 28 February, are at each stage of preparing an application to become grant-maintained technology colleges; and if he will name them.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are no separate formal stages in preparing an application to become a technology college. Over 200 secondary schools have asked for information on the technology colleges initiative. We know that many of these are actively seeking to prepare applications, but we are not collecting centrally information on precisely which schools are doing so. Technology colleges will be either grant-maintained or voluntary-aided secondary schools.

Departmental Property

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what property, leased or owned for the purposes of his Department, is not in current use.

Mr. Boswell: All property currently leased to the Department for its central purposes is part of the Government's common user estate. The Department of the Environment—Property Holdings—will be replying for the common user estate.

HEALTH

NHS (Fraud)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 37, for what reasons her Department does not monitor the progress of fraud investigation in the national health service;

(2) what conditions she considers need to change before she will institute routine monitoring of fraud in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for taking action on suspected fraud lies with the health body concerned. Standing financial instructions of each body should set out responsibilities if fraud is suspected. The Department collects information on completed fraud investigations but it is not necessary or practicable continuously to monitor the status of each inquiry.

Vacant Accommodation

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many rooms, previously occupied as living accommodation by hospital and ancillary staff are currently vacant in each regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The results of a survey carried out in December 1992 estimated that there were 1,800 empty residential houses and flats and 11,400 vacant places in staff hostels; of these 150 and 1,019 respectively were identified as surplus, the balance were vacant between lettings. Separate figures for regional health authorities are not available.

Guy's Hospital

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where each department of Guy's hospital will physically go if the hospital is closed; and how many of the jobs in each department will remain.

Dr. Mawhinney: Following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's announcement on 10 February, the Guy's and St. Thomas's hospital trust is working with the London implementation group and other key parties to work up detailed proposals for developing Guy's as a centre for local health services and for teaching and research. The future location of departments and staffing implications will depend on the outcome of this work, which will be subject to public consultation.

Maternity Units

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the most recent average length of stay in maternity units in London hospitals is; and what it was in 1984.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for London could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Figures available for the average length of stay, ordinary admissions, non-psychiatric hospitals, by sector, national health service hospitals, England for 1984 and 1991-92 are:

Maternity	1984	1991-92[1]
Number of days	4·8	3·3

[1](Provisional data for 1991-92).

Source:

Table 14 Department of Health statistical bulletin on hospital activity statistics 10/93, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any London hospitals require patients in maternity units to provide their own bedding for themselves and their new-born babies.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the hospitals themselves, although we are not aware of any such requirements.

Primary Health Care Funding

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of her recently announced package of £85 million funding for primary health care is new money which has not hitherto been set aside for any health programme.

Dr. Mawhinney: The £85 million funding for primary health care in the London initiative zone in 1994-95 comprises £57 million from central funds and £28 million from funds specifically set aside for this purpose by health authorities in LIZ.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each primary care project within the London implementation zone, giving the amount of money already expended and the proposed date of completion of the project.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 18 January Official Report, column 525, for much of this information. This stated that detailed management and monitoring of development programmes is carried out by local health authorities. Expenditure details and proposed completion dates of individual projects are not held centrally.

Financial Information Project Ltd.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who decided upon the rate of interest to be payable by FIP Ltd. on the unauthorised unsecured loan from West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: West Midlands regional health authority was responsible for calculating the interest payable on the loan to FIP Ltd.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action was taken about the unauthorised transfer of £300,000 to FIP Ltd. with a view to investigation of whether a criminal offence had been committed.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she has taken to establish whether directors of FIP Ltd. have personally benefited from the £300,000 loaned to it.

Dr. Mawhinney: Financial Information Project Ltd. is a wholly owned subsidiary of Health Management Trust, a registered charity, and has no directors.

Birth Defects

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been born with missing or defective limbs in (a) the Trent regional health authority and (b) the Yorkshire regional health authority in each year for the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Note:

Prior to 1990 all malformations, however minor, were reportable to OPCS. In January 1990 an exclusion list was introduced. As a result, minor malformations of the toe, coded to ICD 755.6 were no longer notifiable.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to require all NHS health trusts to use NHS in their title.

Dr. Mawhinney: The words "National Health Service" already appear in the full titles of all NHS trusts as recorded in their establishment orders.

South Yorkshire Ambulance Trust

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people were employed by South Yorkshire ambulance trust to work in the stations in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993-94;

(2) how many paramedics are employed by South Yorkshire ambulance trust; and how many have been transferred to work in the station.

Mr. Sackville: The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Dr. B. M. Kingston, for details.

Dog Faeces

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has commissioned on the health hazards posed by dog faeces in public places; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has not commissioned any recent research in this area.

The Public Health Laboratory Service communicable disease surveillance centre monitors human infections including those which may be transmitted from dog to man through the inadvertent ingestion of faeces from infected dogs or soil, environment, food or water contaminated by the source. The CDSC and Central Veterinary Laboratory are currently undertaking a study into the transmission of campylobacter from puppies to humans. Also, a multidisciplinary group on human toxocara infections, initiated by CDSC, has been convened within the United Kingdom, the primary aim of which is to investigate cases of childhood toxocariasis.

The Department takes the health risks posed by dog mess very seriously and strongly encourages adherence to basic hygiene procedures, such as wearing gloves when gardening and washing hands after gardening or, with children, when they have been playing in the garden or parks, et cetera, as well as responsible dog ownership.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical negligence claims involving the NHS were brought in each year since 1987-88 in each region.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical negligence claims involving the NHS were settled in each year since 1987-88; and what were the costs involved in each region.

Dr. Mawhinney: Before the introduction of the national health service indemnity scheme in January 1990, no information was collected on the number of costs of medical negligence claims. For the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92, the information obtained from NHS bodies on the number of cases settled and the total costs of damages awarded and legal costs is shown in the table, though for the latter the returns are incomplete. For 1992-93, the information is not yet available.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what has been the total expenditure within the NHS on independent private management consultants in the last 12 months; and how many have been employed;

(2) what has been the total expenditure within the NHS on independent financial consultants in the last year; and how many have been employed.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on financial and management consultants is included on the annual financial return under the category "external contract staffing and consultancy services", and cannot be separately identified. The figures could include non-clinical services provided by outside bodies in areas such as cleaning, accountancy and computer services.

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many fundholders overspent their budget in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1991-92, 49 of the 294 general practitioner fundholders overspent their budgets. Final audited information is not yet available for 1992-93.

Public Relations

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total expenditure within the NHS on independent public relations companies in the last 12 months; and how many have been employed.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 16 February, Official Report, column 866.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much her Department spends on child care provision for the under-fives and out-of-school provision for children aged over five either directly, excluding provision for departmental staff, or indirectly through resources made available to local authorities or other organisations; what form of provision is thereby provided; how many places are thereby provided; and if she will make a statement on child care;

(2) if she will make a statement about child care.

Mr. Bowis: The Government are committed to encouraging expansion of independent day care services. The pattern and levels should be determined at local level by local authorities, voluntary bodies, the private sector, employers and individuals—including parents, working together. The Children Act 1989 gives local authorities a strategic duty for day care, which ensures coherent and sensible expansion, building on the recent growth in day nurseries, numbers of childminders and other types of service.

Information on local authority expenditure on child care is not available centrally by separate age group. Standard spending for children's services generally in 1993-94 is £1,723 million, 16 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1990-91.

The latest statistics on day care provision are in "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 1992—England", a copy of which is in the Library.

Detailed information about the cost and level of nursery provision in the national health service is not available centrally. It is for individual NHS employers to provide for the child care needs of their staff in the light of local recruitment and retention needs.

The Department has an active programme of grant aid to voluntary organisations to support the development of innovative services. During 1993-94 over £2·3 million has been made available to support 13 national voluntary organisations, including the National Childminding Association, the Pre-School Playgroups Association and the Kids' Club Network. The Department's out-of-school initiative, which involves national and local voluntary organisations in the management of projects, is pump priming expansion of day care for school age children. It complements the Department of Employment's child care grant to training and enterprise councils.

Skin Cancer

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the last two years have (a) been diagnosed as having skin cancer and (b) have died from skin cancer; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the tables:

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is currently being undertaken in the United Kingdom on the causes of, and cure for, multiple sclerosis; and by how much the Government have grant aided the research institutions in each year since 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

The main agency through which the Government support medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from my Department. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to support in the light of its own judgment of priorities and the quality of research applications it receives. The council is always willing to consider soundly based scientific proposals in competition with other applications for research funding.

The MRC supports a wide range of neurological research relevant to multiple sclerosis, in particular studies of the neuromuscular system. The 1992-93 funding in this area was a total of £13·3 million. The council's specific expenditure on multiple sclerosis in the period 1987-88 to 1992-93 was as follows:

Financial year	£
1987-88	297,000
1988-89	216,000
1989-90	181,000
1990-91	181,000
1991-92	80,000
1992-93	64,000

In addition, the MRC's new initiative on the neurosciences approach to human health will help to promote several approaches which may be relevant to the disease.

Besides MRC-funded work, there is also research being undertaken in various universities and NHS hospitals with public funding. However, information is not collected centrally on other Government-funded research on multiple sclerosis.

Doctors (Management of Services)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she is currently taking to encourage the involvement of doctors and other medical staff in the management of services.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 11 March 1994]: Ensuring effective collaboration between clinicians and managers has been central to the reforms in national health service management.

One of the basic elements of the resource management programme in the hospital and community health services was the encouragement of clinical staff to become involved in management. This led in many cases to the appointment of doctors and other health professionals as clinical directors. Most NHS trusts now have a medical director on their board, contributing to their strategic and operational management.

The need for managers and clinicians to work closely together is essential to the success of contracting. Guidance has been issued to purchasers and providers requiring them to involve clinicians and other professionals in the contracting process. The need to involve doctors and nurses in the contracting process was also stressed in the second of my speeches on "Purchasing for Health" last year.

Encouraging general practitioners to join the GP fundholding scheme brings them in to the heart of NHS management and patients have clearly benefited from the more sensitive management of NHS resources which this brings.

Opportunities for specific training in aspects of management are available to doctors during their postgraduate training and are included in continuing education programmes.

The National Health Service Management Executive also supports, and partly funds, the British Association of Medical Managers, whose overall aim is to achieve the highest quality in health care management.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Clergy Numbers

31. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what projections the Church Commissioners are using of future numbers of clergy and their pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I have just given to the hon. Members for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) and for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks).

Stipends

32. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what advice the Church Commissioners have given to the diocese about the contribution to be made by the diocese towards stipends and pensions in each of the next five years.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners have recently discussed with dioceses their projected support for stipends and expenditure on pensions up to 1997. In 1993, the commissioners met 37 per cent. of the total stipends bill, with the remaining 63 per cent. provided from parishes, fees and diocesan income. By 1997, that figure is likely to rise to 80 per cent. as a consequence of cuts in the commissioners support. The longer-term funding of pensions, which currently take up 44 per cent. of the commissioners' income, is being considered by the commissioners and pensions board in the light of actuarial advice and a range of possible options will be discussed with dioceses and others later this year.

33. Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what changes have occurred in the past three years in the funds available to the Church Commissioners.

Mr. Alison: The Church Commissioners manage the Church's centralised historic assets; it is a "closed fund" with no new contributions coming in. The commissioners' assets were valued at £2·4 billion at 31 December 1990, £2·3 billion in 1991 and £2·2 billion in 1992; their investment income was £164·5 million, £169·5 million and £168 million respectively. 1993 figures are not yet available.

Assets Committee (Investments)

34. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners what procedural changes have been made in the reporting mechanism from the assets committee to the Church Commissioners on investment performance.

Mr. Alison: The Church Commissioners' board of governors has recently taken a number of steps to strengthen the commissioners' financial management and accountability. The board's actions come as a direct result of the recommendations of the Lambeth report and are part of an ongoing process to address all the issues raised in it.

The board has strengthened its relationship with the commissioners' assets committee through general rules under which the assets committee is to work. These provide for the assets committee:

To review, at least annually with external professional advice, asset allocation and investment performance.

To manage the Commissioners' assets with full regard to the commissioners' ethical policy approved by the Board on the recommendation of the assets committee.

To seek the express approval of the board before any new borrowing.

To report quarterly to the board.

The rules are designed to offer direction and guidance to the assets committee and to reinforce the link between the two bodies.

Theological Colleges

35. Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what steps the Church Commissioners are taking to ensure that theological colleges which receive their financial support comply with the law in respect of canon C7.

Mr. Alison: This is not a matter for the Church Commissioners. The cost of training is met from General Synod and other funds, not from the commissioners. The training of candidates for ordination is carried out under the direction of the House of Bishops, which is advised by the Advisory Board of Ministry.

Pensions Board (Discretionary Help)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners what instructions the pensions board has been given for those applying for discretionary help under the Ordination of Women (Financial Provisions) Measure 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: The pensions board has formulated internal guidelines, in consultation with the commissioners, for handling applications for discretionary provision. The board will consider each case on an individual basis, having regard to those guidelines.

SCOTLAND

Contracts

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the practice of United Kingdom companies imposing contracts on domestic consumers in Scotland which state that the governing law of the contract shall be English law.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: An examination of records held by the Scottish Office has revealed no such representations.

Health Boards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures are used by Ayrshire and Arran health board to verify the credentials of individuals seeking employment with the health board.

Mr. Stewart: The procedures used by Ayrshire and Arran health board to verify the credentials of a potential candidate will depend on the qualifications requirement for the post in question. References are taken up in respect of all potential employees.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the parliamentary constituencies covered by each of Scotland's health boards; and if he will list the names of the general managers and chief executives and the correspondence addresses of each of the boards.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is contained in the table.

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 17 February, Official Report, column 961.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office does not have an integrated computer-aided facilities management system. Computers which also perform other functions provide some elements of such a system. Sun Hardware is used, which was acquired from Design Computer-Aids Ltd. Information about the cost of the facilities management elements, the time required to commission them and the savings resulting from their operation cannot be separately identified. No part of the system has been stolen.

Forestry

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Forest Enterprise will co-operate with customers who wish to conduct inspections of its operations in order to satisfy consumer demands for independently certified timber.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 March 1994]: Forest Enterprise is always willing to show its customers, and the general public, how it manages Forestry Commission woodland. However, there is no need to duplicate the inspections already carried out by the Forestry Authority arm of the Commission. Forest Enterprise is required to follow the environmental guidelines published by the authority and prepared in consultation with forestry industry and environmental organisations.

Blood Supplies

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the price per unit of supplies of blood and plasma to Health Care International; and on what date this price was set;

(2) if the price per unit of supplies of blood and plasma to private hospitals is the same for all; and how frequently the price per unit is reviewed;

(3) what is the current minimum cost at which blood and plasma can be supplied to private hospitals.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1994]: The charges for the supply of blood or blood products made by the Scottish Blood Transfusion Service are the same to all private hospitals including Health Care International. The current charges were fixed in October 1993 to come into effect from 1 April 1994 and are reviewed annually. There is no minimum as the charges reflect actual costs and are as follows:

Whole Blood	64·00
Red Cell Concentrate	36·75
Specialised (Washed) RCC	66·75
Specialised (Filtered) RCC	61·75
Specialised (Frozen) RCC	166·75
Platelet Concentrate (random donation)	30·25
Platelet Concentrate (apheresis donation)	150·00
Fresh Frozen Plasma (220 ml)	29·50
Cryoprecipitate	27·50
Stable Plasma Protein Solution (4·5 per cent.) (18g)	30·00

There are a number of other blood products which are derived from blood donations. These are not usually required by private hospitals but if they were and there was a surplus to NHS needs, the price would be calculated on application.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what percentage of total blood supplies was supplied to private hospitals over the last five years;

(2) what percentage of total plasma supplies was supplied to private hospitals over the last five years;

(3) what are the projected levels of demand for blood and plasma from private hospitals over the next five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1994]: The information is as follows:

Percentage

Year	Total blood supplied	Total plasma supplied
1988-89	0·97	0·42
1989-90	0·94	0·48
1990-91	0·90	0·53
1991-92	0·79	0·46
1992-93	0·89	0·57

No estimate of projected levels of demand from private hospitals has been made since the priority is to meet NHS demands and only surplus over-needs will be available to the private hospitals.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was (a) the number of blood donors, (b) the quantity of blood donated and (c) the amount of blood required for each health board for each month since April 1993;

(2) in how many of the Scottish health board areas there is a surplus of donated blood; and in which areas blood plasma is in short supply.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1994]: Monthly figures for the regional centres could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The available information is as follows:

Blood Transfusion Region	Number of registered donors	Number of donations of blood from 1 April 1993 to January 1994	Number of issues of whole blood 1 March 1993 to 30 June 1993
North of Scotland	21,988	13,067	126
Aberdeen and North East of Scotland	35,762	23,243	294
East of Scotland	29,356	22,309	195
Edinburgh and South East Scotland	86,368	60,332	243
Glasgow and West of Scotland	219,264	116,212	15
Total	392,738	235,163	873

Note 1

The number of issues of blood to health bodies within Health Board areas is equal to their requirements. Regional Centres extract fresh blood components from donations and send the remaining plasma to the Protein Fractionation Centre for processing into blood products and which are then issued to hospital and other NHS users.

The Regional Centres are self sufficient in whole blood and all fresh blood and plasma products. Blood plasma is not in short supply in any area in Scotland.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many units of blood and plasma are to be supplied annually by the Scottish blood transfusion service to Health Care International; and what percentages these amounts will form of total blood and plasma supplies;

(2) if there is an upper limit contained within the Transfusion Service's supply contract for the supply of blood to Health Care International;

(3) what are the projected levels of demand for blood and plasma from Health Care International over the next five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1994]: Under the contract, the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service will supply the undernoted maximum number of units of fresh blood components and plasma annually, subject to NHS needs in Scotland being met first. The contract will be kept under continuous review and the level of demand over the next five years placed on the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service will relate to availability of supplies.

	Unit	Quantity
Red cell concentrate	donation	5,000
Platelets—single donor	procedure	600
—random	donation × 5	100
Fresh frozen plasma	donation	800
Cryoprecipitate	donation	56

The SNBTS will also supply to Health Care International processed stable plasma protein solution made from plasma after other components have been removed and made into pharmaceutical products for use within the NHS. The maximum amount of SPPS to be supplied is as follows:

	Unit	Quantity
SSPS (18 gram)	400 mls	Up to a maximum of 4,000 units (if available)

If the maximum units specified in the contract are supplied in response to clinical needs this will represent 2 per cent. of the total number of units supplied in Scotland.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the statutory safeguards which ensure blood and plasma supplies will only go to private hospitals if national health service needs are satisfied;

(2) if he will publish the supply contract for blood and plasma between the Scottish blood transfusion service and Health Care International;

(3) what powers the transfusion service has to recover supplies from Health Care International if faced with shortages of blood for the national health service in any part of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend has power under section 44 of the NHS (Scotland) Act 1978 where he has acquired supplies of human blood for the purpose of carrying out blood transfusion or supplies of other substances or preparations for the purposes of providing services under the 1978 Act, to make arrangements for making such supplies available to medical practitioners and other persons who require them and he may make those available on such terms including terms as to payment of charges and on such conditions as he may determine.

Under section 54 of the 1978 Act he is required to exercise the powers conferred on him under section 44 only to the extent that he is satisfied that anything which he purported to do or allow under that power—

(a) will not to a significant extent interfere with the performance by him of any duty imposed on him by the 1978 Act to provide services of any kind, and

(b) will not to a significant extent operate to the disadvantage of persons having access to services at Health Service hospitals otherwise than as private patients.

My right hon. Friend has delegated his powers in relation to section 44 of the Common Services Agency of which the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service is a division. The supply of blood and blood products to private hospitals is therefore subject to the obligation under section 54.

Arrangements are being made for a copy of the contract with the Health Care International to be placed in the Library. The contract stipulates that in situations of extreme shortage the regional director or depute will have the right to retrieve products from the hospital in order to maintain supplies essential for the immediate and pressing requirements of NHS-funded patients. Responsibility for blood supplies in other parts of the United Kingdom is a matter for the appropriate Secretary of State.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what improvements are planned for the system of selecting solicitors and counsel to act for the Legal Aid Board in the future; and what consideration has been given to providing an opportunity for all suitably qualified firms of solicitors and counsel to benefit from the available work which the Legal Aid Board is able to provide.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No changes are planned. Suitably qualified solicitors and counsel are instructed by the board as required. Any suitably qualified firm of solicitors or counsel have the opportunity to be instructed just as they have the opportunity to be instructed by any other client choosing a legal representative.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what directions and other guidance are given to solicitors and counsel acting for the legal aid fund to ensure that costs from unsuccessful non-legally aided litigants are recovered for the benefit of the legal aid fund.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The instructions given by the board will depend on the nature of the particular case. In general terms, the board will seek to recover costs wherever possible.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases have been decided or settled against the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what rates of remuneration have been claimed since the creation of the Legal Aid Board by firms of solicitors acting for the Legal Aid Board in litigation; if he will specify the expense rates and mark-up claimed by such firms of solicitors in their bills and the period or periods to which such charges relate; and what are the comparable rates allowed upon taxation and the proposed civil legal aid rates.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information on the rates of remuneration since the creation of the board claimed by firms of solicitors acting for the board and on the expense rates and mark-up rates claimed by those firms is not available. A prescribed hourly rate for civil non-matrimonial cases came into force on 25 February 1994. Details of the rates and their application are given in the following statutory instruments which are available from HMSO:

SI 1994/228 Legal Aid in Civil Proceedings (Remuneration) Regulations 1994

SI 1994/229 Civil Legal Aid (General) (Amendment) Regulations 1994

SI 1994/230 Legal Aid in Family Proceedings (Remuneration) (Amendment) Regulations 1994

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many bills submitted by firms of solicitors acting for the Legal Aid Board have been reduced by negotiation or taxation; and what amounts have been saved in real and percentage terms.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many firms of solicitors have been instructed by the Legal Aid Board's head office legal department to conduct litigation on behalf of the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much has been paid by the Legal Aid Board since its creation to (a) firms of solicitors instructed by the Legal Aid Board to represent the Legal Aid Board in litigation, (b) the firm of Messrs. Collyer-Bristow when instructed to act for the Legal Aid Board in litigation and (c) counsel instructed to act for the Legal Aid Board in litigation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) The information requested is not available. (b) It is not the Legal Aid Board's policy to disclose details of a commercially confidential nature between itself and its suppliers. (c) The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what redundancies are being made at the Liverpool area office of the Legal Aid Board; who is being made redundant; what are their qualifications and experience; how many years service they have had in being employed in dealing with legal aid matters by (a) the Legal Aid Board and (b) the Law Society when it was responsible for administering legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A voluntary redundancy scheme has been introduced and 17 volunteers are being sought. The Legal Aid Board cannot predict with certainty which staff will volunteer.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff have been, are and will be engaged in the Liverpool area office of the Legal Aid Board on franchising; and how much time has been, is being and will be spent on franchising.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Up to now, three senior staff at the Liverpool area office have been engaged on a part-time basis carrying out preliminary audits. Over the next four to six months an additional six quality auditors will be engaged at that office on a part-time basis on the pre-contract audits. Excluding training in the current financial year, the equivalent of one full-time member of staff has been engaged on franchising. In the next financial year, with the commencement of pre-contract audits this figure will increase to approximately four full-time equivalents. This figure will increase if a higher than predicted number of applications is received in this office.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the staff levels, taking account of qualifications and experience to be employed by the Liverpool area office of the Legal Aid Board will be after the redundancies which are to take place; and what were the comparable staff levels employed prior to (a) the creation of the Legal Aid Board and (b) the redundancies.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Seventy-three staff will be employed in the Liverpool area office post the redundancy programme; 80 staff were employed in the office in 1988 prior to the board's creation. The number of staff employed in March 1994 prior to any staff leaving under the voluntary redundancy programme is 90.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what criteria are used to select solicitors firms and counsel to be instructed by the Legal Aid Board; what are the costs considerations involved; and who is responsible for the selection.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The criteria used for these purposes are value for money, fitness for purpose and delivery against price. The costs considerations are value for money given the nature, complexity and importance of the matter. A number of individual staff are responsible for the selection of solicitors' firms and counsel, depending on the nature of the particular matter.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many court actions have been brought by and against the Legal Aid Board since its creation; in how many cases the Legal Aid Board has conducted such litigation by solicitors (a) employed at the Legal Aid Board area offices, (b) employed by at the legal aid head office and (c) in private practice.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what volumes of work have been received by the legal aid area office in Liverpool immediately prior to its creation and in each year thereafter; and how the volume of work is calculated and recorded.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In 1988-89, immediately prior to the Legal Aid Board's creation, the Liverpool area office handled 51,041·9 units of work. The table shows work volumes for each full year since then.

	Units
1989-90	53,199·2
1990-91	51,975·4
1991-92	57,485·8

Units of work are calculated using a series of weighted calculations derived from the standard times necessary to complete specific transactions. The volume of work is calculated and recorded by computer.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much the Legal Aid Board's administration and the legal aid fund, respectively, has had to pay by way of (a) damages and (b) costs in respect of litigation in which the Legal Aid Board has been unsuccessful.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how quickly bills submitted to the Legal Aid Board by firms of solicitors acting on its behalf have been paid; and what scrutiny, including referring the matter for taxation, takes place before such bills are paid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested on the speed with which the board pays firms of solicitors which have acted for it is not available. Bills received from solicitors instructed to act for the board are scrutinised by the Department which has been responsible for issuing the instructions. If necessary, the board would apply for a solicitor and own client taxation in respect of a bill submitted by a solicitor instructed to act for it.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases have been brought by or against the Legal Aid Board since its creation by a party who is legally aided.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many sets of counsels' chambers and individual counsel have been instructed to represent the Legal Aid Board in litigation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what fees have been paid directly by the Legal Aid Board to counsel who have been instructed by firms of solicitors acting for the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what staff will be left in the Liverpool legal aid area office following the redundancies; and what are the qualifications and experience of the remaining staff.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Seventy-three staff will be employed in the Liverpool area office after the redundancy programme. It is not possible to say what the mix of staff will be after the redundancy exercise. The redundancy exercise is a voluntary arrangement and the Legal Aid Board cannot predict with any certainty which staff will volunteer.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what cost has been involved in franchising at the Liverpool area office of the Legal Aid Board to date; what further costs are envisaged; what savings have been made as a result of franchising in real terms; and how such savings have been calculated.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost of establishing franchising in the Liverpool area office has been the cost of training four existing staff and of recruiting and training five additional staff. Excluding salaries this is estimated to be £42,500. The cost of running franchising in the Liverpool office on an on-going basis is £100,000 per annum.

Franchising has been introduced to ensure the delivery of a quality assured, value for money legal aid service from the board's suppliers, mainly solicitors. Franchising has not been introduced to achieve savings in the administration costs of legal aid.

Judges

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions in each year since 1987 his Department has written to individual judges regarding their interpretation of the workings of the legal system; if he will list each such occasion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department conducts a great deal of correspondence with the judiciary on a wide variety of topics which is usually conducted on a confidential basis. Information on the precise volume and nature of correspondence is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Life Expectancy and Infant Mortality

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the contribution of prescribing practice and limitation to the change of life expectancy and infant mortality.

Dr. Mawhinney: Life expectancy has improved steadily and the rate of infant mortality has improved markedly over the past 10 years. Prescribing is only one part of clinical care; increased health screening, promotion and vaccination and the availability of new medicines will all have contributed to these improvements.

Toxoplasmosis

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish information from the Public Health Laboratory Service showing the number with toxoplasmosis in pregnancy; and if she will give the results why testing for toxoplasmosis is not a standard procedure in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: The Public Health Laboratory Service communicable disease surveillance centre is currently reviewing laboratory reports of human toxoplasma infections in England and Wales from 1981 to 1992. Submission for scientific publication of this analysis is expected later this year. This review will contain information on laboratory reported human infections in pregnant women, although the incidence of toxoplasmosis in pregnant women is unknown due to unrecognised or undiagnosed asymptomatic infections or individuals with non-specific symptoms that may go undetected.

Screening for toxoplasmosis in pregnancy is not a standard procedure in the United Kingdom because the significance of the test, the natural history of the disease and the efficacy of the treatment are all surrounded by uncertainty. For any screening programme, the benefits conferred by screening must clearly outweigh the risks.

Health Care Staff, London

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the numbers of (i) health visitors, (ii) school nurses, (iii) district nurses and (iv) community psychiatric nurses should be in London.

Mr. Sackville: The Department makes no recommendations as to local staffing levels in the groups listed. Decisions concerning staffing are the responsibility of local managers who, with advice from professional colleagues, are in the best position to consider the amount and type of work to be done, and therefore the work force they require.

Private Practice Consultations

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the charges made to consultants for the use of NHS premises, staff and facilities for private practice consultations.

Mr. Sackville: Charges which are intended to cover the cost to the hospital of providing facilities for consultation purposes are made direct by the hospital to the patient.

Health Care Premises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the system of inspection in respect of the suitability and adequacy of premises from which NHS services are provided by (a) medical general practitioners, (b) dental general practitioners, (c) pharmacists and (d) opticians.

Dr. Mawhinney: Through their management responsibility for primary health care services, family health services authorities are required to be satisfied that premises used by doctors, dentists and opticians are suitable and adequate. In the case of pharmacists, responsibility rests with the Royal Pharmaceutical Society inspectorate. On-site inspection of the premises used by each type of practitioner can be made to ensure that the appropriate standards are met.

John Radcliffe Hospital

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times the hospital complaints procedure for the John Radcliffe hospital, Headington, Oxfordshire, has been invoked in the last two years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for Oxfordshire health authority. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Dr. Peter Iredale, the chairman, for details.

Surrogacy

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to review surrogacy arrangements; what inquiries she makes as to the expenses paid for surrogate pregnancies; how many children were born to surrogate parents in 1993; what counselling and information is given to surrogate and natural parents prior to insemination; whether the surrogacy parenting centre was approved by her Department; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985 prohibits the negotiation of surrogacy arrangements on a commercial basis and advertising of or for surrogacy services. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 amended the Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985 so as to make clear that surrogacy arrangements are unenforceable by or against any persons making them.

There is no requirement for voluntary organisations concerned with surrogacy to be approved by the Department. Where treatment is being undertaken by a centre licensed under by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority surrogates and couples will be assessed and offered counselling in accordance with the HFEA's code of practice. Copies of the code of practice are available in the Library.

Information on the number of children born to surrogate parents in 1993 is not available.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to bring within the regulations governing inspection of nursing and residential homes with three or fewer residents (a) in all cases or (b) in all cases where the funding of a resident is from public funds.

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities are required to inspect all nursing homes, whatever their size, at least twice a year. Since April 1993 local authorities have had powers to inspect independent residential care homes for three or fewer residents.

Imported Medicines

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is her Department's policy to encourage the parallel importation of medicines in order to save money for the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Parallel imports are a consequence of substantial price differentials for pharmaceuticals created by a wide variety of national pricing mechanisms across the European Union within a single European market with common licensing criteria. We consider that the parallel importing scheme which has operated since 1984 neither encourages nor discourages parallel imports, but strikes the right balance between ensuring that imported medicines comply with EU standards of safety, quality and efficacy and avoiding placing undue obstacles in the way of importers.

Asthma

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will initiate a study in Hammersmith in respect of any correlation between heavy traffic use on major roads and asthma, eczema and other related diseases.

Mr. Sackville: No. A causal link between air pollutants from traffic and the induction of eczema, asthma and other diseases has not been proven. However, high levels of air pollutants may exacerbate pre-existing respiratory illness.

The Department is advised on these matters by the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants and by the Advisory Group on the Medical Aspects of Air Pollution Episodes. The latter's three reports are available in the Library; they are on ozone; on sulphur dioxide, acid aerosols and particulates; and on oxides of nitrogen. The Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants has formed a sub-group specifically to consider the relationship between air pollution and asthma.

Advice and information for the public is provided on the freephone helpline: 0800 556677.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require NHS health trusts to open their meetings to the public.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. In accordance with the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, NHS trusts are required to have one public meeting per year. Many NHS trusts have developed substantial programmes of public meetings and regular meetings with community health councils.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those English national health service trusts which in 1992-93 exceeded their external financing limit; and by how much in each case.

Mr. Sackville: The NHS trusts which exceeded their external financing limit in 1992-93, and the amount by which they did so, are shown in the table. These trusts have had their 1993-94 EFL reduced by the amount of the 1992-93 excess.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those English national health service trusts which in 1992-93 failed to achieve a 6 per cent. return on capital in (a) percentage terms and (b) cash terms.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those NHS trusts which in 1992-93 failed to break even; and by how much in each case.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts were operating in the 1992-93 financial year.

Mr. Sackville: One hundred and fifty-six.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trusts (a) met and (b) failed to achieve a 6 per cent. return on assets.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 29 November 1993, c. 305]: I regret that my previous reply contained an error. The number of trusts which have made a pre-interest rate of return of less than 6 per cent. is 51.

Laryngectomy

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funding is available for health authorities to supply artificial larynx equipment to those who have undergone a laryngectomy operation; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if the supply of artificial larynx equipment is available free of charge under the NHS to all laryngectomy patients.

Mr. Sackville: Funding for health authorities to supply artificial larynx equipment to those who have undergone a laryngectomy operation is provided through resources made available to the national health service.

It is for individual health authorities to determine the level of service provision required to meet the needs of people needing these operations in their area. Priorities are determined in the light of local circumstances.

National health service consultants may prescribe artificial larynx equipment as part of NHS treatment and when they do so no charge is made. As for all other services, supply is dependent on resources, with decisions being made on the basis of clinical priorities and local needs.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if sterile tracheostomy dressings are available on prescription to patients who have undergone laryngectomy surgery, once discharged from hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Sterile tracheostomy dressings are not available on general practitioner prescription, but they continue to be available to discharged patients through the hospital service.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was her Department's response to the request from the Home Office to provide NHS hospital beds for nine Algerian and one Indian political asylum seekers who were on hunger strike at Campsfield detention centre in Oxfordshire in the first week in March; and for what reasons that response was given.

Dr. Mawhinney: Officials in the immigration department were advised that assessment of patient health care needs and appropriate hospital placement were matters for the local health authorities. Officials in the National Health Service Management Executive approached Oxford regional health authority to help identify suitable facilities in the region.

Medicines (Side-effects)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the incidence of side-effects on patients, as a result of allergies or other reasons, when taking more than one brand or form of a particular medicine for a specific ailment.

Mr. Sackville: A product licence in the United Kingdom for a generic medicine is granted on provision of evidence to demonstrate that the product is equivalent to the branded form. Since formulation and manufacturing methods may vary among all the different proprietary and generic forms of a particular medicine, it must be demonstrated that any differences do not produce untoward effects.

The yellow card system for monitoring adverse reactions to drugs is a voluntary system whereby doctors send reports of suspected adverse reactions to the Medicines Control Agency. There have been occasional reports of adverse reactions apparently associated with generic substitution. However, a report of an adverse reaction in association with a drug does not necessarily mean that the drug caused the reaction.

Leadership Award Scheme

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the NHS leadership award scheme was established; how many recipients there have been during each year; what criteria are used in deciding an award; who nominates candidates for the award; who determines each recipient; what an individual award comprises; what has been the budget for the award for each year; and who paid for the advertisement in the South London Press of 8 March concerning the receipt of such an award by the chief executive of Lewisham hospital trust.

Dr. Mawhinney: The scheme was introduced last autumn by Sir Duncan Nichol as part of his strategy for improving the quality of management within the national health service. Staff were invited to nominate their chief executives or general managers for awards if, as a result of their leadership, improvements in local services had been achieved. On 8 March Sir Duncan presented plaques to the nine awards recipients he had selected in the light of assessments made by senior executives from major public companies. There was no budget specifically for the scheme; costs were met from within existing management executive budgets for non-staff expenditure. The advertisement to which the hon. Member refers was paid for by private individuals who wanted to celebrate the fact that Mrs. Val Martin was one of the nine awards recipients.

King's Fund Health Policy Institute

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the report published on 24 February by the King's Fund Health Policy Institute; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government welcome this contribution to the debate over the achievements and directions of the national health service reforms and in particular the report's confirmation that the reforms offer potential for real gains to patients.

Emergency Services, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current ratio of accident and emergency units to district general hospitals in South Yorkshire; and what the ratio was (a) two, (b) five and (c) 10 years ago.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Trent regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Michael Carlisle, chairman of the authority, for details.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to meet employees of the South Yorkshire ambulance trust and the hon. Member for Don Valley to discuss patient transport services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I met the hon. Member on 16 February to discuss the South Yorkshire Metropolitan Ambulance and Paramedic Service National Health Service Trust.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered disabled people are employed in her Department; and what percentage this is of the total employed.

Mr. Sackville: In February 1994, 1·4 per cent. or 68 members of the total work force were registered disabled. In addition, a number of staff have a disability but are not registered.

Drugs Prescriptions

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her estimate for each year since 1985 of the proportion of generic, non-branded drugs as a percentage of the total amount of drugs prescribed by general practitioners; and what was the total estimated cost in constant prices for both categories for each year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the table.

The percentage of prescription items and the net ingredient cost of drugs prescribed generically: England

Year	Percentage prescribed generically[1]	Net ingredient cost for items prescribed generically at 1992 prices[2] (£ million)	Net ingredient cost for all items at 1992 prices[2] (£ million)
1985	35·0	359·7	1,877·2
1986	39·0	423·1	2,010·1
1987	39·0	443·8	2,131·2
1988	40·0	478·3	2,248·5
1989	42·0	560·5	2,287·0
1990	44·0	643·0	2,328·6
[3]1991	43·0	641·1	2,423·2
[4]1991	41·0	654·4	2,616·5
1992	43·0	786·0	2,858·0

[1] Prescription items for dressings and appliances are excluded from the totals in calculating generic prescribing. Items generically prescribed include those written as a generic but dispensed as a proprietary because a generic is not available.

[2] The net ingredient cost is the basic cost of drugs before discount and excludes dispensing costs or fees. The net ingredient cost figures at 1992 prices are calculated using the GDP deflator. The net ingredient cost of dressings and appliances is excluded.

[3] 1991 data are based on items and have the same coverage as 1985 to 1990 data.

[4] 1991 and 1992 data are based on items and cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and through direct administration to patients by GPs. These include not only prescriptions originating from general practitioners in England but also from hospital doctors, dentists, and armed services doctors and dentists.

Note: 1985 to 1990 data are based on fees and cover prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors only.

General Practitioners

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new measures she proposes to relieve the work pressure and work load on general practitioners in the light of the recent report by the Audit Commission; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We continue to take forward, in consultation with the profession, ways of reducing pressures in general practitioners' work load.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been removed from the lists of (a) non-fundholding general practitioners and (b) fundholding general practitioners, for each family health service authority in Merseyside, in each year since 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: Family health services authorities are not required to record the fundholding status of general practitioners when dealing with a request to remove a patient's name from a doctor's list.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued to general practitioners concerning the removal of patients from their lists; and what rights of redress patients have who have been removed from their general practitioner's list.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she will take to ensure that a private out-patient cannot bypass existing national health service waiting lists; and what steps she has taken to determine the extent to which such patients are currently able to receive priority over NHS patients.

Mr. Sackville: None. Any private work a consultant does is additional to his duties and is carried out in his own time, sometimes using resources bought from the health service. As a result more treatments are given, pressure on the national health service is relieved, and the generality of waiting times is not adversely affected.

Agensic-Anosmic

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning Agensic-Anosmic; and what research is being undertaken into the loss of sense of smell.

Mr. Bowis: The Department is aware that Ageusic-Anosmic helps people who have lost their sense of taste and smell. Ageusic-Anosmic has campaigned since 1992 to draw attention to the plight of sufferers. Research into the condition is primarily a matter for the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. Internationally there is research work being undertaken into the possible affects of environmental pollution on the senses of taste and smell and the Department keeps this under review.

Wakefield Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons Wakefield health authority has blocked extra-contractual referrals by general practitioners within its area.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for Wakefield district health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Brian Hayward, the chairman, for details.

Health Authorities (Mergers)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list health authorities as of 1 April with details of new health authorities formed by merger listing the former health authorities merged.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information will be placed in the Library.

Tobacco Companies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance or guidelines have been issued by her Department regarding the appropriateness of investment in tobacco companies by NHS trusts or health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Trusts and health authorities cannot invest Exchequer funds in tobacco companies.

Paragraph 7 of schedule 3 to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 limits the manner in which trusts can invest any money held to securities of the Government of the United Kingdom, or such other manner as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may, with the consent of the Treasury, approve. Approval has been given for investment in certain United Kingdom public sector institutions, banks which are authorised institutions under part I of the Banking Act 1987, and building societies authorised under the Building Societies Act 1986. Trusts are therefore unable to invest in tobacco companies.

There is no provision in the National Health Service Act 1977 which would allow health authorities to invest funds.

Stage Hypnotism

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to initiate research into the health hazards of stage hypnotism.

Mr. Sackville: None. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 31 January at columns 598-99.

Doctors (Free Speech)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether doctors employed by NHS trusts are guaranteed the same rights of free speech as apply under paragraph 330 of the Whitley council agreement for doctors employed by health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Doctors have rights specified in their contracts.

Public Immunity Certificates

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many public interest immunity certificates she has signed in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: Two. One was signed in relation to confidential policy formation documents relevant to listeria litigation and the other was to protect a confidential report into a maternal death which was requested by a solicitor in medical negligence litigation against a health authority. In the first case the court allowed the other party to see the documents and in the second case the application has been withdrawn for the time being following receipt by the solicitors of the signed certificate.

Blood Supplies

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of blood supplies in each region were supplied to private hospitals in each of the last five years; and how many units this represented.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 167, if she will publish for the last two years the quarterly information by regional health authority on (a) forecast outturn spend on extra-contractual referrals and (b) planned level of spend.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is estimated and unaudited; it is collected, and is only appropriate for, internal performance management purposes.

Private Patients

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private patients received treatment in national health service hospitals in each medical discipline for each year since 1990 in each regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 4 March 1994]: Figures for 1989-90 and 1990-91 will be placed in the Library. Data for both years are subject to deficiencies in overall coverage and episodes with a valid diagnosis. Because of this, some specialties and regions show wide year-on-year variation, and the data should therefore be regarded as an estimate only.

TREASURY

Taxation

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will produce tables showing (a) the proportion of Government and social contribution income coming from indirect taxation and (b) the top rates of income tax in each other European Union member state.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is as follows:

	Indirect taxes as a proportion of total taxes and social security contributions, 1991[1] (per cent.)	Top rate of income tax (per cent.)
Belgium	27·0	[3]55
Denmark	35·9	65
France	33·4	56·8
Germany	31·7	[4]53
Greece	51·8	40
Ireland	43·9	48
Italy	30·1	[5]51
Luxembourg	n.a.	50
Netherlands	26·7	[6]60
Portugal	n.a.	40
Spain	[2]31·8	56
United Kingdom	39·4	40

[1] Source: Data derived from OECD statistics. Includes some taxes within OECD classification, 4,000, property. For details see "Economic Trends", February 1994.

[2] In 1990.

[3] At present, increased by a surcharge taking the effective rate to 56·5 per cent. Local authorities levy a further surcharge on top, taking the effective rate to around an average 60 per cent.

[4] For business income, can be up to 58 per cent.

[5] In addition, a local income tax at a nationwide rate of 16·2 per cent. is levied on income from business activities and investments.

[6] In addition, a municipal income tax is imposed on income from business activities. The rate varies according to municipality, but takes the effective rate to around 55 per cent.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff are working in the areas of (a) capital gains tax, (b) schedule D tax, (c) corporation tax, (d) pay as you earn and (e) national insurance contributions.

Mr. Dorrell: Excluding staff employed on central administration, in other supportive roles and those in certain specialist offices the table sets out the total numbers of Inland Revenue staff working within its network of local offices for the most recent year for which data are available —1992-93. The table shows how many were working in the areas of (a) capital gains tax, (b) schedule D tax, (c) corporation tax and (d) schedule E tax. Under (d) figures have been provided for schedule E tax rather than as PAYE as PAYE is simply a mechanism for collecting schedule E tax. Resource usage on national insurance contribution work is incidental to mainstream tax work and not separately recorded.

	Number
Capital gains tax	833
Schedule D	19,664
Corporation tax	3,236
Schedule E	27,065
Total	50,798

Fuel and Vehicle Taxes

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield in 1992-93 and what is the latest estimate of yield in 1993-94 from (a) petrol duty, (b) derv duty, (c) vehicle excise duty, (d) value added tax on petrol and DERV sales and (e) value added tax on vehicle sales.

Sir John Cope: Information on the outturn yield in 1992-93 and the projected yield in 1993-94 is provided in the table:

	£ billion 1992-93 Outturn	1993-94 Forecast
Petrol duty	8·2	9·3
DERV duty	3·0	3·4
Vehicle excise duty	3·2	3·7
VAT on petrol and derv	1·6	n/a
VAT on vehicle sales	2·9	n/a

No direct figures are available for the VAT yield on petrol and DERV and on vehicle sales. The table contains estimates of the outturn on total VAT yield that can be attributed to these items on the basis of national accounts data on expenditure. For petrol and DERV the estimate covers only consumers' expenditure—the yield from business expenditure is highly uncertain because the majority of businesses can reclaim the VAT paid as input tax. The relevant data are not available for 1993-94.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will require all persons who have benefited from exemption from inheritance tax on works of art to publish details of public access to such works of art in the previous year.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 28 January, Official Report, column 454. Records are not kept centrally of how many members of the public exercise their rights to view works of art which are conditionally exempt from inheritance tax.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish, at least annually in each county, a schedule of all works of art granted exemption from inheritance tax in a form which will enable citizens to exercise their rights of access.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 28 January 1994, Official Report, column 454. The register of conditionally exempt works of art, which can be consulted at the Victoria and Albert museum in London, the national library of Scotland in Edinburgh, the national museum of Wales in Cardiff and the Ulster museum in Belfast, can be used to pick out items by broad location, usually the county, in which each object is available for viewing. The register is updated quarterly. Copies of the register in computer-readable format may also be purchased from the capital taxes office of the Inland Revenue at £10 each.

Indonesia (Visit)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the purpose of his visit to Indonesia in December; and what benefits have accrued to the United Kingdom from his visit.

Mr. Nelson: The purpose of the visit was to enable the Chancellor to see at first hand the rapid developments in the Indonesian economy, and to raise the profile of United Kingdom banks and investment houses in top level Indonesian government and business circles. The benefits of the visit will arise over the longer term through the encouragement to Indonesia to look to United Kingdom financial expertise to assist its development programme.

Money Supply

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish in table form the change in the money supply for each year since 1976 and the change in the rate of inflation two years later;

(2) what was the change in the broad money supply for each year since 1972; what is his estimate of the proportion of that change directly attributable to (a) the banks, (b) the building societies and (c) the balance of payments;

(3) what figures he has for the supply of broad money in the United Kingdom and the rate of inflation for each year since 1979; and what assessment he has made of the degree of correlation between them;

(4) if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1976 the percentage change in the money supply in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) West Germany;

(5) what was the increase in the money supply, broadly defined, since May 1979; and how much of it was created by Government and how much by other agencies.

Mr. Nelson: Monetary policy is conducted so as to deliver low inflation. Monetary policy decisions are based on an assessment of a range of monetary and other indicators, including narrow and broad money. However, the Government do not rely on any single indicator.

The Treasury published a detailed assessment of broad money in the autumn 1991 edition of the "Treasury Bulletin". The Government have also set a monitoring range for M4. But experience indicates that the relationship with future inflation is not sufficiently close to justify establishing M4 as a formal target.

Figures for retail price inflation, narrow and broad money in the United Kingdom since 1972 can be found in the Central Statistical Office's Economic Trends. More detailed figures for the money supply—and its components and counterparts—can be found in the Bank of England's "Statistical Abstract" and in its "Quarterly Bulletin". West German money supply figures are available in the International Monetary Fund's "International Financial Statistics". Copies of all these publications are in the House Library. The relationship between the balance of payments and the overseas contribution to broad money growth is described in special articles in the Bank of England's "Quarterly Bulletin" December 1978 and December 1983 editions and in the Central Statistical Office's "Financial Statistics" explanatory handbook.

Cuba

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the next meeting of the Paris Club is scheduled to take place; whether the question of Cuba's public sector indebtedness will be on the agenda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The next meeting of the Paris Club is scheduled to take place during the week beginning 21 March 1994. Cuba is not on the agenda.

Cuba's debt position was last discussed by the Paris Club in January. Creditors agreed to consider an application for rescheduling for Cuba during the course of 1994, subject to there being a genuine balance of payments need.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the extent of Cuba's public sector indebtedness to the United Kingdom, including interest.

Mr. Nelson: Cuba's current outstanding debts with the United Kingdom total £69·82 million, all of which are owed to the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of employees in the United Kingdom have their income linked to Inland Revenue approved profit-related pay schemes.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that about 5 per cent. of employees in the United Kingdom were covered by registered profit-related pay schemes at the end of March 1993.

Insurance

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table setting out a breakdown of the total revenue he expects to raise from insurance premium tax in 1994-95 and 1995-96 by principal type of insurance risk, including motor insurance, home building insurance, home contents insurance and private medical insurance.

Sir John Cope: The following table shows the estimated breakdown of the expected revenue yield from insurance premium tax.

	1994-95 £ million	1995-96 £ million
Motor (business)	25	110
Motor (private)	35	150
Building (household)	20	85
Home contents	15	60
Medical and other	5	25
Other business	75	330

Charities (VAT)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost to the Treasury in 1994-95 of a scheme to allow registered charities to reclaim 25 per cent. of their value added tax liability; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The Charities Tax Reform Group has estimated that such a scheme would cost £80 million a year.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each year since 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: No public interest immunity certificates have been signed by Treasury Ministers since 1990.

Council Tenants (Domestic Fuel)

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether councils which provide unmetered supplies of gas and electricity to council tenants through district heating schemes will be able to claim back VAT incurred under section 20 of the Value Added Tax Act 1983; whether council tenants receiving unmetred supplies of gas and elecricity through district heating schemes will be effectively exempt from VAT on gas and electricity; if he will provide an estimate of the number of council tenants receiving unmetered supplies of gas and electricity through district heating schemes; and how many council tenants receive metered supplies of gas and electricity through district heating schemes.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 14 March 1994]: A local authority can recover the VAT incurred in pursuance of its statutory, non-business activities under section 20 of the Value Added Tax Act 1983. This includes the provision of council housing. Council tenants paying rents which include a flate rate element for heat supplied under an unmetred district heating scheme will, in VAT terms, be receiving only a single supply of heated accommodation and will be unaffected by the extension of VAT to domestic fuel. The number of council tenants receiving unmetred supplies is estimated to be less than half of one per cent. of total United Kingdom households.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electric Car Project (Coventry)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what requests he had for assistance to the City of Coventry Peugeot electric car project.

Mr. McLoughlin: None.

Engine Emissions

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department is giving to the reduction of emissions from engines.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department is currently supporting some early work on fuel cells which, if successful, could find application in the transport market in the long term. The Department is also considering with other Government Departments a possible programme of field trials for selected vans and buses to assess, among other things, their emissions performance when using a number of alternative road transport fuels.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what study he has undertaken between the relative emissions between diesel engines and petrol engines with catalytic converters in normal urban driving conditions.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Transport have jointly commissioned the energy technology support unit to quantify the implications of a further switch from petrol to diesel in the United Kingdom passenger car market in terms of energy use, emissions and refinery investment. The Departments are currently consulting industry representatives on technical aspects of this work. The completed study will be published in the next few months.

Engine Development

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what direct financial assistance his Department is providing for the development of (a) petrol engines, (b) diesel engines and (c) electric motors for vehicles; and what research it is sponsoring in each case.

Mr. McLoughlin: The only current research project is the Drives Club II. This involves DTI financial support of up to £790,102 to ERA Technology Ltd. for innovative, pre-competitive research in the field of electric variable speed drives under the research and technology initiative. Although the project is not specifically targeted at motor vehicles, the research is relevant to electric vehicles. Rover Group, Rolls-Royce Motor Cars Ltd. and Lucas Industries are involved in the research.

Excessive Interest Rates

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is his assessment of the potential effect of the Office of Fair Trading's recommendations on the Consumer Credit Act 1974 on lenders who charge extortionate rates of interest;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of people who have encountered financial difficulties through their dealings with lenders charging extortionate rates of interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have made no estimate of the number of people encountering financial difficulties as a consequence of such dealings. In his report "Unjust Credit Transactions", the Director General of Fair Trading said that his recommendations were intended to deter socially harmful lending more strongly and to improve the ability of borrowers who are its victims to gain redress.

Ice Cream

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he received the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of ice cream; and when he will publish it.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I received the report on 14 January. It will be published as soon as possible.

Watt Committee

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the secretariat of the Watt Committee on Energy in relation to the proposed publication of the final report of the working group on methane emissions as regards (a) the date of the publication, (b) the inclusion or exclusion of the annex submitted by the dissenting member in the published version and (c) representations concerning the publication of the dissenting member's annex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The Watt committee on energy has undertaken as a project commissioned by my Department, a review of United Kingdom methane emissions, in particular in support of the development of the United Kingdom's climate change programme. The working group, under the chairmanship of Professor Alan Williams of Leeds university's department of fuel and energy, brought together relevant experts from industry, academia and Government.

A number of the findings of the group have already been published as part of "Climate Change, The UK Programme."

Publication of the working group's full report is expected in May.

One of the members of the working group has raised concerns over some matters in the report. The chairman has advised my Department that these are under consideration by the group as a whole.

Beer (Short Measures)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints he has received about short measures in the sale of beer for each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 8 March 1994]: The numbers of letters about short measure beer or about not receiving a full liquid pint of beer for each year from 1989 are as follows:

1991	31
1992	13
1993	716
[1]1994	20

[1] 1 January to 8 March.

These figures include letters from trading standards departments reporting surveys of pubs selling draught beer. They do not include replies to consultations. The figures for 1993 include 601 letters from people who had inserted their name and address in a preprinted form.

Information for the years 1979 to 1988 could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the organisations that have complained to him about short measures in the sale of beer for each of the last five years.

Business Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what general conclusions have been reached by the study into business attitudes to the contractorisation of business statistics; and if he will place a copy of the results of the inquiry in the Library.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary on 14 January at column 308.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if it is his policy to instruct counsel to advise judges that it is a matter of judicial discretion as to whether documents protected by public interest immunity certificates should be disclosed; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The test to be applied by judges is a matter of general law. Judges are required to order disclosure in any case where, in the judgment of the court, the case for disclosure in the interests of justice outweighs the public interest considerations in favour of non-disclosure. Prosecuting counsel are expected to assist the judge as to all relevant law.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what proposals he has to restrict the discretion of judges to inspect documents in respect of which public interest immunity certificates have been issued and decide upon their disclosure on the basis of the interests of justice; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The extent of judges' discretion to inspect documents is a matter of law. I have no power to impose any restrictions, nor would I wish to do so.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each year since 1990.

The Attorney-General: I have signed none. My predecessor signed two certificates:

(i) In 1991 relating to the civil case of Dorrian v. Chief Constable of the RUC.

(ii) In 1992 relating to the criminal case of Latimer, Hegan, Bell and Allen which was before the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland.

ENVIRONMENT

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been taken out under the Widlife and Countryside Act 1981 in England in each year since 1982 for (a) carrying out a potentially damaging operation to a site of special scientific interest and (b) contravening a nature conservation order under section 29; how may of these were successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available in the form requested. However, since 1984 prosecutions for damage to sites of speical scientific interest under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 have been taken on 10 occasions. Prosecution is taken only in the last resort. Where a site has been damaged, the usual practice is to seek the co-operation of the landowner in restoring it.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many outstanding management agreements for English Nature for sites of special scientific interest protection there have been in 1993-94; what is the estimate of their cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: At 28 February 1994 there were 1,964 management agreements in force under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968. The estimated cost of these agreements in 1993-94 is £7·9 million. Further details will be published in due course in the third annual report of English Nature.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if this month's edition of "Countywide", published by East Sussex county council conforms with the guidelines issued by the Audit Commission in connection with local government reorganisation.

Mr. Baldry: I cannot comment on individual publications. We have, however, had in operation since 1988 a code of recommended practice on local authority publicity. The code make it clear that authorities should not use public funds to mount publicity campaigns to persuade the public to hold a particular view on a question of policy.

Local Government Review, Cleveland

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library all submissions relating to the local government review of Cleveland that he has received since the final report of the commission was published on 8 November.

Mr. Baldry: When we lay an implementation order for Cleveland we will place in the Library a summary of all representations received by the Secretary of State about the Commission's final recommendations. Individual representations will be made available if requested unless the writers intended their views to be treated in confidence.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library all submissions relating to the local government review of Cleveland that have been received by the commission since the publication of its final report on 8 November.

Mr. Baldry: All such representations have been forwarded to my Department, as the commission has no further role once its review is complete.

Council Tax Banding Appeals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against council tax banding in the London borough of Lewisham were lodged in each month since April 1993; how many were processed and concluded in each month; and what is the current backlog.

Mr. Baldry: The numbers of proposals to alter the valuation list which were received from the London borough of Lewisham area are as follows:

Month	Received	Settled
April 1993	712	0
May	545	0
June	356	1
July	281	20
August	276	25
September	210	215
October	167	60
November	546	50
December	19	37
January 1994	36	94
February	22	192
Total	3,170	694

There are therefore 2,476 cases outstanding.

Birch Coppice

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he sought legal advice on the validity of his decision to refuse planning permission to opencast at Birch Coppice announced on 2 August 1993 before the announcement.

Mr. Baldry: Once a decision has been taken by the Secretary of State, it is not his practice to comment on the merits of the decision or the process by which the decision was reached.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much (a) Warwickshire county council and (b) North Warwickshire borough council spent on the Birch Coppice public inquiry on 30 July to 23 August 1991.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on the basis of which mineral planning guidance he proposes to make the decision on opencasting at Birch Coppice in Warwickshire.

Mr. Baldry: The decision on the Birch Coppice case will be based on the version of mineral planning guidance notes which is in force at the time the decision is made.

Wandsworth Rent Assessment Panel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the members of the Wandsworth rent assessment panel and when they were appointed.

Sir George Young: Wandsworth falls within the area of the London rent assessment panel. I have placed in the Library a list showing the names of the 84 members of this panel, together with the year of first appointment.

Landfill Sites

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce a tax on waste disposal for those who use landfill sites.

Mr. Atkins: In order to inform our decision about whether to introduce a landfill levy, my Department commissioned a report on "Externalities from Landfill and Incineration" from the Centre for Social and Economic Research on the Global Environment, Warren Spring Laboratory and the Economics for the Environment Consultancy. We are currently considering comments on that report and will announce our conclusions in due course.

UN Environment Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much financial support was given to the United Nations environment programme in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom contributed £3 million to the United Nations Environment Programme's environment fund in 1989-90; in 1990-91, £3 million; in 1991-92, £4 million; in 1992-93, £4·5 million; and in 1993-94, £4·5 million. In 1993-94 this represented the third largest national contribution.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he has taken of recent resolutions of the Dail, relating to environmental risks posed by THORP; and what meetings or communications he has had with his Irish counterpart on THORP and Sellafield.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my answers given to him on Thursday 20 January, Official Report, column 827; Wednesday 2 February, Official Report, column 794; Friday 11 February 1994, Official Report, column 508; and to my answer given to the hon. Members for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) and for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on Monday 29 November, Official Report, columns 385-86.

I have noted the motion of the Dail of 2 March 1994.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) of 15 December, Official Report, column 1098, if all contracts to reprocess foreign spent fuel in THORP at Sellafield contain stipulations requiring the return of all radioactive wastes to countries of origin.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend was referring to BNFL's proposals for waste substitution in respect of those contracts with overseas customers which include options for the return of waste to the country of origin.

As was made clear in the "Statement of Government Policy on Reprocessing and Operation of the Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant at Sellafield", published in August last year, BNFL has such options in respect of all overseas spent fuel contracted for since 1976. The Government intend that these options, which are backed by formal exchanges of letters with the Governments of THORP customer countries, will be exercised. The Government have not yet reached a decision on BNFL's proposals for waste substitution.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the representations he has received from professional lobby organisations on behalf of local authorities concerning their standard spending assessment allocation.

Mr. Baldry: We receive numerous representations on standard spending assessments from the local authority associations, trades unions, chambers of commerce and other professional bodies. My right hon. Friend considered carefully all of the representations made to him on standard spending assessments before taking final decisions on the revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95.

Rents, Wandsworth

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the number of objections by local residents living in the London borough of Wandsworth to rents fixed by the Wandsworth rent assessment officers in each of the last five years; and how many of the objections were successful on appeal.

Sir George Young: Either a landlord or a tenant may appeal against a rent officer's determination, and the available statistics do not distinguish between these situations. The number of cases referred to the London rent assessment panel from Wandsworth over the last four years is shown in the table. Statistics for earlier years are not available. It should be borne in mind that the rent assessment committee fixes a rent at the time of its hearing, which can be some months later than the rent officer's original determination. Some of the differences between the two determinations may therefore reflect the passage of time.

Rent assessment committee decisions in appeal cases in Wandsworth

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Number of cases	304	631	559	339

Number of cases where rent was increased	238 (78 per cent.)	468 (74 per cent.)	458 (82 per cent.)	284 (84 per cent.)

Mean change to rent officer's rent	10 per cent.	7 per cent.	10 per cent.	10 per cent.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) of 7 March, Official Report, column 45, if he will set out the research and monitoring programmes on nuclear waste in Cumbria conducted by Government Departments, to which he makes reference.

Mr. Atkins: Details of the main Government-sponsored programmes are given in the following documents:

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution Annual Report (Department of the Environment, 1987-88 onwards)

Monitoring of Radioactivity in the UK Environment: an Annotated Bibliography of Current Programmes (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Directorate of Fisheries Research, Fisheries Research Data Report No. 27, 1992)

Terrestrial Radioactivity Monitoring Programme (TRAMP) Report for 1992: Radioactivity in Food and Agricultural Products in England and Wales (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, publication PB1468, 1993)

Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report No. 38, 1992)
Radiological Protection Research Annual Reports (AEA Technology, editions up to and including 1993)

Copies of these documents are available in the Library of the House. The National Radiological Protection Board which advises Government on radiological matters, has also undertaken a number of radiological studies of the Cumbria area.

Water Disconnections

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring he is conducting of the number of people who have had water supplies disconnected in London; how many households in Lewisham had their water disconnected in 1991-92 and 1992-93; and to what socio-economic categories those people belonged.

Mr. Atkins: None. Responsibility for the protection of customers' interests rests with the Director General of Water Services who publishes data on the total number of domestic disconnections twice a year, by water company area. Information on disconnections according to socio-economic categories is not available.

Local Government Review

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the value of MORI opinion polling in informing of the work and recommendations of the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Baldry: It is for the Local Government Commission itself to determine the value of the opinion polling which it has commissioned.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by county and non-metropolitan district in England such information as he has concerning the amount of money spent publicising the local authority's case on the current review of local government.

Mr. Baldry: That is a matter for authorities themselves; we do not collect information on these costs.

Children at Risk

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is used to decide the relative weight given to the different factors used in the estimate of children at risk in respect of the standard spending assessment.

Mr. Baldry: The estimate of children at risk used in the personal social services standard spending assessment for children is based on the children in need index. This index is based on four indicators, with the following weightings:

(i) the proportion of dependent children aged under 18 in lone parent families (weight of 3);

(ii) the proportion of household residents under 16 years of age living in rented accommodation (weight of 1);

(iii) the proportion of children who were dependent children of claimants receiving income support (weight of 1);

(iv) the number of homeless households with dependent children or a pregnant woman accepted as in priority need for permanent accommodation, relative to the number of residents under 18 years of age (weight of 1).

The selection of indicators and the weights applied were based on detailed statistical analysis and previous research findings. In particular, the personal social services research unit at the university of Kent has carried out detailed research on the factors involved.

Homelessness

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, columns 294-95, which London authorities raised the issue of homelessness as a indicator in the 1993 consultation; and when they raised it.

Mr. Baldry: The following London authorities made representations to my Department, on the dates shown, on the use of data on homelessness as an indicator in the calculation of standard spending assessments.

London borough of Barnet	27 May 1993
London borough of Brent	21 May 1993 23 September 1993

Material Exposure Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work is being carried out in the national material exposure programme on building decay.

Mr. Baldry: The national materials exposure programme was initiated in 1987 as a joint exercise involving the Building Research Establishment of the Department of the Environment, the Central Electricity Generating Board —now Power Gen-National Power— the Warren Spring Laboratory of the Department of Trade and Industry, and British Coal. The aim of the programme is to assess the effects of air pollution on a range of building materials, including metals and stone.

Results so far indicate that dry deposition of sulphur dioxide on metals and stone is the main cause of attack by pollution. The wet deposition of pollutants on to materials is of lesser consequence. The dissolution of calcareous stone by rainwater can be a significant factor, however, even in areas of low pollution.

Some of the sites used on the national materials exposure programme are also part of an international programme by the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide information on the dates on which the member states of the European Union submitted their reports to the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development.

Mr. Atkins: We understand that three member states have submitted their reports. The Netherlands submitted its report in January, and Belgium submitted its in February. The Secretary of State wrote to the chairman of the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development on 6 March enclosing the United Kingdom's report. Copies of the United Kingdom's report have been placed in the Library.

Public Bodies

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present role and remit of (a) the Countryside Commission and (b) English Nature.

Mr. Atkins: The role and remit of both the Countryside Commission and English Nature are fully detailed in the public consultation document recently issued as part of the current study into the possible bringing together of the two bodies. The document is available in the Library of the House. I have also arranged for the hon. Member to receive a copy.

Air Pollution

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what co-ordination of air pollution information is planned following the closure of Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 10 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced last year the closure of Warren Spring Laboratory and the merging of its business with the environmental business of the Atomic Energy Authority Technology to form the new National Environmental Technology Centre.

The co-ordination and provision of information to the public on air quality are undertaken by a number of organisations, including Warren Spring Laboratory. We expect the closure to have no significant effect on this activity.

Wind Turbines

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been either injured or killed as a result of the operation of wind turbines in the United Kingdom since 1979; and what information he has as to deaths resulting from the operation of wind farms or aerogenerators abroad.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

In the United Kingdom no deaths or serious injuries have occurred as a result of the operation of wind turbines.

In the Netherlands one death occurred in 1990 when a machine went out of control during a storm.

In Denmark two deaths occurred in 1991 in a single incident involving the servicing of a rotor.

In the United States of America three deaths and a number of injuries have been reported over the past 15 years of operation of the wind turbines.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

"Back to Basics"

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of his Department's staff are currently engaged on the Government's "back to basics" policy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 14 March at column 464.

Occupied Territories

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government on disarming the settler community in the occupied territories.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I wrote to the Israeli ambassador on 11 March drawing his attention to the European Foreign Ministers' statement of 7 March noting that Israel is responsible for the safety of all inhabitants in the occupied territories. I welcome moves by the Israeli Government to disarm extremist settlers and outlaw two extremist settler organisations. I recognise that some settlers face risks themselves.

European Union

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government expect to be on the agenda of the 1996 intergovernmental conference; and for what changes to the treaty on European union the Government will be pressing.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Maastricht treaty calls for the 1996 intergovernmental conference to look at possible treaty chapters on energy, civil protection and tourism, under article 3*(t)*; the powers of the European Parliament under article 189*b*.8; defence, under article J.4.6; the common foreign and security policy, under article J.10; the hierarchy of Community acts, under a declaration on the hierarchy of Community acts made at Maastricht; and the pillared structure of the treaty on European Union under article B. It is too early to say what changes to the treaty on European Union we will press for.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's latest position on the principle of subsidiarity within the European Community.

Mr. Goodlad: The principle of subsidiarity remains central to the Government's European policy. We are committed to ensuring that it is fully applied in all areas of Community business. We welcomed the Commission's report to the Brussels European Council in December, which must now be translated into appropriate action. Under the inter-institutional agreement of 25 October 1993, the Commission has undertaken to ensure that it will not table new proposals unless they can be justified on subsidiarity grounds.

Lomé Convention

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the implications of the latest general agreement on tariffs and trade for the future of the Lomé convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave him on 11 January at column 40.

Seeds

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of the Government, within European Union discussions about the general agreement on tariffs and trade, concerning the potential impact on farmers in India and other Commonwealth countries, of proposals made within the GATT agreement for the enforcement of the intellectual property rights over varieties of seeds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No such representations have been made. Traditional or well-known seeds cannot be patented because they are not new. The Uruguay round agreement on trade-related intellectual property rights will not alter this, and farmers in India and elsewhere can go on using such seeds without any restrictions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the impact of recent military activity on the delivery patterns for humanitarian aid of Operation Lifeline Sudan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our information is that the hostilities by the Government of Sudan, factions of the Sudan Peoples Liberation Army and non-aligned groups have continued to impede the delivery and distribution of relief supplies in parts of the south. Eastern and Western Equatoria and Upper Nile are most affected. The Government of Sudan have withheld flight permission to six relief centres in March: Boma, Kajokeji, Maridi, Mundri, Pariang, and Thiet. World Food Programme relief barges along the Nile network have been suspended and clearance for the relief train serving Wau has been withheld by the SPLA.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about crop failure and food shortage in Sudan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Food and Agricultural Organisation-World Food Programme crop assessment report of December 1993 estimated emergency food aid requirements for 1993-94 at 464,000 tonnes. A copy of the report has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Thailand

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the water supply project in Thailand which is under consideration for support under the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The main purpose of this project would be the improvement of the quality of drinking water supplies in 25 towns in Thailand.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in full the report of the review of the aid and trade provision implemented in June 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. We made the ATP review available as part of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's memorandum to the Foreign Affairs Committee to assist its inquiry into the Pergau hydro-electric project and the aid and trade provision.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Benefit Claims)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Prison Service notifies the Benefits Agency if a claimant is received into custody.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Governors of establishments are asked to complete a form about national insurance in respect of any prisoner admitted to custody for a period of 21 days or more. The form, which includes questions about the receipt of benefits immediately before arrest, is sent to the Contributions Agency. This procedure is being supplemented by sending the Benefits Agency, on request, lists of prisoners.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what incentives exist for remand prisoners to disclose the details of the benefits received.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A form about national insurance, which includes questions about the receipt of benefits, is designed for completion in respect of all prisoners—whether convicted or remand—admitted to custody for a period of 21 days or more. Prisoners—including those on remand and hoping to be granted bail—are encouraged to contact the DSS quickly to sort out their benefit affairs, not least so that families do not lose any benefits to which they may be entitled.

Mr. Bryan Ruppert

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he was requested to meet an all-party group of hon. Members to discuss the application of Bryan Ruppert for leave to remain in the United Kingdom on the basis of his long-term relationship with David Green; what was his response; and what were the reasons for his response.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I declined to meet an all-party group of hon. Members for the reasons set out in my letter of 17 February in reply to the hon. Member's letter of 1 February.

Colne Police

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time for the police in Colne, Lancashire to respond to an emergency call in 1979, 1983, 1987, 1992 and at the current date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No information on emergency response times in Lancashire is available prior to 1993-94. In the current financial year, up to February, on average 86 per cent. of 999 calls were answered within 10 seconds, although no specific figures are available for Colne. During the same period, the average time taken to arrive at the scene of an emergency incident in Colne was four minutes from receiving the call.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the work of the interdepartmental working group on domestic violence;

(2) which Departments are represented on the interdepartmental working group on domestic violence.

Mr. Maclean: The official interdepartmental group on domestic violence considers initiatives designed to ensure that the perpetrators of domestic violence are brought to justice; that victims and their children receive the necessary practical and emotional support; and that preventive strategies to help reduce violence are identified and promoted. Proposals currently being considered by the group include ways of improving inter-agency co-operation at a national and local level and or raising public awareness of domestic violence. These and other related issues will be considered soon by the ministerial group on domestic violence.

Both groups are serviced by the Home Office with representation from the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Law Officer's Department, the Crown Prosecution Service, the Departments of Employment, Environment, Health and Social Security, the Department for Education, the Welsh, Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices and the Treasury.

Immigration

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests he received from hon. Members in (a) 1993, (b) 1992, (c) 1991 and (d) 1990 to exercise ministerial discretion in deportation cases and in refusals to extend the length of visas and in port clearances; in how many in each year the decision of immigration officers was overturned; to how many in each year he replied personally; and to how many the immigration and nationality department replied.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not collected in the form requested. The total numbers of letters and telephone inquiries about immigration matters received from right hon. and hon. Members in the years in question were as follows:

	1990	1991	1992	1993
Correspondence
Ministerial replies	8,587	9,000	9,163	8,356
Official replies	677	1,383	1,899	1,928

[1] Not including calls to Ministers and their private offices.

How many of these approaches contained requests to exercise discretion in individual cases is not recorded separately. Nor is the number of cases in which decisions were changed following representations from hon. and right hon. Members.

EC Citizens (Voting Rights)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to publicise EC voting rights and registration requirements for European citizens of voting age resident in the United Kingdom; and what are the costs of these measures, and the timetable for them in the period before the European parliamentary elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) on 25 February, columns 508-9. All the measures noted in that reply have now been completed. In addition, we have also issued a press release to over 1,300 broadcast and written media, and offered a draft news article to over 100 regional newspapers. The costs of these measures have been met from within existing resources and are not separately identifiable.

Car Crime Prevention

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 735, what was the cost of (a) the February 1993 phase and (b) the September 1993 phase of the car crime prevention campaign.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The campaign did not run during February 1993. There was a burst of national television advertising during January 1993, which cost £500,000.

A further burst of national advertising and promotions ran from May to the middle of September 1993 on television, posters, bus-sides, local press and radio at a cost of £3,419,185.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total population in each prison in Humberside and Yorkshire is given in the tables for 31 January 1993 and 1994 and is sub-divided by type of custody.

Missing Persons

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the procedures for tracing missing persons.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government are providing an extra £90,000 a year for three years to improve the procedures for tracing missing persons and are investing in the technology that will allow the system to be computerised.

As the first step in this process, on 18 March 1994 a police national missing persons bureau will open at New Scotland Yard, under the control of the national identification bureau. The bureau will be a central clearing house for information on vulnerable missing persons for the use of all police forces in the United Kingdom and overseas agencies.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been reported missing in each of the past five years; and of those reported missing how many are traced within a period of not less than (a) six months, (b) two years and (c) five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Statistics on missing persons are not currently available centrally. With the establishment of the police national missing persons bureau on 18 March statistics will begin to be collected centrally for the first time.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a statutory requirement for people to inform the police if they have not heard from next of kin for over a year so that they can then be registered as missing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available, and in each of the two preceeding years, were (a) granted temporary admission or (b) detained while their cases were examined; and how many of each group subsequently (i) were granted asylum, (ii) were deported, (iii) left the United Kingdom of their own volition and (iv) absconded.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The specific information requested is not available.

Information on total asylum applications, decisions, asylum seekers detained for more than one month and removals and voluntary departures of asylum applicants, is, however, contained in tables 2.1, 3.1 to 3.3, 8.1 and 9.1 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin issue 19/93, "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1992", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing how many people seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom who had a decision made on their application last year were detained by the immigration service for (a) up to one month, (b) one to two months, (c) two to three months, (d) three to six months, (e) six to nine months, (f) nine to 12 months, (g) 12 to 15 months, (h) 15 to 18 months and (i) over 18 months before the decision was made.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the number of asylum seekers currently detained in prison service accommodation by (a) nationality, (b) gender and (c) place of detention.

Mr. Charles Wardle: During 1993 the average period for which a prisoner who was subject to deportation proceedings following a criminal conviction remained detained on completion of his or her sentence was about a week. In 463 out of 528 cases, there was no delay. In the others, the period included time taken to determine outstanding appeals, applications for judicial review, and applications for asylum.

Information for 1993 is not yet available. Offences decided at court to be murder are as at 27 August 1993; these figures are subject to revision as cases are dealt with by the police and the courts, or as further information becomes available.

Drugs

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the second survey on drug usage and drugs prevention, comparing urban and rural areas, is likely to be published.

Mr. Maclean: On 17 December 1993 we published a summary of the self-reported drug usage findings of the 1992 British crime survey, together with a report by researchers at the university of Sheffield, "Drug Usage and Drugs Prevention: the views and habits of the general public", which presented the results of a survey carried out in 1992 in four major cities on behalf of the drugs prevention initiative. The documents are in the Library. Building on the four-cities survey, the drugs prevention initiative has commissioned a further report from the university of Sheffield analysing the findings of a telephone survey conducted last year of the drugs usage and attitudes of the public in Greater Manchester and the surrounding rural area. The report is not yet completed: we hope to publish it in due course.

Car Thefts and Burglaries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by year for the last 10 years and this year to date the number of cars damaged, the level of house burglary, theft from cars and burglary in the (a) Humberside, (b) North Yorkshire, (c) South Yorkshire and (d) West Yorkshire police areas.

Mr. Maclean: Information for the last 10 years on offences of burglary and theft from cars is published annually in table 3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 3", copies of which are available in the Library. Figures for the latest available period for the 12 months to June 1993 are given in the table. Information on the number of cars damaged is not collected centrally.

Public Interest Immunity

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response the Government have made to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on criminal justice concerning public interest immunity.

Mr. Maclean: The Royal Commission made a number of recommendations about the disclosure of information held by the prosecution, including the proposal that criminal cases where the disclosure of sensitive material is an issue should be dealt with only by High Court or nominated circuit judges—recommendation 123. As stated in the interim Government response to the Royal Commission, placed in the Library of the House on 22 February, the Government are still considering these recommendations.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each year since 1990.

Mr. Howard: No central record is kept of public interest immunity certificates covering the years 1990 to 9 April 1992. Since that time, I and my predecessor have signed 10 certificates.

Prisoners Charter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish a prisoners charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Prison Service's commitments under the citizens charter were set out in "The Prison Service and Citizen's Charter", published in April 1993. This document was circulated very widely within the Prison Service and a copy has been placed in the Library. There is, however, no plan to publish a prisoners charter.

Director General of the Prison Service

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many days per year the chief executive of the Prison Service agency spends on his other business interests.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the terms of his appointment the Director General of the Prison Service is permitted to spend a maximum of one and a half days a month in normal working hours as a non-executive director of other organisations.

Mr. Zahid Parvaiz

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters sent to him on 7 December 1993, 1 January 1994 and 10 February 1994 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Zahid Parvaiz.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend wrote to the right hon. Member on 14 March.

Hypnosis

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to review the licensing guidelines for acts of hypnosis in Home Office circular 42/1989;

(2) what plans he has to bring stage hypnotists into a central register with a code of conduct;

(3) what plans he has to make it compulsory for stage hypnotists to carry public liability insurance.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have no present plans to do so.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information his Department has on the incidence of unlicensed stage hypnotism acts.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Between 1982 and 1992, the last year for which statistics are available, there was a total of five prosecutions for offences against the Hypnotism Act 1952, four of which resulted in convictions. Information about the number of prosecutions and convictions for the particular offence of giving an unauthorised public performance of stage hypnotism is not recorded separately.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring private clubs and students unions under the provisions of the Hypnotism Act 1952.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Any public peformance of stage hypnotism in such premises will already fall within the ambit of the Hypnotism Act 1952. We have no present plans to extend the application of that Act to private entertainments.

Parkhurst Prison

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Minister of State met Professor Bob Johnson, psychiatrist at Parkhurst prison; what action the Minister has taken as a result of that meeting; what analysis has been undertaken of the results obtained from work undertaken by Professor Johnson at Parkhurst prison; if Professor Johnson and the governor of Parkhurst prison have been asked to supply further information; what plans he has to visit Parkhurst prison to discuss Professor Johnson's work with staff and prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I first met Dr. Johnson during a visit to Parkhurst prison in October last year. He subsequently came to see me at the Home Office. As a result, I asked the Director General of the Prison Service to consider the need for research into the effectiveness of Dr. Johnson's work.

Dr. Johnson has since discussed his work and its evaluation with the director general and other Prison Service officials. It is intended that the research will be undertaken later this year.

I have no plans to visit the prison again in the near future.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide a list of the full dates of publication of the annual report of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for each year since it was established;

(2) when the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board annual report for 1992-93 will be published.

Mr. Maclean: The report for 1992-93 was published on 9 March. As indicated in my reply on 24 January to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), column 63, I understand the delay on this occasion was caused by a technical difficulty encountered by the board's auditors in the transfer of the board's investment accounts for children from one financial institution to another.

The dates of publication of the board's previous annual reports, to the extent that these can readily be ascertained within the time available, are as follows:

Drug Smuggling

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what his Department estimates to be the proportion of drugs smuggled into the United Kingdom which are seized by the police or Her Majesty's Customs and Excise;

(2) what hs been the country of origin of shipments of illegal drugs seized by the police and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise since 1988.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 8 March 1994]: This information is not available, but I will write to the hon. Member.

Age of Consent

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the age of consent for both men and women in each EC country.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The following table sets out what I understand to be the ages at which, provided there is mutual consent and no special provisions apply—see footnote—persons may legally engage in heterosexual and homosexual acts in each EC country.

	Male/female	Male/male	Female/female
Belgium	14	14	14

[1] A higher age may apply where the older person is in a position of authority, influence of trust.

[2] The German parliament is preparing to debate in March draft legislation which would unify the age of consent for each category at 16.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereals

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cereal farmers in the United Kingdom last year received cash benefits in excess of £40,000 from the common agricultural policy; and what proportion received these benefits without growing anything.

Mr. Jack: The number of cereal farmers receiving cash benefits in excess of £40,000 from the common agricultural policy last year cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost.

The introduction of the arable area payment scheme was partly to compensate for cuts in support prices for cereals. Farmers claiming under the main arable area payments scheme for 1992-93 were required to set aside 15 per cent. of the area of their claim; the remaining 85 per cent. had to consist of eligible area crops. Therefore they could not receive benefits without growing anything. Under the voluntary five-year-set-aside scheme, there was no requirement to continue to grow arable crops to qualify for set-aside payments. Last year around 10 farmers who had set aside all their eligible arable land received payments in excess of £40,000.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the extent to which the United Kingdom agricultural industry was disadvantaged by not applying for derogation on the moisture content in the 1993 cereal harvest.

Mr. Jack: No assessment on the lines suggested is possible.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made as to (a) the moisture content of the cereals that the majority of cereal purchasers will buy and (b) whether the majority of cereal purchasers will pay a premium for cereals with a moisture content of less than 15 per cent.

Mr. Jack: Moisture content requirements and any premium offered are a matter for the commercial judgment of the purchaser. We have no information which allows us to establish what proportion of cereals purchasers will pay a premium for cereals with a moisture content of less than 15 per cent.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will estimate the cost of the common agricultural policy to each household in the United Kingdom, breaking this figure down into (a) the running costs of the common agricultural policy and (b) the amount which the policy adds on to food prices.

Mr. Jack: The Exchequer cost of common agricultural policy expenditure in the United Kingdom in the current financial year is estimated at £2,727 million. In addition, the United Kingdom also contributes to the cost of the CAP in other member states. However, the United Kingdom contributes to the EC budget as a whole, and this is reduced by the Fontainebleau abatement which cannot be attributed to particular sectors of the EC budget.

It is not possible to provide a firm estimate of the consumer cost of the CAP to each household in the United Kingdom without making many assumptions.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will estimate the combined cost of the common agricultural policy and other national farm aids to the United Kingdom; and what this figure is broken down into (a) payments directly or indirectly received by farmers and (b) the cost to consumers in the form of higher food prices.

Mr. Jack: Total Exchequer expenditure on agricultural subsidies in the United Kingdom is estimated at £3,015 million for 1993-94, of which £2,727 million is in relation to the CAP. The remainder is either part-financed by the guidance section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund, or is wholly nationally funded. The United Kingdom also contributes to the EC budget, and thus to the cost of the CAP in other member states.

It is not possible to provide a firm estimate of the consumer cost of the CAP in the United Kingdom without making many assumptions. Most non-CAP schemes are structural in nature and would not have a direct impact on food prices.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of the common agricultural policy to each citizen in the European Union in each year since 1973.

Mr. Jack: It is not possible to provide a firm estimate of the cost of the CAP to each EU citizen since it includes consumer costs which cannot be calculated without making many assumptions.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the loss of trade with non-EC countries consequent on the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jack: No such assessment has been made. The question is purely hypothetical and if an assessment was possible it would require a large number of highly speculative assumptions.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the area of each individual environmentally sensitive area in England already designated or to be designated in 1994;

(2) what is the area of each individual environmentally sensitive area in England already designated or to be designated, estimated to be eligible for management agreements;

(3) what is the area of each individual environmentally sensitive area in England already under management agreements at the most recent date for which accurate figures are available;

(4) how many farmers are estimated to be eligible for participation in each individual environmentally sensitive area in England already designated or to be designated in 1994;

(5) how many farmers had entered into agreements in each individual environmentally sensitive area in England at the most recent date for which accurate figures are available;

(6) what was or is the total budget for management agreements for all environmentally sensitive areas in England for the years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Jack: Statistics relating to the 16 existing ESAs and the six to be designated this month are given in the tables.

Infant Formulae

Mr. Faber: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) of 6 December, Official Report, column 106, if she still plans to implement the provisions of the EC directive on infant formulae and follow-on formulae by 1 June.

Mr. Soames: The implementation date of 1 June 1994 has been commented on during the consultation on the United Kingdom draft regulations. A decision on the final form of the regulations, including the coming into force date, will be announced once the Government have carefully considered all the comments received.

Agri-environmental Measures

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the total United Kingdom agricultural budget is accounted for annually by agri-environmental measures.

Mr. Jack: Forecast United Kingdom expenditure on agri-environment payments is £32·3 million in 1993-94 which represents approximately 1 per cent. of forecast expenditure on all forms of support for agriculture in the United Kingdom in 1993-94. United Kingdom expenditure on agri-environmental payments is planned to rise to over £100 million in 1995-96.

EU Surplus Foodstuffs

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current rules governing the distribution of surplus EU foodstuffs.

Mr. Jack: The rules governing the operation of the EC surplus food scheme 1993-94 in the United Kingdom are set out in leaflets LP45 and LP46. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Kudus

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is done with the soil from the pens of kudu at London zoo;

(2) what action is being taken to prevent the transmission of spongiform encephalopathy from kudus at London zoo to other animals and to zoo staff on (a) entering and (b) leaving the kudu pen.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This Ministry currently has no powers to investigate spongiform encephalopathies in exotic ruminants at London Zoo. Precautions taken to prevent the transmission of spongiform encephalopathy in the zoo are a matter for the London zoo authorities.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will give details of the genetic relationships between the greater kudus at London zoo that have died of a spongiform encephalopathy; and if the genetic relationships between the greater kudus at London zoo indicate that any of the kudu are carriers of a spongiform encephalopathy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There have been a number of scientific papers published on different aspects of spongiform encephalopathy disease in greater kudu at London zoo. The most recent of these was in The Veterinary Record of 12 February 1994, while another on 9 October 1993 addressed the familial relationships between the confirmed cases and their dams.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many greater kudu from the London zoo herd have died of a spongiform encephalopathy; and how many of the greater kudu presently at London zoo are suspected to be suffering from a spongiform encephalopathy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I understand that six greater kudu have developed a spongiform encephalopathy; they are all dead.

Food (Expenditure)

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the net disposable income per person in pound sterling in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the USA, (c) the European Union, (d) Japan, (e) Germany and (f) France at the latest available date; and what was the expenditure on food (i) as a percentage of net disposable income and (ii) in pound sterling.

Mr. Jack: The following broadly comparable information is available for 1991.

	Household expenditure per person[1]	Expenditure on food per person	Expenditure on food as a percentage of household expenditure
	£	£	Percentage
United Kingdom	6,207	766	12

Orchard Replanting Grants

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the take-up in each of the last five years of orchard replanting grants; and if she will make a statement about the cessation of the scheme.

Mr. Jack: The amount of grant given in England for orchard replanting over the last five years is as follows:

Orchard replanting grants in England 1989 to 1993

Year	Expenditure (£)
1989	216,683
1990	234,094
1991	345,998
1992	570,530
1993	518,898
TOTAL	1,886,193

These grants were introduced essentially as pump-priming measures to improve the competitiveness of the United Kingdom orchard sector through the injection of capital for the replanting of apple and pear orchards. The objective of the scheme was that, after five years of assistance, the industry would be capable of self-sustaining development without further government intervention. A recent evaluation of the scheme carried out for us by the university of Leicester indicates that the grants were taken up by practically all of our target population. A report of the evaluation is available in the Library of the House.

Arable Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent delays have occurred in payment of arable aid to farmers in (a) south Yorkshire, (b) north Yorkshire, (c) west Yorkshire and (d) Humberside who are growers of commercial oilseed rape; from what office the cheques are being paid; and whether all payments due to be met by 31 December have been paid.

Mr. Jack: Over 98 per cent. of all payments due to growers of commercial oilseed rape were issued by 31 December 1993. In a very small number of cases payments could not be made for a number of reasons. Payments are authorised by the regional service centre at Northallerton and payable orders are issued from the Ministry's finance department at Guildford.

Food Stockpile

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the items and quantity of food in the national food stockpile.

Mr. Soames: The national food stockpile contains some 93,000 tonnes of food, made up of flour, biscuits, fat and sugar. Stocks are being run down to achieve liquidation which was announced in March last year.

Animal Transportation

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 16 February, Official Report, col. 847, by what authority the British Government are able to prosecute a British haulier for breaking welfare laws for animals being transported in another EC member state who are suspected of breaking (a) British laws and (b) EC laws; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 implements EC directive 91/628. In Great Britain this legislation is enforced by the local authorities, with support and advice from the Ministry. Allegations of infringements are investigated and where appropriate charges are brought before a magistrates court. If investigations reveal offences in another member state the facts are reported to the relevant authorities.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the country of origin and country of departure stated on documentation accompanying live sheep certified as fit to travel which arrived at an abattoir in Birmingham on 8 March and later found to have multiple caseous abcesses, oedema and emaciation, bruising and septicaemia following carcase inspection;

(2) what was the port of entry of a consignment of 300 live sheep which arrived at a Birmingham abattoir on 8 March; and what veterinary inspection they were subjected to and by whom on arrival in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: The consignment was imported from Poland into the EC through the border inspection post at Frankfurt-on-Oder in Germany. Following its arrival at a slaughterhouse in Birmingham, documentary, identity and physical inspections were carried out by the state veterinary service in conjunction with the official veterinary surgeon.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will now announce the constitution, including producer representation, of the proposed Milk Marketing Board residuary body, its budgetary provisions and proposed lifetime.

Mr. Jack: The constitution of the residuary Milk Marketing Board will depend upon the functions to be assigned to it, which must be specified in an approved reorganisation scheme. No decision can be taken on the constitution, therefore, until a reorganisation scheme has been approved. We have, nevertheless, announced our intention that producers should be strongly represented on the residuary board.

The assets and liabilities to be retained by the board after vesting day would likewise be specified in the approved reorganisation scheme. The funding provision for the residuary board would therefore be determined if and when the scheme was approved.

The lifetime of the residuary board would depend to some extent upon how quickly it could realise its assets and discharge its liabilities. Some potential liabilities could crystallise well after vesting day, however, and the residuary board is likely to have a lifetime of several years at least.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will consider the appointment of a market regulator for a period of two years to allow the orderly development of a free market for milk.

Mr. Jack: After the end of the milk marketing scheme the milk market will be subject to the normal rules on competition. The Agriculture Act 1993 does not provide for the appointment of a special regulator for the milk market.

Less-favoured Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) pursuant to her answer of 2 March, Official Report, columns 744-46, if she will publish the same information for less-favoured area specialist sheep farms;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 2 March, Official Report, columns 744-46, if she will provide a further breakdown of the information requested for sheep, cattle, cattle and sheep and in addition for specialist sheep farms and mixed cattle and sheep, giving unweighted estimates and distinguishing between the results from the annual farm census and the farm business survey.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 10 March 1994]: The further breakdown of the information requested is shown in the table. The numbers and proportions of farms for each type and size are taken from the June census and the estimates of net farm income are weighted averages from the farm business survey.

[1] Weighted averages. Unweighted averages are not appropriate as they do not accurately reflect the distribution of farms.

[2] Includes the following main types: SDA specialist sheep, SDA specialist beef, SDA mixed cattle and sheep, DA cattle and sheep, means sample too small to provide reliable results for individual size groups. In some cases size groups have been combined.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 1068, if the weighting of the sample information from the farm business survey analysis of less-favoured area livestock farms takes into account the economies of scale achieved in relation to farm size; what mechanism there is for measuring the economies of scale achieved by less-favoured area livestock farms in relation to farm size; and if she will publish the results according to standard farm classification in terms of the size group set out in her answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 744, for (i) specialist sheep farms and (ii) mixed cattle and sheep farms.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 10 March 1994]: The weighting system ensures that sample results from the farm business survey for farms of different size, type, region and tenure are combined in proportion to the number of farms recorded at the June agricultural census. An analysis of three performance ratios for small, medium and large farms for all LFA cattle and sheep farms represented in the farm business survey is published in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom".

There are insufficient farms in the sample to allow an analysis for each of the size groups set out in the previous reply; however, the table shows the results for small, medium and large farms.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Museums Review

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress has been made in his Department's review of museums, announced after the financial statement in 1993.

Mr. Sproat: No formal announcement has been made about a decision to review the Government's policy on museums. However, the Museums and Galleries Commission is considering ideas for a national policy, and I am taking a close interest in this initiative.

Millennium Commission

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to announce the names of the members of the Millennium Commission.

Mr. Brooke: The names of the members of the Millennium Commission were announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 17 February. I shall have the honour of being chairman of the commission. The other members are:

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade
Professor Heather Couper, FRAS
The Earl of Dalkeith
The hon. Robin V. Dixon, CBE
Sir John Hall
Mr. Simon Jenkins
Mr. Michael Montague CBE
Ms Patricia Scotland QC

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on how many occasions he has given the right hon. Member for Swansea, West holding answers on parliamentary questions relating to the occupied royal palaces; what has been the length of the delays before substantive answers were given; how many were answered on Fridays; and what were the reasons for the delays.

Mr. Sproat: Holding answers have been given on 12 occasions: three for two working days; five for three; two for four and one for seven working days. None was answered on a Friday. The delays occurred because the detailed information requested was such as to require significant staff time to assemble or identify.

In the one other case, where the holding answer was for a duration of 23 working days and which I answer today, the delay was caused by an oversight within my Department for which I apologise.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the total rent received from the grace and favour accommodation in the occupied royal palaces.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 10 February 1994]: Rent of £69,000 per annum is received for residential accommodation in the occupied royal palaces.

Regional Orchestras

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether the Arts Council has approached him since 3 March for additional funding for regional orchestras.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Cathedrals (Stone Decay)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what contact he has had with the Cathedrals fabric committee on first aid and remedial treatment for stone decay.

Mr. Brooke: None. English Heritage is carrying out work on first aid and remedial treatment for stone decay and is in regular contact with the Cathedrals Fabric Commission.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the extent of the decreases in concentrations of sulphur dioxide according to the information available to his Department, in relation to the rate of decay of historic buildings.

Mr. Brooke: The report of research on atmospheric pollution and stone decay for the joint working party between the Cathedrals Fabric Commission for England and the joint environmental programme of National Power plc and Power Gen plc, published last year, found that the annual average concentrations of sulphur dioxide had decreased very markedly over the last 30 years. However, there is likely to be decay in historic stone as a result of past depositions. The Building Research Establishment is maintaining a programme of research on the effects of sulphur dioxide and other pollutants on the decay of stone and other materials as part of the national materials exposure programme of the Department of the Environment and the international materials exposure programme of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Overseas Investors

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to encourage more potential overseas investors in the United Kingdom to include a visit to Northern Ireland in their fact-finding itinerary, prior to making a decision on where to site new industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland continues to work closely with the Invest in Britain Bureau of the Department of Trade and Industry to ensure that prospective inward investors visiting the United Kingdom have the opportunity to include a visit to Northern Ireland on their itinerary. Independently from the Department of Trade and Industry the Industrial Development Board organises a number of visits to Northern Ireland for potential investors from its target markets overseas through its network of overseas offices placed in these strategic regions.

Housing Executive

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the proportion of (a) Protestant and (b) Catholic staff, by seniority, in the district 6 office of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Tim Smith: Information about the religious make-up of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's work force as a whole is published annually in the Fair Employment Commission's report "A Profile of the Northern Ireland Workforce: Summary of the Monitoring Returns". The most recent report for 1992 is available in the Library.

I am advised by the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that it allocates staff resources to various parts of the organisation on the basis of its operational needs and personnel management policies. The executive does not release information about the religious composition of staff in individual offices.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the proportion of public authority housing in terms of (a) Protestant and (b) Catholic occupancy administered by the district 6 office of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Tim Smith: I am advised by the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that it does not hold statistical information on the religious composition of its tenants. The Housing Executive has consistently administered housing policies in a fair and open way on the basis of need, irrespective of religion.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the receipts under the European social fund in each financial year were earned by (a) the private sector, (b) non-central Government public sector bodies and (c) central Government.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money Northern Ireland has received in each financial year from EC sources apart from payments under the three structural funds.

Sir John Wheeler: The following amounts have been identified as being received in Northern Ireland from European Community sources other than the three structural funds since 1987-88 when meaningful figures first became available.

Financial year	Total £ million
1987-88	27·6
1988-89	27·8
1989-90	46·1
1990-91	48·1
1991-92	59·7
1992-93	56·3

Most of the receipts in this category are from the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. However, it should be noted that the bulk of guarantee section receipts are disbursed centrally by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and details of payments are not generally maintained at regional level. Other small payments are made by the European Commission direct to recipients which are not passed through the United Kingdom Government.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money received in each financial year up to 31 December 1993 from EC sources has been paid into the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund.

Sir John Wheeler: All money received from EC sources is paid into the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money Northern Ireland has received in each financial year up to 31 December 1993 from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund, guidance sector; how much of those receipts were paid to the private sector; how much of these receipts were paid to the public sector; how much of these receipts represented a cash addition to the Northern Ireland economy; and how much was used each year to offset Government expenditure on Northern Ireland.

[1] Includes reference to the approximate share in Northern Ireland on various structural schemes which were applied throughout the United Kingdom.
[2] To December 1993.

All these receipts present cash additions to the recipients and are subject to normal European Community audit arrangements. The overall level of receipts is taken into account in the Government's decision on public expenditure allocations and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the receipts which Northern Ireland has received from the European regional development fund since 1973 has been earned by (a) infrastructure projects undertaken by non-central Government bodies, (b) infrastructure projects undertaken by central Government and (c) industrial projects.

Sir John Wheeler: The following amounts have been received from the European regional development fund to 31 December 1993:

[2] Includes estimated receipts for the first nine months of the 1993-94 financial year.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been received by Northern Ireland under each of the European Community initiatives to date.

Sir John Wheeler: Under the 1989 to 1993 structural funds allocation, Northern Ireland has 10 approved Community initiatives. The amounts recived to date under each initiative are:

[1]This is the latest available information as claims for 1993, and some for 1992, have not yet been settled.

Receipts earned by the private sector and by non-central Government public sector bodies are paid to the claimant. The recipients represent cash additions to the recipients. Receipts earned by central Government are paid into the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund. All ESF receipts are subject to EC audit arrangements.

The overall level of receipts is taken into account in the Government's decisions on public expenditure allocations, and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much Northern Ireland's share of the United Kingdom's payments into the European Economic Community was from 1 January 1973 to 31 December 1993; how much Northern Ireland's share was of the receipts for the same period; and how much of those receipts was used to offset Government expenditure on Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: It is not possible to determine Northern Ireland's actual share of the United Kingdom's contribution to the European Community because payments are made on a national and not a regional basis. Similarly it is not possible to identify the full extent of receipts from the Community. However, a Northern Ireland attributed share of the contribution to the EC is calculated as an accounting mechanism necessary because of the operation of a separate Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund. This notional attributed share does not count as an item of expenditure within the Northern Ireland public expenditure programme and has therefore no bearing on the level of public expenditure in the Province.

Figures for the notional attribution of part of Northern Ireland's share of the United Kingdom's payments and for those areas where the receipts from the European Community's structural funds can be separately identified are as follows:

Financial year	Attributed share (part) £ million	Identified receipts[2] £ million
1973-74	1	0
1974-75	6	4
1975-76	8	4

1985-86	74	44
1986-87	62	77
1987-88	91	111
1988-89	85	96
1989-90	104	95

Financial year	Attributed share (part) £ million	Identified receipts[2] £ million
1990-91	107	110
1991-92	[1]100	132
1992-93	[1]134	158
Total	1,131	1,158

[1]Attributed share figures for the last two years are provisional estimates which will be revised when final details of tax revenues are determined.
[2]This comprises total identified EC structural funds receipts in Northern Ireland.

All receipts represent cash additions to the recipients and are subject to normal European Community audit arrangements.

The overall level of receipts is taken into account in the Government's decisions on public expenditure allocations and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

Prisoners (Christmas Leave)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by (a) Her Majesty's prison and (b) Her Majesty's remand prison the number of prisoners who applied for Christmas leave and the number of those who were granted Christmas leave; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: In December 1993 a total number of 446 convicted prisoners were released from the following prisons for Christmas home leave. Under the criteria for Christmas home leave, remand prisoners are not eligible to apply.

Prison	Applications	Applications granted
Belfast	33	32
Maze	116	111
Maghaberry	115	109
Magilligan	162	145
Young Offenders Centre	79	49

The Christmas home leave scheme and other release schemes play a key part in the Northern Ireland prison service's objectives by enabling prisoners to retain, and in some cases, re-establish family and community links in preparation for eventual release, and this has proved to be very successful. Of the 466 prisoners only two remain unlawfully at large. Both are medium-risk prisoners who had short periods left to serve.

Outdoor Education Centres

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names, location and county of each of the outdoor education centres in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

Dentistry

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount spent per child aged under 18 years on general dental services in the Province, whether or not registered with a general dental practitioner.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms Lynne) on 11 March 1994 at columns 436-37.

EDUCATION

Teachers (Trials)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) head teachers and (b) teachers in (i) 1992-93 and (ii) 1993-94 were committed to trial and found guilty; and what information he has concerning costs incurred.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected in the form requested. The Department receives about 150 reports a year from the police or employers about the conviction of teachers and other staff. Records are not held by year of conviction or by category of staff. We have no information about the cost of bringing teachers to trial.

Science

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the decision to withdraw combined science as a compulsory double subject at GCSE level in the national curriculum; what is his Department's assessment of the effect this will have on (a) the number of 16-year-olds studying science, (b) their total exposure to science subjects during their education and (c) the longer-term scientific literacy of British society.

Mr. Robin Squire: There has been no such decision. Double award science never has been compulsory at GCSE level. Sir Ron Dearing's final report recommends that the minimum statutory requirement for science at key stage 4—14 to 16-year-olds—should continue to be the single award science. Most 14 to 16-year-old pupils—around 85 per cent. when last sampled in 1993—do, however, take double award science, and we welcome that.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what initiatives his Department is taking to encourage more young people at school to study science and to choose science subjects in higher education.

Mr. Boswell: The national curriculum ensures that all pupils, from the age of five to 16, study science. Most pupils in their final year of compulsory schooling—about 85 per cent. when last sampled in 1993—take the double award in science. That ensures that they are qualified for further study. In addition to the traditional A-level route, new high-quality vocational qualifications post-16 will provide alternative routes for students to continue their science and technology studies. General national vocational qualifications in science started a pilot phase in September 1993.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish tables showing the percentage of teaching time devoted to (a) mathematics, (b) physics, (c) chemistry and (d) total for all science subjects for the average 14-year-old, 15-year-old and 16-year-old in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) France, (iii) Germany, (iv) Italy, (v) Japan and (vi) the United States of America at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the numbers and percentages of (a) schools and (b) children at (i) primary and (ii) secondary levels who are in grant-maintained establishments for each London borough, both inclusive and exclusive of those in the private sector.

Mr. Robin Squire: The tables show numbers and percentages of grant-maintained schools and pupils in such schools in the 33 London boroughs.

Footnotes to the tables

1. The figures for total schools and pupils are estimates derived from the Department for Education's January 1993 schools' census.
2. The figures for numbers of pupils are based on a head count of full-time and part-time pupils.

3. The numbers of grant-maintained schools are the totals operating in January 1994.
4. Table A—maintained primary sector—and Table B—maintained secondary sector—exclude figures for special and independent schools. The data on these schools held by the Department cannot be divided into "primary" and "secondary".
5. Table A and Table B include middle deemed primary and middle deemed secondary schools respectively.
6. Table B excludes sixth form colleges as these institutions are now part of the further education sector.
7. Table C includes maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools, and non-maintained special and independent schools.

Expelled Pupils

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils have been expelled from secondary schools for (a) drug abuse and (b) violence in each of the London boroughs in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Forth: Figures for each of the last 10 years are not available. Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England was collected by the Department over a two-year period, starting with summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system. In England, 81 pupils were excluded for drug-related offences and solvent abuse in year one and 179 in year two. The figures for physical aggression against others was 1,059 and 1,476 respectively. It is not possible to provide an area breakdown of the figure because of assurances given as to confidentiality.

Opted-out Schools (Advertisements)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of the advertisements relating to opting out of schools which have appeared in recent editions of the Radio Times.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total cost of the recent advertising campaign, which was designed to give governors, schools and parents access to the factual information published by the Department on grant-maintained status and which ran for five weeks, was around £200,000. The advertisements appeared in The Independent, The Guardian, the Sunday Times, The Mail on Sunday, The Observer, The Times Educational Supplement, as well as the Radio Times. It is not possible to disaggregate the cost of the advertisements that appeared in the Radio Times.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many respondents there have been to the advertisements regarding the opting out of schools which appeared in recent editions of the Radio Times.

Mr. Robin Squire: To date there have been almost 3,000 responses. The advertisements appeared in The Independent, The Guardian, the Sunday Times, The Mail on Sunday, The Observer, The Times Educational Supplement, as well as the Radio Times. Almost 500 of the responses were related to the advertisements in the Radio Times.

Higher Education

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table giving the number of applicants per place on offer in higher education establishments in all major subject areas in September 1993.

Mr. Boswell: Institutions decide within the resources available to them how many students in any given subject area to admit. The ratio of home applications to acceptances/admissions through the Universities Central Council on Admissions and the polytechnics central admissions systems respectively for entry in autumn 1993 is shown.

UCCA—Table 7 and Figure 5 from the UCCA 31st report 1992-93.
PCAS—PCAS statistical supplement 1992-93 due to be published by UCAS in June 1994.

Notes:
[1] For 1993 entry some 48 per cent. of all applicants to higher education through UCCA and PCAS applied to both schemes. Their applications to acceptances/admissions are included in both columns.
[2] The average number of applications per applicant is 4·2 and 3·5 for UCCA and PCAS respectively. The division of the ratios in each column by the average number of applications per applicant gives an approximate measure of the ratio of the numbers of applicants in each subject area to the numbers accepted or admitted.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many new discretionary awards were offered to students on educational courses; and what was the value of the awards in (a) England as a whole and (b) in each local education authority for the year 1992-93 and for the year 1993-94, broken down in each case for higher education level courses and further education level courses.

Mr. Boswell: Provisional figures for the academic year 1992-93, the latest available, indicate that 131,500 new discretionary awards were made by local education authorities in England. Information on the value of new discretionary awards is not collected centrally. Information on the numbers and value of discretionary awards made by individual local education authorities and on the level of the courses supported is not yet available.

Suspended Teachers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) head teachers and (b) teachers were suspended in (i) 1992-93 and (ii) 1993-94 following allegations made against them by children in schools; and if he will estimate the teaching hours lost through suspensions.

Mr. Forth: This information is not held centrally. The power to suspend teachers rests with head teachers and governing bodies of schools with delegated budgets under schemes for the local management of schools. Local education authorities have such power only in respect of school teachers employed elsewhere. Neither schools nor LEAs are required to inform the Department for Education when they suspend a teacher.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what power he has to shorten the period of office of governors of former local authority colleges of further education; what financial consequences he expects from failure by colleges to agree the new contract between the College Employers Forum and the Association of Teachers and Lecturers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend does not have the power to reduce the period of office of college governors except in exceptional circumstances. Under section 57 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, if the Secretary of State is satisfied that the affairs of any institution within the further education sector have been or are being mismanaged he may, on the recommendation of the Futher Education Funding Council, remove all or any of the members of the governing body and appoint new members in their places. Some £50 million of the Further Education Funding Council's grant will be held back in 1994-95. It will be released when college governing bodies certify that all contracts for new staff from 1 April 1994 provide adequate flexibility for the college's needs. It is for colleges to decide whether adoption of the contract recently agreed by CEF and ATL will allow them to do this.

Education Costs

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost to public funds of the education of an average pupil at an average grant-maintained and at an average local authority secondary school in 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average recurrent spending per pupil in 1992-93 was £2,450 for grant-maintained secondary schools and is estimated as being £2,182 for local authority maintained secondary schools, reflecting the greater responsibilities of the former.

Outdoor Education Centres

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the names, location and county of each of the outdoor education centres in England.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Disabled Student Allowance

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the take-up of the disabled student allowance; how it is administered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Mandatory awards are made by local education authorities to eligible students attending full-time first degree or comparable courses and courses of initial teacher training in the United Kingdom. The disabled students' allowances are assessed by local education authorities as part of the total maintenance requirement of mandatory award holders who are obliged, by reason of their disability, to incur additional expenditure in respect of their attendance at their courses. The total assessed value of the disabled students allowances before means-testing was £1,960,000 in 1991-92, the latest year for which figures are available. Information on the numbers of students receiving the disabled students' allowances is not available.

Independent Schools

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list the independent schools that have been struck off the register of independent schools in the past five years, giving the date of when they were struck off;

(2) if he will list the private and independent schools that have received a notice of complaint from his Department within the past five years with the date of issue of the notice and the number made for each school.

Mr. Forth: In the five years 1989-94 the registrar of independent schools has caused one school, namely Hilsea college, to be struck off the register in accordance with section 73 of the Education Act 1944.

During the same period, eight schools have been served with notices of complaint under section 71 of the Act. It is not the Government's policy to name schools served with a notice of complaint, unless this leads to a subsequent decision that the school should be struck off the register.

Also, during the same period, 233 schools have voluntarily removed their names from the register. In many cases, the closure of these schools followed official letters from the registrar addressing concerns about standards of accommodation, tuition and other matters which, but for the school's voluntary closure, might have led to a notice of complaint.

School Inspections

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the private and independent schools that were inspected by Her Majesty's inspectorate in the three years up to 1 September 1992, giving the date of the inspection.

Mr. Robin Squire: A list of the independent schools inspected by HMI between 1 September 1989 and 31 August 1992 showing the date of the inspection has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the private and independent schools that have been inspected by Her Majesty's inspector of schools or the Office for Standards in Education in the past five years, giving the date of inspection, where the inspection led to a published report.

Mr. Robin Squire: The new Government Department, the Office for Standards in Education, was created on 1 September 1992. All inspections carried out by Her Majesty's inspectorate or reports published since that date are a matter for Ofsted. I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member.

Those independent schools which received an Her Majesty's inspectorate inspection between 1 September 1989 and 31 August 1992 which led to published reports are as follows:

School name	Date of visit
Annie Lawson School	6 June 1990
Nanhurst School	30 October 1989
Oaktree House	11 June 1990
Rodney School	3 June 1991
Stonely Grange School	14 October 1991
The Small School at Red House	30 January 1992
Wells Cathedral School	1 December 1989

Dyslexia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many appeals from Doncaster education authority relating to dyslexia are being currently dealt with by his Department;

(2) how many appeals are currently with his Department in respect of children who have been statemented by Doncaster local education authority; how many statements have been assessed; and how many children have been made the subject of formal assessment by Doncaster education authority for each of the last 10 years;

(3) how many children have been (a) statemented and (b) formally assessed by Doncaster education authority in each year for the last 10 years, whose special need is as a result of diagnosis of dyslexia.

Mr. Forth: The Department is currently dealing with two appeals from parents of children with special educational needs in Doncaster. Neither of these children has dyslexia.

Information on the number of formal assessments and statements made by Doncaster LEA, for each year since 1984, is shown in the table. Information is not available centrally on the special need or needs for which a given statement was issued.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the expected numbers of pupils in each of the new sixth forms he announced on 16 February in Departmental press notice 42/94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total numbers of pupils in the sixth forms concerned are expected to be:

	Number
The Arnewood School, Hampshire	236
The Burgate School, Hampshire	120
Chellaston School, Derbyshire	200
The King John School, Essex	282
The Merrill Community School, Derbyshire	100
Ringwood School, Hampshire	120
Sheringham High School, Norfolk	120
New school for pupils aged 11 to 18 years in Halifax, Calderdale	120

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy for lone parents to be reassessed for family credit, if their circumstances change, one month or more after the previous assessment.

Mr. Burt: No. Family credit awards are fixed for 26 weeks and neither increases nor decreases in income during that period are taken into account. This works to the advantage of many beneficiaries.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone mothers on family credit were affected by the regulations introduced by his Department on 7 February to reduce the maintenance payments from their former partners; and how much money on average they will lose before their family credit is reassessed.

Mr. Burt: We estimate that there are fewer than 1,000 families whose family credit awards have been based on a Child Support Agency maintenance assessment figure and where this maintenance may be liable to reduction as a result of the recent child support changes. We estimate that the average loss per family will be under £100 in total. However, those families entitled to housing benefit and council tax benefit, or who become entitled following changes in maintenance, could recover up to 85 per cent. of their loss through an increase of those benefits.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will reimburse lone mothers at their next assessment for family credit for loss of income incurred as a result of the regulations introduced on 7 February to reduce the level of maintenance payments from their former partners;

(2) whether he will ensure that funds will be made available to reimburse lone parents on family credit for losses incurred in income as a result of DSS regulations introduced on 7 February to reduce the level of maintenance payments from their former partners.

Mr. Burt: Family credit awards are fixed for 26 weeks and neither increases or decreases in income during that period are taken into account. This works to the advantage of many beneficiaries. Any reduction in maintenance during the period of a family credit award will be taken into account in assessing the renewal award. However, those families entitled to housing benefit and council tax benefit, or who become entitled following changes in maintenance, could recover up to 85 per cent. of any loss through an increase of those benefits.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no new furniture for his private office in 1993-94.

Income Support (Further Education)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will amend regulations so as to ensure that parents on income support receiving allowances and benefits on account of their children in further education should continue to receive the allowances after the children turn 19 until the end of the young person's course of study;

(2) what study he has made of the effect of the withdrawal from parents on income support of benefits and allowances in respect of young people following courses in further education, when those young people reach the age of 19 years; and how many students then give up their courses as a result.

Mr. Burt: We believe that young people remaining at school after their 19th birthday to complete their studies, and their families, should turn for any necessary additional financial assistance to the sources of funding available through the educational maintenance system.

The information requested about the numbers involved is not available.

Industrial Injuries Compensation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount was recovered, under section 22 of the Social Security Act 1989, from the damages paid to victims of industrial injury for (a) the Doncaster area, (b) South Yorkshire as a whole by year for the last four years and (c) the current year to date.

Mr. Hague: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what schemes he has launched to compensate disabled people for the increased value added tax being introduced from 1 April.

Mr. Scott: Details of the extra help in respect of VAT on domestic fuel were given in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 30 November 1993 at columns 437-38.

Prisoners (Resettlement Grants)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what guidance is given to social fund officers regarding the priority given to resettlement grants to those leaving prison;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that resettlement grants to those leaving prison are given high priority in all areas of the country.

Mr. Scott: People leaving prison are among those specifically included in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's list of groups normally to be given priority for community care grants. Guidance on priority groups is contained in the social fund guide, in the Library. However, it is for each individual social fund officer, who acts independently, to decide the priority of an application after fully considering all the circumstances of the particular case.

Pensions

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost to date to public funds of the incentive for contracting out pensions.

Mr. Hague: The cost to the national insurance fund to date of the 2 per cent. incentive to newly contracted-out pensions is estimated at £3·6 billion.

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many rebate-only personal pensions have been sold since they were introduced; what is the estimated administrative expense involved in each case; what controls there are over administrative expenses in such cases; and what requirements as to warnings to purchasers comparing the risks and expense overheads compared with the state earnings-related pension scheme have been made by the DSS.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. Since 1988, the Contributions Agency has received 6,456,901 applications to contract out of SERPS by way of an appropriate personal pension—although the number of APP holders in any one year would be less than that. Inland Revenue data suggest that, in the financial year 1991-92, 2·1 million APP holders made payments in addition to the DSS contribution. Information about the administrative expenses connected with those pensions is not available. Rules on the marketing of personal pensions and other investment products are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the estimated total administrative expense of appropriate personal pensions and the equivalent anticipated administrative expenses for the contracted-out cohort through the national insurance fund.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available.

Benefits, London

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving (a) attendance allowance, (b) disability allowance, (c) family credit, (d) income support, (e) invalidity benefit and (f) sickness benefit in each of the London boroughs; and what were the respective figures for 1990.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for the Lewisham area the number of people who will be affected by the decision to reduce the entitlement to unemployment benefit from 12 months to six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ealing, Southall (Mr. Khabra) on 18 January at column 559.

VAT (Domestic Fuel)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much financial assistance will be made available by the Government to individual residents of sheltered housing units with communal facilities to help them meet increased costs resulting from the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel.

Mr. Burt: People in sheltered housing may be entitled to receive any of the wide range of social security benefits that are available, subject to individual circumstances.

Details of the extra help in respect of VAT on domestic fuel were given in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 30 November 1993 at columns 437-38.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many residents in sheltered housing units with communal facilities will be eligible for extra financial assistance from the Government to help meet increased costs resulting from the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel (a) in London and (b) in Lewisham; and how many such residents there are in total (i) in London and (ii) in Lewisham.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of existing recipients of invalidity benefit in the Doncaster area who will be disqualified under the new capacity test.

Mr. Scott: Numbers cannot be reliably estimated at this stage, but our current estimate is that around 200,000 of the people who will initially transfer to incapacity benefit from invalidity benefit may fail to satisfy the test within the first two years. The estimate cannot be broken down by district.

War Pensions

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, following consultation, he has reached a decision on the proposals to exclude death or disablement caused by a smoking or alcohol-related disease from the scope of the war pensions scheme.

Mr. Hague: Following consultation, we have decided to go ahead with the change but with a significant easement. We originally proposed to except from the exclusion any individual who suffered from a service-related mental disablement that was assessed at 80 per cent. or more and therefore caused him to smoke or drink.

We have decided to set the minimum level of mental disablement that will be considered at 50 per cent. Individual claims will still be subject to the further test that, whatever the assessed level of disablement, it must also cause the individual to smoke, or prevent him from giving up.

An amending order will be laid shortly.

Unemployed People (Voluntary Organisations)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the rules allowing the unemployed to work for voluntary organisations which engage in political activities.

Mr. Hague: The rules governing benefits for unemployment allow unemployed people to undertake voluntary work for voluntary bodies without losing benefit, provided that they remain available for and actively seeking work. The Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) Amendment Regulations 1993 define a voluntary body as "a body the activities of which are carried out otherwise than for the purpose of profit".

We have no plans to review these rules.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each year since 1990.

Mr. Hague: No Secretary of State for Social Security has signed a public interest immunity certificate since 1990.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were not on waiting lists for treatment but waiting to see a specialist in the NHS on 1 January, 1 April, 1 July and 1 October of each year since 1 January 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The following table gives the number of people waiting for a first out-patient attendance at Welsh hospitals for each available date since 31 March 1990. Such information is collected centrally for 31 March and 30 September only.

Number of people waiting for a first out-patient attendance

	Number
31 March 1990	83,151
30 September 1990	91,403
31 March 1991	86,653
30 September 1991	96,078
31 March 1992	97,109
30 September 1992	113,044
31 March 1993	118,853
30 September 1993	127,802

Work of Equal Value

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the past and current number of equal value cases in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Information is not available in the form requested. However, the table shows the numbers of all equal pay cases—which included equal value cases—dealt with by the Cardiff regional office of the industrial tribunals in the period April 1985 to 31 March 1993.

	Applications registered
1985-86	6
1986-87	7
1987-88	96
1988-89	12
1989-90	12
1990-91	36
1991-92	17
1992-93	60

The Cardiff region of the industrial tribunals currently serves the whole of Wales, together with parts of Shropshire and Herefordshire. Prior to January 1986, the Birmingham office included part of the current Cardiff region in its catchment area. In addition, prior to 1987, the former regional office at Liverpool served the north Wales area.

Minimum Wages Protection

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on minimum wages protection in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Statutory minimum wage fixing, in Wales or elsewhere, distorts the operation of the labour market and destroys jobs.

Tourism

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he had with the chairman of the Welsh tourist board over the choice of the Welsh celebrities chosen to feature on the posters and other advertising literature used to attract visitors to Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will be seeking public consultation on the options presented to him by the forestry review group.

Mr. Redwood: We are now considering the forestry review group's report; the form and timing of consultation will depend on the conclusions which we draw from it.

Outdoor Education Centres

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names, location and county of each of the outdoor education centres in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not available in the form requested.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has as to the number of surplus school places; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish for each education authority in Wales and for Wales as a whole, his Department's assessment of surplus school places in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools for the latest available year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department's estimate of the number of surplus school places as at January 1993 is as follows:

Local education authority	Primary	Secondary
Clwyd	7,676	2,110
Dyfed	8,827	1,147
Gwent	7,453	9,133
Gwynedd	4,435	4,355
Mid Glamorgan	13,027	5,952
Powys	3,173	1,581
South Glamorgan	8,491	6,363
West Glamorgan	11,318	6,321
WALES	64,400	36,962

Local authorities will recognise that removal of unwanted surplus school places would release significant resources for redeployment in other areas of the education service.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the efficiency scrutiny of the monitoring arrangements for sponsoring non-departmental public bodies in Wales carried out during 1993 by the Prime Minister's efficiency unit.

Mr. Redwood: When I have considered the report's recommendations and what action is needed, I will place a copy, together with my plans for implementing them, in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those non-departmental public bodies which have not had a financial management and policy review for more than five years.

Mr. Redwood: All executive NDPBs are subject to financial management and policy reviews at five-year intervals. The reviews due by or in the current financial year have been completed or are in the process of being carried out, with the exception of the Curriculum Council for Wales and the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting. The Curriculum Council for Wales is to be replaced from 1 April this year by the new Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales. The review of the Welsh national board has been postponed pending decisions on reviews on the analogous English, Scottish and Northern Irish boards.

NHS Accounting Officer

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who will be the accounting officer for the expenditure on the national health service in Wales subsequent to the planned merger between the national health service directorate in Wales and his Department's health policy division; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Mr. Peter Gregory.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the initial external financial limit for each of the existing and new national health service trusts in Wales for the year commencing April 1994; and if he will give the level of capital spending agreed for each trust for the same financial year.

Mr. Redwood: I shall be issuing details of the provisional 1994-95 external financing limits for each of the existing and new NHS trusts in Wales shortly.

Conflicts of Interest (Advice)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 596, if he will specify the date on which he will place in the Library the relevant advice and guidance on conflicts of interest.

Mr. Redwood: A copy of the relevant guidance was placed in the Library of the House on 14 March.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each year since 1990.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Industrial Business Allowances

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those projects in Wales that have received industrial business allowances.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not collected centrally. In any case, normal taxpayer confidentiality rules would rule out publication.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment

14. Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Lambeth have been unemployed for more than two years.

Miss Widdecombe: For the Lambeth local authority district, 5,907 on the unadjusted claimant count basis in January 1994.

27. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for unemployed men in the Liverpool travel-to-work area; and what proportion of these have never worked at all.

Miss Widdecombe: The figure was 55,846 on the unadjusted basis in January 1994. The claimant unemployment count does not record details of previous employment history.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of youth unemployment in the Doncaster area and the level 12 months ago.

Miss Widdecombe: In the Doncaster travel-to-work area unadjusted claimant unemployment among 18 to 24-year-olds has fallen by 15 per cent. in the past year, from 5,065 in January 1993 to 4,301 in January 1994.

24. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of people who are unemployed but who do not appear in his Department's claimant count of unemployed people for January.

Miss Widdecombe: The claimant measure and the International Labour Organisation recommended measure both show falling unemployment in the United Kingdom, at about 2·8 million.

Trade Unions

15. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from individual members of trade unions arguing that the trade union legislation since 1979 should be repealed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Hardly any.

Redundant Miners

16. Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the employment prospects of miners made redundant as the result of recent colliery closures.

Miss Widdecombe: British Coal Enterprise is very active in resettling ex-mineworkers, with success rates of 85 per cent. 12 months since pits have closed.

BCE is continuing its valuable and successful resettlement efforts for all ex-mineworkers.

North Norfolk Action

17. Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a progress report on North Norfolk Action.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Early indications are that North Norfolk Action is successfully achieving its aim of helping unemployed people back into work or into further training.

Astra Training Agency

18. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department will make a statement on the implications for training provision and the losses to the public purse of the privatisation and subsequent bankruptcy of the Astra training agency.

Miss Widdecombe: The receivership of Astra Training Services has had no implications for training provision, as training and enterprise councils have found alternative training for those affected. Astra was losing £30 million a year before privatisation. The Department is now a creditor of Astra for the statutory payments made by the redundancy payments service to those employees made redundant. It is therefore too early to say what the net cost will be.

Health and Safety

19. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which health and safety at work regulations he considers to be a burden on business.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is among the questions that I have put to the Health and Safety Commission and I am awaiting its advice.

Confederation of British Industry

20. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met representatives of the CBI to discuss problems in the labour market.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met Howard Davies on 18 February.

ABB Transportation Ltd.

21. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department has taken to ensure that the workers made redundant last year by ABB Transportation Ltd. in York received the unemployment benefits to which they are entitled.

Miss Widdecombe: So far as I am aware, there are no outstanding cases of clients not having received unemployment benefit to which they are entitled.

Maximum Working Week

22. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received in support of a statutory maximum working week of 35 hours.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. Statutory controls of this type serve only to destroy jobs and the prosperity of workers.

Labour Statistics

23. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of persons in full-time work on 1 January.

Miss Widdecombe: In September 1993 there were 17,427,000 full-time workers in Great Britain. December 1993 figures will be published tomorrow.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the proportions of full-time adult manual workers, full-time adult non-manual workers, and all full-time adult workers with earnings, including overtime, of less than (a) £100, (b) £120, (c) £140, (d) £160, (e) £180, (f) £200 and (g) £220 per week in the Doncaster area; and if he will provide separate figures for males and females.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available from the new earnings survey is for South Yorkshire and is as follows:

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average wage of (a) males and (b) females in part-time employment in the Doncaster area for each year since 1979, and this year to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available from the new earnings survey for part-time female employees in the county of South Yorkshire is shown in the following table. There were too few part-time male employees in the new earnings survey samples for reliable figures to be produced.

Average gross weekly earnings for part-time females in the county of South Yorkshire for the years 1979 to 1993 inclusive

Job Creation

25. Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of differences in levels of job creation in the USA since 1980 and job creation in the European Community over the same period, in both the private and public sectors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Between 1980 and 1991 the USA created over 17·5 million jobs, mostly in the private sector, while the EC created 6·5 million jobs, mostly in the public sector.

Mountain Search and Rescue

26. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the employment and training prospects of people engaged in mountain search and rescue-related activity.

Miss Widdecombe: I very much welcome the role volunteers play in a wide range of activities, including mountain rescue, and would encourage employers to recognise the value of volunteering not just to the community but to their own business.

Local Government Reform

28. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made in changes in patterns of employment as a result of local government reform.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for local authorities to decide their own staffing structures.

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount spent by his Department for training in England in each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn in 1993-94, and plans for 1994-95 in 1993-94 prices and cash terms.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the following table:

[3] Excludes programmes transferring to the single regeneration budget.

Since 1989-90, approaching 1 million young people have entered youth training. An estimated 133,000 have been helped in 1993-94; plans for 1994-95 are for 147,000 young people to enter the programme. YT funding for 1994-95 will be £692 million, which is £50 million more than the training and enterprise councils are forecast to spend this year. Further increases are planned for future years.

Training for work and its predecessors have helped almost 1·5 million unemployed people since 1989-90. Expenditure on TFW in England in 1994-95 will be £705 million: 115,000 places will be provided and 273,000 long-term unemployed people will be helped, compared with 240,000 in 1993-94.

In addition, this of course excludes money raised by TECs themselves, and the estimated £20 billion spent by employers on training each year.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount spent by his Department for training in Great Britain in each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn in 1993-94 and plans for 1994-95 in 1993-94 prices and cash terms.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table. The figures include training programme expenditure and administrative running costs.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on how many occasions he has knowingly offered incomplete information in an answer to a parliamentary question; and on what subjects.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister if he will instruct the relevant Department to place in the Library copies of all telexes made the subject of public interest immunity certificates in the case of Mr. Lorrain Osman; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. It would not be in the public interest to disclose the contents of classified documents concerning the international relations of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Prime Minister how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each year since 1990.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 3 March 1994, Official Report, column 803.

Constituency Visits

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister how much notice his Office gives to hon. Members prior to visits made to hon. Members' constituencies.

The Prime Minister: My Office contacts all hon. Members whose constituencies I visit as part of my regional tours. In the light of security arrangements which have to be made for these visits, advance notice for hon. Members may have to be restricted to 24 hours.

Council of Europe and Western European Union

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the information bulletin on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of Western European Union, which has been sent to him.

The Prime Minister: I have done so.

TRANSPORT

Driving School Agency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he is undertaking a review of the number, status or distribution of locations at which the Driving Standards Agency has a presence;

(2) how many whole-stime equivalents staff were in post in the Driving Standards Agency (a) at 1 April 1993 and (b) currently; if he will give their locations; and how many of these staff are affected by the market testing of booking and finance functions.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. S. J. Ford. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dr. S. J. Ford to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 14 March 1994:

DRIVING STANDARDS AGENCY

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to the questions you have raised about certain of DSA's operations.

PQ 1563/93/94

You asked about DSA staffing levels both at 1 April 1993 and currently, and how many of these staff would be affected by the market testing of booking and finance functions.

The Agency currently employs 1,829 full time equivalent staff, this compares with a total of 1,810 at 1 April 1993. These staff are located across GB at the Agency's headquarters in Nottingham, 10 regional offices and a network of nearly 500 test centres. The staff who are affected, directly or indirectly, by the market test are those identified in the attached schedule. (The figures quoted are for December 1993, but there has been no change since then.)

PQ 1577/93/94 224

You also asked whether a review of Driving Standards Agency locations is being undertaken. The Driving Standards Agency has a continuing responsibility to deliver its service in the most cost-effective way. In this context, I have a responsibility to keep the number, status and distribution of its operating locations under constant review.

I recently wrote to Members of Parliament with a constituency about the planned closure of 22 of DSA's 486 driving test centres. No further closures are planned, although the Agency must continue to review its network to meet business and demographic changes.

The principal activity of its ten regional offices is booking driving tests. This operation is currently the subject of a market testing exercise. It is not possible at this stage to anticipate the result of the market test, but a possible outcome could be a change in the number and location of the offices required to deliver the service.

Flights (Poland)

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the situation regarding the resumption of flights to and from Poland by Lot and British Airways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I am delighted that we have now settled the dispute in a way which is satisfactory to both sides. It has been agreed that direct services between the United Kingdom and Poland can resume from 13 March. The agreement creates enhanced opportunities for the airlines. It will, for instance, allow British Airways to phase in increased services over the next 12 months. This is good not only for the airlines: travellers will benefit, too, from greater choice.

North Circular Road

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing all correspondence between his Department and Barnet council regarding the proposed sale by the council to his Department of land adjacent to Coppetts wood in Finchley which is now proposed to be given as exchange land for

(a) widening the north circular road east of Falloden way and (b) widening the north circular at Regent's Park road and Great North way, showing (i) the date of each piece of correspondence, (ii) the sender and recipient and (iii) the nature of each piece of correspondence; whether it was his Department or the council which first suggested the sale of the land to his Department; on what date the sale was completed; and how much was paid to the council for the land.

Mr. Norris: The exchange land at Coppetts wood is the subject of compulsory purchase orders and exchange land certificates. The orders were made and the certificates were issued after consideration by an independent inspector at public inquiry.

I am placing the information requested in the Library. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 10 February 1994, at columns 466-69.

The suggestion that land adjacent to Coppetts wood be acquired for use as exchange land was made first by my Department in 1985.

Purchase of the land adjacent to Coppetts wood forms part of a larger transaction between the Department and Barnet council and completion has not taken place. The price to be paid is the subject of negotiations between the council and the district valuer who is acting for the Department.

Departmental Property

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what property, leased or owned for the purposes of his Department, is not currently occupied.

Mr. Norris: The position is as follows:

Her Majesty's Coastguard:
30 properties are vacant pending disposal as a result of estate rationalisation.

Driving Standards Agency:
One building is vacant and for sale.

Ports:
Two buildings are vacant and will be sold shortly.

Transport Research Laboratory:
Two buildings are vacant.

Highways Safety and Traffic Command: at 31 December 1993, 815 properties acquired for the national roads programme were vacant. Of these 204 were classified as lettable. The rest were awaiting demolition or in the process of being sold or otherwise not suitable for letting.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he is to have with Wandsworth borough council on the proposed increase in aircraft traffic flying into Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: On 10 November 1993 we issued a consultation paper on night flights at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports for summer 1994 and for winter 1994-95 to summer 1998. A written response has been received from Wandsworth borough council and will be taken into account, along with all other responses received, in reaching a decision on the restrictions to apply from winter 1994-95 onwards. No discussions have been requested by Wandsworth borough council.

Airport Runways

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the length of the runways at (a) Leeds Bradford and (b) Humberside airports.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is as follows:

Leeds Bradford airport
Runway 10/28—1,100 metres
Runway 14/32—2,250 metres

Humberside airport
Runway 03/21—2,230 metres
Runway 09/27—1,054 metres

Coaches

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the checks that are made to ensure that coaches of 18 or 19 tonnes registered in other European countries are not operating on United Kingdom roads.

Mr. Key: Only coaches with three axles may operate legally on British roads at weights over 17 tonnes. The Vehicle Inspectorate has powers to weigh and prohibit coaches operating on British roads in excess of the weights permitted by British regulations. During 1993 the Vehicle Inspectorate carried out a special weighing exercise targeting international traffic. A total of 482 vehicles were stopped, of these 80 were foreign. Of the 13 foreign vehicles prohibited, 10 were registered in EC states.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last year for which figures are available coaches of 18 or 19 tonnes registered in other European countries were found to be operating on United Kingdom roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My Department does not collate statistics on the number of foreign coaches of 18 or 19 tonnes operating on British roads. Only coaches with three axles may legally operate over 17 tonnes on British roads. Two-axle coaches are restricted to 17 tonnes.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department has given to licence applicants in the restricted HGV taxation class.

Mr. Key: Since September 1993 all operators of vehicles licensed in the restricted HGV taxation class have been given advice on relicensing procedures with their licence renewal reminders. Trade associations have also been kept informed of changes in procedures.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the prohibition orders issued and the dates they were issued in respect of licence No. OB19 5660 in Pudsey; if he will provide details of the latest licence issued; and what are the outstanding requirements the operator must comply with; and what further monitoring has been undertaken;

(2) who made representations against the issue of a licence to heavy goods vehicle operator licence No. OB19 5660 in Pudsey.

Mr. Key: Decisions on, and advice given about, individual operators' licences are the responsibility of the Traffic Commissioners. I have asked the Traffic Commissioner for the North Eastern traffic area to write to the hon. Member.

Aircraft Landing Charges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing, for a number of typical aircraft, the landing charges expressed per passenger, on the assumption that the aircraft are 80 per cent. full at peak times at (a) Leeds Bradford and (b) Humberside airports.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the tables.

All landing charges include aerodrome navigation services charges.

All passenger charges include security charges. Charges are shown for both domestic and international passengers.

The charges apply at any time of day throughout the year since there is no peak/off-peak charging structure at either airport.

There are no noise rebates available at either airport.

The following aircraft assumptions apply:

Late Night Trains (Midlands)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what subsidy would be required to continue to operate late night trains between Euston and Coventry, Birmingham and Wolverhampton as at present;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the proposed removal of late night trains between Euston and Coventry, Birmingham and Wolverhampton;

(3) what study he has undertaken into the impact of the withdrawal of late night trains between Euston and Coventry, Birmingham and Wolverhampton.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that BR intends to discontinue the late night 23.40 service between Euston and Coventry, Birmingham and Wolverhampton on the grounds of low patronage. The subsidy required to continue the service cannot be accurately assessed because British Rail does not generally establish the net costs of operating individual services. At present, the InterCity service to the west midlands is not in receipt of subsidy.

I have received one representation about the removal of the train.

The assessment of the impact of this change is a matter for BR.

Motorways

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned in England either (i) as new motorway or (ii) as existing motorway being widened.

Mr. Key: There are 1,724 miles of motorway in England.

At 31 January, there were 39 miles of new motorway under construction, and 27 miles of motorway widening.

The Department is currently reviewing all the schemes in preparation in the trunk road programme to determine their priority. The results of the review are expected to be announced shortly.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to encourage London local authorities to extend and develop bus lanes in the Greater London area.

Mr. Norris: The Department has allocated £6·25 million in 1994-95 to the London authorities for bus priority schemes in London which will include the provision of bus lanes where they are appropriate. This includes £2·5 million towards the design of a comprehensive London-wide bus priority network.

A56

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the capability and capacity of the A56 to handle any increased traffic flows following completion of the M65-M6 link.

Mr. Key: None. This is a matter for Lancashire county council as highway authority for the A56. However, our studies have shown that the M65-M6 link could increase traffic on the M65 east of Blackburn by some 11 per cent. We estimate, from the transpennine study, that between 9,000 and 11,000 vehicles per day will use the A56 east of Colne after the link road is opened.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what request he has received from British Nuclear Fuels plc to permit the transport of radioactive wastes from the Drigg site to Sellafield in transport containers that do not meet the International Atomic Energy Agency standards; and if he will make a statement on the conditions under which his Department is able to grant the equivalent of Crown immunity to the movement of radioactive cargoes.

Mr. Key: The Department has received an application for a special arrangement transport operation to move this material and is assessing it.

Special arrangement transport operations are permitted under the International Atomic Energy Agency regulations when all of the applicable requirements of the regulations cannot be met. Such arrangements may be approved by a competent authority provided that the overall level of safety in transport is at least equivalent to that which would be provided if all the applicable requirements had been complied with. It is not a question of Crown immunity or any equivalent.

Grants

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of all grants paid in the last 12 months (a) under the freight facilities grant scheme and (b) in respect of the new track areas grant scheme; how much is available for grant; and how applications are to be made.

Mr. Freeman: Payments totalling £2 million have been made to five companies during the last 12 months. In addition, two new grants have been awarded on which no claims have yet been submitted. No payments can be made under the track access grant scheme until it is introduced next month. The provisional budget for the next three years for both grants is £43 million. Guidance for applicants will be published shortly.

A11

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of the A11 Wymondham bypass.

Mr. Key: The tender figure for the A11 Besthope to Wymondham improvement contract is £16,506,805. The cost of the whole scheme including land etcetera VAT and ancillary works, is likely to be in the order of £26 million at today's prices.

M62 Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make a decision on the application by Mr. and Mrs. Whitehead for the advance purchase of 45 Glen avenue, Worsley, Salford, which is affected by the proposed M62 relief road.

Mr. Key: As soon as our consideration of the case is complete.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to reply to the letter dated 21 January from Mr. L. A. Brock, 12 Hawthorne drive, Worsley, Salford.

Mr. Key: A reply, on behalf of my right hon. Friend, was given on 28 February.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications he has received for the advance purchase of houses in Roe Green, Worsley, Salford, affected by the proposed M62 relief road.

Mr. Key: Fourteen applications from Roe Green, 18 applications from Worsley and 10 applications from Salford.

Motorway Tolls

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it will be a condition of the grant of a license to operate a private motorway that vehicles driven by disabled people and exempt from vehicle excise duty shall travel toll free.

Mr. Key [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The only current legislation under which any new motorway could be subject to tolls is the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, which inter alia provides that vehicles in this category are exempt from tolls. New powers would be needed to toll existing motorways; it would be for Parliament to consider whether any vehicles should be exempt from tolls.

Airports (Crime)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing, for each standard region, separately for men and women and as an overall total, the number of incidents of (a) violent crime and (b) sexual assault at United Kingdom airports for 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available centrally.

DEFENCE

Defence Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 383, if he will state the month and year that each memorandum of understanding was signed for as many years since 1979 as are available.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 9 February, Official Report, column 254.

River Class Minesweepers

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the River class minesweepers.

Mr. Hanley: The Royal Navy's River class vessels retain only a very limited mine countermeasures capability as a result of significant advances in mine technology. Consequently, over the last year, these vessels have been either re-roled or withdrawn from service as surplus to requirements. Under current plans, five River class vessels will remain in operational service with the Royal Navy, four as patrol craft and one as a training ship. The remaining seven vessels in the class will be sold.

Trident

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the costings for the Trident facility at Devonport; to what extent these are on target; and how they have altered since the refitting decision was made.

Mr. Aitken: The project to develop the Trident facility at Devonport is in its early stages but progressing satisfactorily as to time and cost. The costings have not altered since the decision was made to concentrate nuclear refitting at Devonport.

RAF Strike Command, High Wycombe

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the expenditure from public funds to refurbish the homes of the Commander-in-Chief and Deputy Commander-in-Chief of RAF Strike Command, High Wycombe.

Mr. Hanley: On 1 July 1994, the present Commander-in-Chief RAF Strike Command takes up the full-time appointment of Commander-in-Chief Allied Forces Northwest, a new NATO command replacing Allied Forces North. As is normal in these circumstances it is a United Kingdom responsibility to provide him with appropriate accommodation, and he will continue to occupy his present official residence. This change of appointment creates a need for a suitable residence for his successor, as Commander-in-Chief RAF Strike Command, the present deputy Commander-in-Chief RAF Strike Command, and a married quarter at RAF High Wycombe is being upgraded for this purpose. At the same time a United Kingdom-maintained residence in Oslo for the United Kingdom officer holding the post of Commander-in-Chief Allied Forces North will be given up. It is my Department's practice to provide service officers in senior command appointments with residences which allow them to offer official hospitality and entertainment commensurate with their status.

Military Reaction Force

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Military Reaction Force was established; what is its purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Military Reaction Force was a small military unit which, during the period 1971 to 1973, was responsible for carrying out essential surveillance tasks in Northern Ireland in those circumstances where soldiers in uniform and with Army vehicles would be too easily recognised.

RAF Hendon

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that when his Department disposes of its interest in the land at east camp RAF Hendon it will be a condition of the sale that any new owner will be required to dismantle and reconstruct the listed Grahame-White hangar on adjacent land set aside for the RAF museum by his Department in accordance with the written undertaking given to the hon. Member for Hendon, North by his Department on 8 September 1989.

Mr. Hanley: An MOD-commissioned survey by an architectural consultant, Mr. Graham Savage, ARIBA, concluded that it would not be practicable to dismantle and reassemble the Grahame-White hangar without destroying many of its original features. My Department is therefore proposing, subject to the necessary listed building consent being obtained, that it is taken down carefully to ensure as much as possible of the structure, including the Belfast roof trusses, is preserved and transferred to the RAF museum.

Copia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the loss of the fishing vessel Copia; what help he is able to provide with the recovery of the bodies of the crew; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence wrote on 14 March in response to the hon. Member's earlier representation about the loss of the fishing vessel Copia on 14 December 1993. Responsibility for investigating fatal accidents in Scotland rests with my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate, through his local representative, the procurator fiscal.

The investigation into the loss of the fishing vessel Copia is being conducted on the procurator fiscal's behalf by Strathclyde police and it is a matter for the procurator fiscal to decide upon what action is necessary to pursue his inquiries. The marine accident investigation branch of the Department of Transport is also investigating the incident. We are willing, in this, as in other cases, to provide assistance should we be asked to do so.

D-day

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Ministers are participating in the steering group responsible for co-ordinating the United Kingdom's involvement in D-day commemorations; how often the group plans to meet; and in what form the group's deliberations will be published.

Mr. Hanley: The ministerial steering group directing the Government's official 50th anniversary of D-day commemorative events is chaired by my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence. The deputy chairman is my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage. At present, the group meets every two weeks; as its deliberations are often informal they are not published.

Service Personnel (Location)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current location, by country and as between the United Kingdom, the United Nations and NATO Command, of all personnel in (a) the Army, (b) the Navy and (c) the Air Force.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The table lists the locations of British armed forces personnel as at 14 March 1994:

SCOTLAND

Protection Orders

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all applications for protection orders which have still to be considered by him under the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976; if he will list in each case, the applicant or applicants; and if he will place in the Library full details of each of the applications.

Sir Hector Monro: Two applications for protection orders under the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976 are under consideration. One, from the United Clyde Angling Protective Association, is in respect of the main stem of the River Clyde. The other, from the Reay forest estate, is in respect of lochs in part of north-west Sutherland.

I have arranged for copies of each of the applications, as advertised, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the protection orders which have been granted under the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976.

Sir Hector Monro: The following protection orders have been made under the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976:

The Rivers Tweed and Eye Protection Order 1980;
The Upper Spey and Associated Waters Protection Order 1982;
The River Luman Catchment Area Protection Order 1983;
The River Tummel Catchment Area Protection Order 1983;
The River Tay Catchment Area Protection Order 1986;
The West Strathclyde Protection Order 1988;
The River Earn Catchment Area Protection Order 1990;
The River Don Catchment Area (Part) Protection Order 1990;
The Loch Morar and River Morar Protection Order 1992;
The Loch Awe and Associated Waters Protection Order 1992.

Pupils (Unit Costs)

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the unit cost per pupil in each Scottish local education authority for 1992-93 for (a) nursery-primary and (b) secondary pupils.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the table. It excludes the cost of home-to-school transport, school meals, education authority central administration and loan charges.

2. Figures for Borders, Strathclyde, Shetland and Western Isles are provisional.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Lang: There are no agency chief executives in my Department who are currently paid more than £82,925 per annum, excluding performance bonuses.

Copia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations have been received by the Lord Advocate concerning the loss of the fishing vessel Copia; what consideration has been given to arrangements for recovery of the ship and its crew; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has been made aware of the circumstances of the sinking of the fishing vessel Copia so far as they are known. He is also aware of the difficulties surrounding the investigation because of bad weather and the depth of the water in which the vessel now lies.

Police divers, working at the limit of their operational capabilities, have managed to reach the wreck, but, regrettably, have been unable to locate the bodies of the crew, which may or may not be on board. The procurator fiscal is considering what further actions may be required in connection with his responsibilities and will report in early course to my noble and learned Friend.

Consultancies

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list for each of the past five years and as a total over the same period (a) all political consultants, (b) public relations companies, (c) management consultants, (d) survey organisations and (e) other outside bodies or individuals employed by the Scottish Office together with the date on which the contract was awarded, the length of the contract and the total amount spent by the Scottish Office on each contract; whether the contract was based on a fixed fee or fee plus man hours basis; what was the name of the individual or organisation to whom the contract was awarded; what are the services which were required by the Scottish office; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list all (a) political consultants, (b) public relations companies, (c) management consultants, (d) survey organisations and (e) other outside bodies or individuals currently employed by his Department, together with the date on which the contract was awarded, the length of the contract and the total amount spent by the Scottish Office on each contract, whether the contract was based on a fixed fee or a fee plus man hours basis; what was the name of the individual or organisation to whom the contract was awarded; what are the services which were required by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1994]: I notified the hon. Member that a reply would be made as soon as possible.

Detailed records of all work commissioned from external consultants are not available centrally. The information requested could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. Details of external consultants engaged by my Department in the current financial year to date have, however, been obtained. As this is a fairly lengthy list, I have arranged for it to be placed in the Library of the House.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 March 1994]: The information sought is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

School Leavers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a ranking by region of the percentage of female school leavers leaving school with five or more standard grades—levels 1 to 3.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1994]: The available information is set out in the following table. Many pupils who left from the 1991-92 session would have sat their fourth year examinations in 1991 or 1990, before the standard grade fully superseded ordinary grade. O-grade qualifications have therefore also been included in the analysis.

Female school leavers from the 1991-92 session with 5 or more O/S Grades (1-3)

	Number	As Percentage of all female leavers
Scotland	29,820	45·5
1 Shetland	123	65·9
2 Orkney	126	62·7
3 Borders	566	54·2
4 Dumfries and Galloway	881	52·1
5 Highland	1,245	51·0
6 Central	1,684	50·3
7 Tayside	2,394	49·5
8 Grampian	3,110	47·7
9 Western Isles	230	47·4
10 Fife	2,094	46·4
11 Lothian	4,149	44·5
12 Strathclyde	13,218	42·1

Sea Birds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) of 24 February, Official Report, column 441, regarding sea bird fatalities in Scotland, what is the proportion of fatalities of (a) adult birds and (b) juvenile birds.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 March 1994]: Exact figures are not available, but from post mortem samples it is estimated that of dead guillemots, the species most affected in the recent losses, 50 per cent. of birds found in the Shetlands are adults while in other areas the proportion is about 20 per cent.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the possible connection between overfishing and the death of sea birds in the recent incidents on the east coast of Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 March 1994]: There is at present no evidence that current levels of fishing are having an adverse effect on sea birds which feed on sea fish.

The sea birds which have been washed ashore in recent weeks feed on pelagic species such as sprat and sand-eels. There is no significant United Kingdom fishery for these species in the North sea. Scientific advice on the state of sand-eel and sprat stocks does not suggest that they are at low levels. Nevertheless, the European Union has established a working group consisting of marine ecologists and fisheries biologists to study the impact of fishing for sprat and sand-eels on the marine ecosystem. This follows pressure from the United Kingdom at last December's European Fisheries Council meeting.

It is clear that recent bad weather has been a major cause of sea bird mortality and that the prevailing easterly wind will have washed birds ashore that would otherwise have remained at sea.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the use of freephone and freepost facilities currently being operated by his Department; how much these facilities are costing; for what purposes these facilities are being used; and how much his Department has spent on operating freephone and freepost facilities in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Only one freephone service is operated by the Scottish Office—"Drugline Scotland", which opened in March 1992, providing a 24-hour telephone advice, information and referral service for people who have concerns about their own or someone else's drug use. In the year 1992-93, it cost £11,776. As part of the initiative to make the Scottish Office more accessible, people are now able to telephone the Scottish Office from over 20 offices throughout the country without charge. Cost figures are not yet available, as the service has been operating only since October 1993.

The Scottish Office uses both business reply and freepost response facilities, mainly to encourage people to provide information to Departments or to respond to Government initiatives or campaigns. The costs of the two services are not separately recorded but the total costs of items returned through the Department's central postal services for each year from 1983-84—the earliest year for which figures are available—are shown in the table. The cost of operating the services cannot be isolated from other mail handling costs.

Year	Expenditure on Business Reply/ Freepost £	Year	Expenditure on Business Reply/ Freepost £
1983-84	43,596	1988-89	55,953
1984-85	19,958	1989-90	66,551
1985-86	51,295	1990-91	44,092
1986-87	51,522	1991-92	65,222
1987-88	62,550	1992-93	26,762

Fishing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement setting out the view of Her Majesty's Government on enlargement of the European Union and its consequences for the Scottish inshore fishing fleet.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Fisheries have been an important element of the recent negotiations on enlargement of the European Union, particularly with Norway. The negotations with Norway will resume on 15 March, and the Government will continue to defend the interests of the United Kingdom fishing industry.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement setting out the view of Her Majesty's Government on access of the Spanish fleet to the North sea and its consequences for the Scottish inshore fishing fleet.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Conclusions have not yet been reached in the review of the fisheries aspects of the Spanish and Portuguese Acts of Accession. The Government have made clear their determination to protect British interests in the North sea fisheries, as in other fisheries around the United Kingdom coastline.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the name, size, type and home port of all Scottish inshore fishing vessels accepted to date as being eligible for decommissioning.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Final payments have still to be made to all the vessels for which conditional offers of decommissioning grant were made. A list of vessels receiving grant will be published in due course.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider introducing a policy of scrap and build for the Scottish inshore fleet.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The fundamental imbalance between fishing effort and available fishing resources must be resolved if we are to ensure a secure future for the fishing industry. Limited public resources will yield the best value for money if they are targeted at this objective.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what effect he expects the current market price of white fish pressure stocks landed from the North sea to have on the long-term future of the Scottish inshore fishing fleet.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Market prices fluctuate markedly during the winter months owing, among other reasons, to the impact of the weather on the level of fishing activity. In those circumstances, there seems to be little to suggest that current market prices will have any long-term effects on the fleet.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals his Department has to deregulate any aspects of the current legislative provisions as they apply to the catching sector of the Scottish inshore fishing fleet.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Fisheries departments are currently reviewing the licensing system for fisheries with the aim of simplifying and reducing the burden on the industry.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what discussions he has recently had with representatives of the European Union on the consequences of the suspension of the days at sea regulations; and what he now proposes as an alternative management regime for North sea white fish pressure stocks;

(2) what steps he is taking to protect white fish stocks in the North sea;

(3) if he will make a statement outlining the current proposals being considered by Her Majesty's Government on alternative methods of fishery management to be applied to the Scottish inshore fleet fishing in the North sea.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I met Commissioner Paleokrassas on 24 January to discuss conservation measures for fisheries in the light of the suspension of our days at sea scheme. Discussions are now being undertaken with the industry on these matters and a further statement will be made in due course.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the most recent estimates of the average age of the fishing vessels in the Scottish inshore fleet.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: There is no formal definition of vessels that comprise the Scottish inshore fleet. The table shows the average age of vessels based in Scotland in selected length bands. Age is not recorded for approximately one third of vessels of length 10 m or under.

Average age of vessels in the Scottish fishing fleet at 31 December 1993 for which the age is known

Registered length	Average age (years)
10 metres or under	16·22
10–	19·22
15–	23·39
20–	17·78
25 metres or over	15·82
All vessels	18·06

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations have been made by Scottish Ministers to the representations of the European Union on the equal enforcement of CFP regulations throughout member states; and what steps they are taking to secure sanctions against member states that fail to enforce the regulations.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Scottish Office Ministers regularly press the case within the Council of Ministers of the European Union for proper and effective enforcement of the common fisheries policy by all member states. The United Kingdom Government actively supported the new fisheries control regulation adopted by the Council in October 1993. This places specific obligations on member states to enforce common fisheries policy rules and increases the powers of the European Commission to monitor enforcement.

Officials of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department are playing a full part in discussions with the Commission and other member states on implementation of the control regulation. This regulation should bring about a substantial overall improvement in standards of enforcement.

Scottish Ambulance Service

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the expenditure on the Scottish ambulance service for each of the past five years; what is the budget for the current year and for the next financial year; what representations have been made to him by the ambulance service about the adequacy or otherwise of such expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The information on expenditure and budgets is as follows:

Year	£[1]
1988-89	37,195,685
1989-90	41,227,960
1990-91	47,665,465
1991-92	57,294,250
1992-93	66,042,161
1993-94	67,008,000
1994-95	70,141,000

[1]The figures include capital.

Like other public services, funding for the Common Services Agency, of which the Scottish ambulance service is a division, is considered as part of the public expenditure survey programme.

Funding for the Scottish ambulance service has been increased from £12,865,100 in 1979 to £70,141,000 in 1994—an increase of 82·75 per cent. in real terms.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the position of the Scottish ambulance service in relation to the citizens charter; what is the response time expected for an emergency call; and what arrangements are made for the monitoring of the speed of response to emergency calls.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The position of the Scottish ambulance service under the citizens charter is set out in its charter standard statement. The target response times given for an ambulance to respond to an emergency call vary according to population density and are:

	95 per cent. of calls within minutes
Dense population (more than 3 people per acre)	14
Medium population (between 0·5 and 3 people per acre)	18
Sparse population (less than 0·5 people per acre)	21

The time taken for each response is recorded and analysed by the Scottish ambulance service. This information is made available on a regular basis to the board of the Common Services Agency of which the Scottish ambulance service is a division.

Limb Defects

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what work the Medical Research Council is undertaking into clusters of babies born with limb defects; which local health authorities are undertaking investigations of their own; and when he expects the results of those inquiries.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The Medical Research Council is not currently undertaking any studies on clusters of babies born with limb defects. We are not aware of any current investigations into this subject by health boards in Scotland.

School Repairs

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the estimated amount of outstanding repairs required to schools in each local education authority area in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The overall management of their school building stock is a matter for individual education authorities. Detailed information of the kind requested is not held centrally.

Voter Registration

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds are being made available to electoral registration officers in each of the nine regions and three island authorities to publicise information to EU citizens from outwith the British Isles on voter registration; and in which of the official languages of the European Union versions will be provided.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 March 1994]: No additional funds are to be made available to electoral registration officers for this exercise. An information sheet printed in English has been issued to electoral registration officers, to political parties in Scotland, to consular offices of member states in Scotland, to the French, Danish and Italian Institutes and to citizens advice local offices.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will lay before Parliament an order to extend the period to allow late registration to vote by EU citizens from outwith the British Isles.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for publicising the procedure, and deadline of 29 March, to allow EU citizens from outwith the British Isles to register to vote; what Scottish newspapers will carry such advertisements; in how many languages; and how often.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend has no plans for newspaper advertising.

My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State has issued a statement encouraging European Union citizens resident in Scotland to register to vote at the European parliamentary elections in June 1994 and has emphasised the need for them to act quickly.

In addition, the Scottish Office Home and Health Department has sent information sheets in the English language to electoral registration officers, political parties in Scotland, consular offices of other member states in Scotland, citizens advice local offices and to specialist bodies such as the French, Danish and Italian Institutes. A notice has been placed in the Edinburgh Gazette.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) by what date he expects all applications for sheep annual premium in the current year to be paid out;

(2) how many applications for payment of sheep annual premium he has received in the current year from (a) Scotland, (b) Orkney and (c) Shetland; and what proportion in each category remained unpaid on 1 March.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The number of eligible applications received under the 1993 sheep annual premium scheme and the proportion of claims for which the advance payment had not been made at 10 March are set out in the table.

	Number	Proportion (per cent.)
Scotland	16,687	11·0
Orkney	482	12·0
Shetland	1,470	7·0

The applications for which advance payments have still to be made are those where claims for premium are not matched by quota. Payments will continue to be made over the coming weeks, but a number of claims cannot be paid until after allocations from the national reserve have been completed and the additional period for transferring and leasing quota has taken place in the early summer.

School Repairs

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the amount spent on the repair and maintenance of school buildings by local education authorities in Scotland in each financial year since 1989-90.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The available information is given in the table. The capital figures include expenditure on new building work as well as on repairs and maintenance, information on which is not recorded separately.

Current expenditure on repair and maintenance of school buildings and capital expenditure on school buildings

£ million at outturn prices

	Current	Capital
1989-90	76·630	66·884
1990-91	77·665	67·305
1991-92	86·485	72·572
1992-93	84·402	89·679

Note:

The figures for current expenditure have been compiled from local authority financial returns and for capital expenditure from capital payments returns submitted by local authorities to the Scottish Office.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Howard: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Protection of Animals Act 1911, as subsequently amended, governs the welfare of all captive and domestic animals. The following statutes provide additional safeguards in the individual sectors mentioned:

The Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925
The Zoo Licensing Act 1981
The Pet Animals Acts 1951 and 1983

Mr. Charles Wardle: The establishment of the West Midlands police was 6,509 on 1 April 1979 and 6,977 on 1 April 1993.

Italy (Extradition)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations Her Majesty's Government have received since 1980 from the Italian authorities to extradite suspected criminals and terrorists; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Since 1980, the Italian Government have requested the extradition of 67 people from the United Kingdom, for a wide range of offences.

Of these, 61 were accused of the offences for which their extradition was requested and six had been convicted. Sixteen of those sought have been returned to Italy, eight requests have been refused and 12 remain outstanding. Of the remainder, either the requests were subsequently withdrawn, or the person sought could not be traced here or was arrested in another country or was deported from this country. In one case, the person sought committed suicide before the conclusion of the proceedings.

Fines (Non-Payment)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were imprisoned for non-payment of fines and other debts who were legally represented at the hearing at which they were imprisoned in the most recent year for which records are available.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of people legally represented at specific types of hearings is not collected centrally.

Forensic Psychiatric Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations underlie the timing of the changeover of funding of the forensic psychiatric service in Doncaster to the Prison Service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 16 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, to reply to your recent Question about Prison Service funding of psychiatric services in Doncaster.

There are no plans to change the way in which the Forensic Psychiatric Service for prisoner patients is funded. Medical treatment of prisoners transferred to an outside hospital is funded by the District Health Authority in whose area the prisoner resided before imprisonment.

The three establishments in the Doncaster area, Lindholme, Moorland and Hatfield, contract in and pay for a visiting consultant psychiatrist. The Prison Service receives no funds from the District Health Authority in support of this service.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Howard: One, who was recruited directly from outside the civil service.

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, column 804.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Department has no computer-aided facilities management systems in place.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Sex Discrimination Tribunals

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make legal aid available to women appealing to industrial tribunals in cases of sexual discrimination.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no plans to extend full civil legal aid to any type of case before an industrial tribunal. However, legal advice and assistance under the green form scheme is available to those who are financially eligible.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

The current chief executive of HM Land Registry was appointed from within the registry after open competition. The current chief executive of the public Record Office was formerly director of special collections at the British Library.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Dividend Stripping

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, if the Commissioners have been involved in dividend stripping as distinct from any gilt stripping activities; and if he will list the gains from such activity in each of the last five years?

Mr. Alison: The amounts shown in my answers of 25 February and 4 March on the subject of gilt stripping represented the differences between interest on gilts calculated on the receipts basis and interest calculated on the accruals basis. No such alternative bases apply to dividends from equities: in common with other investment funds, the Church Commissioners account for dividends on the receipt basis and consider it impractical either to account for dividends on the accruals basis or to recalculate with hindsight what the dividends would have been if calculated on this basis.

While the Commissioners continue to manage their investments with the intention of generating a high level of income, this is achieved in relation to their equities portfolio through the selection of appropriate investments.

TREASURY

Ways and Means Advances

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the interest currently paid on ways and means advances; and for what reason he needs to pay any interest.

Mr. Dorrell: Most ways and means borrowing takes the form of surplus Exchequer moneys, which are used to minimise Government borrowing overnight. No interest is paid on such borrowing, though interest must be paid at market-related rates to attract ways and means advances from other sources.

Taxation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number and percentage of basic rate and higher rate taxpayers in (a) Lancashire, (b) Cambridgeshire and (c) the United Kingdom for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The table provides estimates for 1991-92, the latest available year for which information can be provided below the United Kingdom level.

Basic and higher rate taxpayers 1991-92

	Taxpayers liable at only basic rate		Taxpayers liable at higher rate
	000s	Per cent.	000s	Per cent.
Lancashire	601	95·2	30	4·8
Cambridgeshire	326	94·2	20	5·8
United Kingdom	24,800	93·9	1,620	6·1

Sub-Saharan Countries (Debt)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his Department's plans for assisting sub-Saharan countries in meeting debt repayments to multilateral agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The poorest countries benefit from the IMF's enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF), which provides highly concessional long-term assistance at an interest rate of only 0·5 per cent. in support of economic reform in the poorest countries. The United Kingdom has just announced that it will provide an extra £50 million to subsidise the interest rate of the ESAF successor facility, on top of our earlier contribution of up to £327 million; over time the United Kingdom will contribute about one ninth of the subsidy required by ESAF.

These countries also benefit from concessional credits from the World Bank's International Development Association, to which the United Kingdom contributed £620 million at the last replenishment, which concentrates on lending to the poorest countries. They also have help meeting interest repayments on non-concessional loans to the World Bank through the bank's fifth dimension facility.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Charges

21. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he is having with regard to future methods of paying for water.

Mr. Atkins: The basis of charging for water is a matter for the water companies. It is among the topics discussed at meetings with the Director General of Water Services and representatives of water companies.

Liverpool

22. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the standard spending assessment and revenue grant provision as proposed for the city of Liverpool in 1994-95; and if he will undertake a complete review of the city's financial situation in consultation with Liverpool city council.

Mr. Curry: Standard spending assessments are calculated on principles applicable to all authorities, taking account of each authority's social, demographic and physical characteristics. Liverpool's SSA of £419 million for 1994-95 is equivalent to £875 per head, the third highest of any metropolitan district. The total external support for Liverpool that year, which includes revenue support grant, SSA reduction grant and redistributed non-domestic rates, will be £363 million, equivalent to £758 per head, again the third highest.

We look each year at the calculation of standard spending assessments. In the forthcoming round we will certainly bear in mind the points made by the city of Liverpool and by the hon. Member. It is for the city council to manage within the resources available to it: it would not be appropriate for me to intervene in the way implied in the question.

Homelessness

23. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to stop further categories from jumping the homelessness housing queue.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady O. Maitland).

Municipal Housing Policy

24. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on developments in Government policy on municipal housing.

Sir George Young: The Government are extending the benefits of competition in the provision of local authority services to council housing management, consulting on new proposals for access to local authority and housing association tenancies and introducing important new rights for council tenants.

25. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average increase in council tax bills for 1994-95.

Mr. Curry: The average headline council tax based on those authorities for which my Department has actual or provisional information shows an increase of 2·4 per cent. over the 1993-94 average.

30. Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the top and bottom 10 council taxes so far declared.

Sir George Young: None.

Bathing Water Directive

28. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his current proposals for re-negotiating the EU Bathing Water directive.

Mr. Gummer: We will be examining the proposal for revision announced by the EC Commission on 16 February to assess how far it concentrates on essential quality and health parameters and is a framework directive meeting the requirements of subsidiarity, up-to-date science and cost-effectiveness.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

29. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his correspondence with his opposite number in the European Commission in relation to the Cardiff bay barrage and the EC Habitats Directive.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 1 March at column 643.

Local Government, Staffordshire

31. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the review of local government in Staffordshire.

Mr. Curry: The Local Government Commission began its review of Staffordshire in December 1993, and interested parties have until 8 April to submit their initial proposals to it. The commission will then publish draft recommendations for consultation. In preparing its final report, the commission will take account of any representations made about the draft recommendations. The commission proposes to submit its final report and recommendations for Staffordshire to my right hon. Friend in the autumn.

Single Regeneration Budget

32. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations were undertaken in the development of the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen).

33. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his plans for the application of CCT to housing management.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 26 November 1993 at columns 264-65; to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 15 December 1993 at columns 733-34; and to my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 21 January 1994 at columns 871-73.

Community Stadium, Southampton

34. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to determine the appeal on the planning application for a new community stadium at Stoneham, Southampton.

Mr. Baldry: The appeals will be decided as soon as possible.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

35. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest there are in England and Wales; and how many of these were created in the last 12 months.

Mr. Gummer: In England, at 3 March 1994 there were 3,775 SSSIs. This includes 45 sites notified or re-notified to date in the current financial year. I am advised by my hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, that there were 882 SSSIs, at 31 December 1993, in Wales. This includes 32 sites newly notified between 1 January and 31 December 1993.

Local Government Finance

36. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to secure an independent inquiry into the comparative fairness of the standard spending assessment from one region to another; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Standard spending assessments are calculated on a consistent basis using the same formulae for each authority. We carried out a thorough review of the SSA system for 1994-95 in partnership with the local authority associations.

The Audit Commission published a study of the SSA system in May 1993. The Environment Select Committee published its own report on SSAs earlier this year. The Government will publish their response to the Select Committee's recommendations later this month.

Water Quality

37. Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of the water companies to discuss water quality.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend meets regularly with representatives of the water companies to discuss a variety of issues including water quality.

38. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on United Kingdom compliance with EU water quality directives.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom is committed to fulfilling its obligations under these directives.

Fraud and Corruption

39. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about fraud and corruption in local government.

Mr. Curry: It is the responsibility of local authorities themselves, both members and officers, to take measures to prevent and detect fraud and corruption in their affairs. The Audit Commission's recent report on probity in the public sector concluded that "probity in local government is generally in good order".

There is no room for complacency, however; fraud and corruption are always to be condemned, wherever they occur.

City Pride

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken in relation to City Pride.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave earlier to the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme).

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions have been taken in relation to City Pride.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions have been taken in relation to City Pride; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The partners in the three City Pride cities, Birmingham, London and Manchester, have all formed partnerships to take forward the preparation of prospectuses for their areas, and are making good progress.

Rural Housing

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new houses have been completed with Housing Corporation funding in rural areas in each of the last three years.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation's capital programme provided 98 new homes in rural areas—defined as settlements with a population of 3,000 or less —in 1990-91, 491 in 1991-92, 1,665 in 1992-93 and 1,701 this financial year up to the end of February 1994. These figures exclude completions of new homes which were approved before 1989-90, since the Housing Corporation did not collect such information on rural schemes approved prior to this date.

Waste Water

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportions of waste water in each member state of the European Union are treated.

Mr. Atkins: The percentage of population in each member state served by sewage treatment works is given in the table:

Member State	Percentage of population served by sewage works
Belgium[1]	33
Denmark	100
France	52
Germany (West)	92
Greece	76
Ireland	44
Italy	60
Luxembourg	92
Netherlands	90
Portugal	45
Spain	47
United Kingdom	88

Water Analyses

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which member states of the European Union there are available for public inspection analyses of water and waste water.

Mr. Atkins: In England and Wales analyses of water and waste water carried out by water companies, local authorities, and the National Rivers Authority, are made available for public inspection. The drinking water inspectorate publishes annually the results of the analyses of drinking water. So far as we are aware, comprehensive information is not available on the position in other member states.

Domestic Consumers

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial means he will employ to encourage efficiency and conservation for domestic consumers.

Mr. Atkins: My Department uses a number of financial means to encourage domestic energy efficiency.

The home energy efficiency scheme provides grants for basic energy efficiency measures for vulnerable members of society. On 1 April funds for the scheme are to be almost doubled and the scheme extended to elderly and disabled people. Local authorities run substantial council housing repair and improvement programmes which include energy efficiency measures. The new single regeneration budget will incorporate energy efficiency work currently covered in the estate action programme. VAT on domestic fuel and power will also contribute to improved efficiency and conservation.

Acid Batteries

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment United Kingdom authorities are able to make of the health effects on battery recycle workers in industrialising third world nations which import acid batteries from the United Kingdom for recycling.

Mr. Atkins: There is no requirement under present legislation for United Kingdom authorities to make assessment of the type suggested. When the EC Waste Shipments Regulation applies in May, the export of waste for recovery will be prohibited if a competent authority of dispatch has reason to believe that a shipment will not be managed in accordance with environmentally sound methods in the country of destination. Guidelines for environmentally sound recovery operations are being prepared by a working group under the Basel convention.

Sustainable Development Strategy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation he has made of the relevance to the United Kingdom sustainable development strategy of the report to the European Parliament's Committee on the Environment, Public Health and Consumer Protection on the monitoring by the EC of the implementation of Agenda 21 of the UN Conference on Environment and Development by Mrs. Guadalupe Ruiz-Giminenez Aguilar, MEP.

Mr. Atkins: None yet. The report by the Committee on the Environment was tabled in the European Parliament on 3 January and so far as I am aware remains subject to discussion.

Water Disconnections

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of domestic water disconnections in each London borough for 1993.

Mr. Atkins: Data on disconnections by local authority district are not available centrally.

Local Records

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to abolish the county records offices.

Mr. Baldry: As my right hon. Friend considers the recommendations of the Local Government Commission in each of the shire counties, he will be looking to ensure that they enable adequate provision to be made for all existing local government functions, including records and archives.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy on the level of public expenditure on (a) the collection and maintenance and (b) the availability locally for public inspection of local records.

Mr. Baldry: These are matters for local authorities to decide.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he proposes to allow the Energy Savings Trust to offer a lower rate of support to eligible owner-occupiers than to social housing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to exclude low-rise flats from the Energy Saving Trust grant schemes; and if he will consider including (a) low-rise owner-occupier flats and (b) low rise social housing flats that are an integral part of housing layouts in energy savings trust schemes.

Mr. Atkins: The Energy Saving Trust is an independent organisation. The terms of its schemes are for the trust to establish in consultation with the bodies providing the funds.

Government Offices

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, columns 38-39, if he will provide the total cost of each listed refurbishment where such figures are available, an analysis of the nature and cost of each refurbishment where it is available on an economic basis and the total cost of all refurbishments in (a) the SW1 postal district of London and (b) the remainder of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: As advised in my answer of 7 March, Official Report, columns 38-39, the detailed information requested on the nature and cost of the 77 refurbishment schemes listed cannot be provided at an economic cost.

Hazardous Wastes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the reason for the proposed increase in expenditure between 1993-94 and 1994-95, on hazardous wastes, as set out in figure 10 of his annual report and expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm. 2507.

Mr. Atkins: The expenditure represents contributions to trust funds established under the UNEP Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous waste and their disposal. Until this year, the United Kingdom made voluntary contributions of United States $50,000 to support the work of the convention. From 1994, the United Kingdom is required to make a mandatory contribution as a party to the convention of United States $119,930. The United Kingdom also makes additional voluntary contributions to the Basel technical trust fund which assists developing and other countries in need of assistance to implement the convention.

Since the figures in Cm. 2507 were finalised, it has been agreed that the United Kingdom should pay its mandatory contribution at the start of the relevant calendar year. As a result the first mandatory payment will now fall in 1993-94 and total payments in 1993-94 will be £131,807.

Lancashire (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority in Lancashire the capital receipts held by them resulting from the sale of land, property and other assets.

Mr. Baldry: The available information is as follows:

	Usable capital receipts at 1 April 1993 £'000
Lancashire county council	3,427
Blackburn	0
Blackpool	6,561
Burnley	1,184

Ribble Valley	1,097
Rossendale	12
South Ribble	243
West Lancashire	1,434
Wyre	371

Tenant Participation

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of section 16 and section 87 funding for tenant participation initiatives.

Sir George Young: Support in the form of grants is available both directly and indirectly to tenants to encourage and develop greater tenant participation in the management of local authority and housing association housing. The powers to pay grant derive from section 429A of the Housing Act 1985—as inserted by section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986—and from section 87 of the Housing Associations Act 1985 respectively.

With the introduction of the right to manage on 1 April 1994, section 16 grant will be focused increasingly on the development of tenant management organisations. Grant provision of £6·4 million is available during 1994-95.

Housing association tenant participation is sponsored by the Housing Corporation. In 1994-95 the corporation expects to spend £2·4 million in providing grants under section 87. The emphasis of this programme is on the establishment of tenants groups and for aid to housing associations wishing to involve tenants in the management of their homes.

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the numbers, funding and staffing of non-departmental public bodies is published annually in "Public Bodies," copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many self-financing regulatory authorities his Department has set up since 1979; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment; and what it was last year and two years ago.

Mr. Baldry: Only one relevant authority has been set up since 1979. The Office of Water Services—OFWAT—was established in 1989 by the Water Act.

The figures for its running costs over the last three financial years are:

	£ million
1991-92	5·7
1992-93	6·1
1993-94	[1]8·2

[1] Estimate.

Staff figures for those years are respectively—

	Number
1991-92	116
1992-93	131
1993-94	153

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Baldry: The number of statutory instruments laid before Parliament by my Department in each of the last three years was as follows:

	Number
1991	149
1992	181
1993	174

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many environmental health officers there were in each of the last five years; how many support staff they have; what they cost in each year; what mileage allowances were offered to environmental health officers; and whether they get cars supplied.

Mr. Baldry: The information is not available centrally.

Integrated Government Office for London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state (a) the location of the new integrated Government office for London and when it will commence operations, (b) the numbers of civil servants attached to, or related to, specific Government Departments to be posted to it, (c) the number of any other employees located there, (d) the date when he expects to announce the name of the services' regional controller and (e) the date that post will be taken up.

Mr. Baldry: The principal regional offices of the Departments of Employment, Environment, Trade and Industry and Transport responsible for London are currently located at 236 Grays Inn road, Millbank tower, Bridge place and 2 Marsham street respectively. In the short term, the functions of the new office will continue to be performed from those offices. The Government Office for London will open for business in April, staffed by some 320 civil servants from existing regional offices and related divisions. We hope to announce the appointment of the regional director in the near future and the successful candidate should take up their post shortly thereafter.

Shopping Centres

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his current planning guidance in respect of out-of-town shopping centres.

Mr. Gummer: Planning policy guidance note 6 contains our current policy. It encourages retail development that respects town centre vitality and viability, in locations that are accessible by a choice of means of transport and which encourage economy in fuel consumption. PPG 13, published yesterday, underlines the importance of these policies.

Bradford City Centre Project

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the funding of Bradford's city centre project; what funding applications from the project he has received in the past year; how many have been (a) approved, (b) refused and (c) how many are still being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 15 March 1994]: The Department is currently funding the Bradford city centre project under the urban programme and under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985. We have received no representations about the project's funding. The Department has offered BCCP section 73 grant to expand the organisation's outreach scheme in 1994-95.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid and Trade

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the reasons for the dates of approval of individual aid and trade provision projects not being given in the list to which he referred in his answer to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) of 28 October 1993, Official Report, column 732; and if he will now make it his policy to provide the approval dates to Parliament.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The aid and trade provision scheme was established in 1978 and has been successful in securing over 270 overseas projects for Britain. In many of these projects the extended period of negotiation has meant that the project has been submitted for approval on more than one occasion. The list of successful ATP projects placed in the Library of the House is based on the dates when the formal Government-to-Government agreements or exchanges were signed for each project; this is the operative date for project commencement. Details of the dates of each individual approval is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. There are no plans to maintain such records centrally.

Malaysia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answers of 3 March, Official Report, column 800, on what basis the payment to Antah Biwater JV is consistent with his answer on payments to Malaysian companies.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My answers in the Official Report, column 800 are consistent. The status of the rural water supply project had changed from that of a proposed project to that of a project formally agreed between the two Governments before the payment referred to was made.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the ODA appointed a temporary rock expert to the Pergau design review panel; what is the cost likely to be of further steel lining for the power tunnels; what assessment the ODA has made of whether the contractors had an adequate geological evaluation of the cost of the project when they were given the work; if he will place in the Library the relevant documents explaining the geological reasons requiring an increase in Balfour Beatty—Cementation costs; and if he will make it his policy that any extra cost should be borne by the contractor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: ODA appointed a rock mechanics expert for 2 weeks in early 1993 to advise Tenaga Nasional Berhad Malaysian power authority and ODA whether the design of the power tunnel and power cavern proposed by the contractor would ensure long term satisfactory and safe operation of the completed project. The cost of the additional steel lining in the power tunnel is the subject of a claim by the contractor for extra payment; this is currently being discussed by the contractor and Tenaga Nasional Berhad. Geological information available to the Contractor was taken into account in the price submitted to DTI and ODA in March 1989 and at the time of contract signature in 1991. Under the terms of the contract it is the contractor's responsibility to deliver the completed project for a fixed basic price subject only to (i) the application of agreed indices for cost escalation of certain items and (ii) for specified geological risks, the cost of which is to be shared between the Contractor and the client. The geological reasons for the likely cost increase for further steel lining are the concern of the contractor and Tenaga Nasional Berhad. ODA is not a party to the contract between them. ODA will not meet any of the additional costs.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which international relief organisations have been forced to evacuate their humanitarian activities and in which locations in Sudan; and what representations he has made to the Sudan Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Information provided by Operation Lifeline Sudan indicates that a number of agencies have been affected by the fighting. World Vision has reduced numbers in Thiet; GOAL and AICF have taken people out of Ame, Aswa and Atepi camps, as has IRC; and AAIN has been forced to reduce its staff in Maridi and evacuate its staff from Mundri, as has Oxfam from Mundri. Relief workers have also withdrawn from Ulang, Kier and temporarily from Akobo.

The United Nations has, with our support, made direct representations to the Government of Sudan about the indiscriminate bombing of civilians and the effects of the hostilities on the distribution of relief aid.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of United Kingdom gross national product was spent on overseas aid in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The figures are as follows:

United Kingdom net official development assistance as a percentage of GNP 1979—1992

Year	Percentage
1979	0·52
1980	0·35
1981	0·43
1982	0·37
1983	0·35
1984	0·33
1985	0·33
1986	0·31
1987	0·28
1988	0·32
1989	0·31
1990	0·27

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Brooke: The cost of such receptions is included in the running costs for my Department, which are published in the annual report.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Brooke: Such purchases are included within my Department's overall administration expenditure, which is published every year in the annual report.

Arts (Business Sponsorship)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action he proposes to take over the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts current management difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts—ABSA—is a company limited by guarantee with charitable status. As part of its activities, ABSA administers on behalf of my Department the business sponsorship incentive scheme. In that regard, my Department maintains a close working relationship with ABSA. I am not aware of any current management difficulties related to the scheme which would require action on my part.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the management arrangements at the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts in respect of handling Government grant aid; when the organisation was last evaluated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: In July 1993 the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts reported to my Department on the outcome of an independent, external review of its financial and management arrangements for the Government-funded business sponsorship incentive scheme. In the light of that detailed review, I am satisfied that efficient and effective systems are in place.

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what instructions have been given to the Director General of OFLOT about how he discharges his responsibilities under section 5.6 of the invitation to apply to run the national lottery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) whether the article by Mr. Richard Branson in the Sunday Times of 20 February, constitutes a breach of section 5.6 of the invitation to apply; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what constitutes a breach of section 5.6 of the invitation to apply to run the national lottery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: This is an operational issue and therefore a matter for the director general of the national lottery.

TRANSPORT

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Norris: The information which my hon. Friend seeks is contained in "Public Bodies 1993" and previous editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Norris: The Department passed 91 statutory instruments in 1993, 115 in 1992 and 100 in 1991. A significant proportion of these set fees and charges only.

Seat Belts

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information is available to his Department about the range of costs of fitting seat belts to minibuses and coaches.

Mr. Key: The diversity of vehicle types and the way in which they are constructed are such that it is not possible to estimate the full range of costs involved in fitting belts to individual vehicles.

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many self-financing regulatory authorities his Department has set up since 1979; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment; and what it was last year and two years ago.

Mr. Norris: Four relevant authorities have been established since 1979.

The Rail Regulator was appointed and the office of the Rail Regulator was established as a non-ministerial Government Department on 1 December 1993. However, the majority of the Rail Regulator's statutory functions will not be exercisable until the remaining provisions of the Railways Act are commenced at the beginning of April 1994. The Rail Regulator's running costs for 1994-95 are estimated to be £5·2 million. The average planned staffing establishment for 1994-95 is 55.

The executive agencies of the Department of Transport listed in the table have regulatory functions and are required to recover total costs through fees and charges. Information given is taken from agencies' annual reports.

	Launched as agency	1990-91		1991-92		1992-93
		Total expenditure (£ million)	Staff	Total expenditure (£ million)	Staff	Total expenditure (£ million)	Staff

Vehicle Inspectorate[1]	1988	40·3	1,653	41·2	1,879	50·5	1,861

[1] Traffic examiner staff passed to the Vehicle Inspectorate's establishment in 1991-92, but the inspectorate became formally responsible for their costs in the following financial year.

Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport into which vehicle licensing category mechanical organs fall which are permanently fixed to the vehicle and used for display purposes only.

Mr. Key: Vehicles used to transport mechanical organs for solely private purposes, for example use at charity events, fall to be licensed in the private and light goods —PLG—tax class. The HGV rate would apply only where there was a commercial purpose.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of those consulted in respect of proposals on passengers and goods vehicle operating licences circulated on 27 May 1993.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer of 14 December 1993 at column 592. In addition the Department sent copies of the consultation document to a wide-ranging number of bodies and individuals with an interest in operator licensing.

"O" Licences

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to implement the proposals for continuous "O" licensing included in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill; how the annual fee for the renewal of the "O" licence is to be paid and collected; what provision there will be to bring to the attention of the licensing authority any misdemeanour committed by an operator during the previous year; how and how often the licensing authority will check an operator's licence; on what basis the licensing authority will decide to hold a public inquiry following objections to an "O" licence proposal or transfer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Continuous operator licensing will be introduced as soon as possible after Royal Assent, consistent with the need for a smooth transition from the current system. Details of changes to fee arrangements are currently the subject of separate consultation. Any further changes as a consequence of continuous licensing will also be the subject of prior consultation. The enforcement of the requirements on vehicles subject to operator licensing will be unaffected by the change to continuous licensing. Checks on the details of an operators business will continue to be made at the same five year intervals as provided by the present five year licensing system and operators will continue to be required to notify the licensing authorities about changes whenever they occur. The licensing authorities will continue to hold public inquiries as at present when they need to be satisfied about a matter arising out of an application for a licence or a variation of a licence. In addition, at the five-yearly review point, they will also be able to hold inquiries to consider objections to the operating centre of an operator.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect the proposal to end the requirement for "O" licence operators to prove to the Traffic Commissioner that they have adequate maintenance facilities for their vehicles, set out in his Department's 1993 consultation document, will have on (a) road safety and (b) general vehicle maintenance standards.

Mr. Key: This proposal is not being taken forward. Operators will continue to be required to satisfy traffic commissioners that they have adequate maintenance arrangements for their vehicles.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many public inquiries have been held in each traffic region in each of the last three years in respect of (a) HGV operator licences and (b) PSV operator "O" licences; and, in each case, if the operator licence was revoked or retained; and, in the latter case, what conditions were applied.

Mr. Key: The appendices to the annual reports of the licensing authorities and traffic commissioners published for the last three years, 1990-91 to 1992-93, contain information on the number of public inquiries held in each traffic area. Specific information about disciplinary inquiries is in the main text of each licensing authority's report.

Of those cases heard at public inquiry, the number of goods vehicle and public service vehicle operator licences revoked or retained, or where conditions were applied to PSV operator licences is in some instances mentioned in the reports and appendices to the reports. More detailed information on the action taken by each traffic commissioner and licensing authority against operator licences could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Copies of the "Annual Reports of the Licensing Authorities" and "Annual Reports of the Traffic Commissioners" are available in the Library of the House.

Road-rail Transport

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the current capacity of combined road-rail transport operations.

Mr. Freeman: Table 5.14 of Transport Statistics Great Britain 1993 contains statistics on "other traffic" which includes intermodal road-rail traffic. A copy of this publication has been placed in the Library.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what documentary evidence will be required relating to the destination of the loading unit used in a combined transport operation from or to a rail terminal; and what enforcement measures will be implemented.

Mr. Freeman: The Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1994, which were laid in the House on 25 February exempt from the 38 tonne maximum weight limit a vehicle carrying a loading unit as part of a combined transport operation either (a) to a railhead pursuant to a contract for the transport of that unit by rail, or (b) from a railhead to which the unit has been transported by rail. The regulations require a document to be carried in the cab of the vehicle which specifies, in the case of (a), the railhead, the date of the relevant contract and the parties thereto or, in the case of (b), the railhead and the date and time at which the unit was collected from the railhead.

Enforcement of lorry weight limits is carried out by the vehicle inspectorate, the police, and local authority trading standards departments. The 44 tonne weight limit will apply only to vehicles carrying containers and swap-bodies and therefore vehicles not carrying these weights will be unable to operate legitimately above 38 tonnes.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details and locations of the rail terminals he has identified for use by 44-tonne lorries in combined road-rail transport operations.

Mr. Freeman: Any rail terminal with facilities for the transhipment of containers and swap-bodies will qualify as a railhead for the purposes of the relevant regulations. It will also be necessary for the loading units in question to travel, or to have travelled, by rail on a network operated by British Rail or under a network licence.

Tickets

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to replace the limitless journey travel card with a stored-value ticket limiting the number of journeys that can be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Government have made clear their commitment to continuation of the London travel card and have no plans to replace it by a stored-value ticket. The stored-value ticket which London Transport will shortly be introducing as part of its current trial of smart card technology on buses in Harrow will be in addition to, not a replacement for, the present travel card.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have been held with existing traffic area staff about his proposals to turn the existing traffic areas into executive agencies.

Mr. Key: Traffic area office staff have been kept informed about the proposal for executive agency status and will be consulted as proposals are developed.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have been held between his Department and the Council on Tribunals about his proposals to turn the existing traffic areas into executive agencies; and whether agreement to such a proposal would need to be given by the Council on Tribunals.

Mr. Key: The Council on Tribunals views will be sought before any decision is taken on whether to give the traffic area network executive agency status.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the future responsibilities of traffic commissioners under his proposals to turn the existing traffic areas into executive agencies;

(2) what will be the relationship as regards decision making at traffic area office level between the traffic commissioner and the chief executive if his proposals to turn the existing traffic areas into executive agencies are implemented.

Mr. Key: The responsibilities of the traffic commissioners for the licensing and disciplining of operators and drivers would remain unchanged if it were decided to establish a traffic area network executive agency. The chief executive or director of the executive agency would be responsible for the management and performance of the traffic area offices, whose staff would continue to provide support for the traffic commissioners.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have been held with the road haulage industry about his proposals to turn the existing traffic areas into executive agencies.

Mr. Key: The proposal for executive agency status is concerned with improving management and will not affect the operator licensing regime; nevertheless, any views expressed by the road haulage industry will be given careful consideration.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have been held with traffic commissioners about his proposals to turn the existing traffic areas into executive agencies.

Mr. Key: Traffic commissioners are being consulted through the senior traffic commissioner and are represented on the steering group that has been established to develop the proposals for agency status.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many air misses there have been in each of the last four years involving aircraft (a) taking off and (b) landing at (i) Leeds-Bradford and (ii) Humberside airports.

Mr. Norris: The responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority—CAA.

All air miss reports in United Kingdom airspace, involving civil or military aircraft, are investigated initially by the joint air miss section of the National Air Traffic Services, which is a joint CAA/Ministry of Defence organisation. They are then examined by the joint air miss working group—JAWG—an independent committee drawn from a wide cross-section of responsible aviation bodies.

The records held by the joint air miss section, of air miss reports submitted by pilots show that for the period in question, no air miss reports were submitted for Leeds airport, while for Humberside airport only two such reports have been submitted. The first incident occurred on 23 May 1991 and involved a civilian aircraft in the final descent phase of its flight, which came into conflict with a military aircraft. The second incident took place on 13 October 1992 and also involved a loss of separation between a military aircraft and a civilian aircraft. The latter was in the landing phase of its flight. In both cases the incidents were subsequently judged by the JAWG to have involved no risk of collision.

Drink Driving

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) of 21 February, Official Report, column 83, if he will set out the terms of reference of the sociological study of hard-core drink-drivers being carried out with the assistance of the Portman Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The study is designed to give a better understanding of the circumstances surrounding drinking and driving offences. The contract for this research was let by the Portman Group, which is funding the study, and it would be for it to decide whether to release any details at this stage.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a discount for those purchasing in advance electronic tags for crossing the Severn bridge.

Mr. Key: Discounts of 20 per cent. for cars and light vans and 10 per cent. for heavy vehicles are already available on electronic tags valid for one month or three months, based on the assumption of 22 and 66 return trips respectively. These are the only discount requirements on the concessionaire, Severn River Crossing plc, under its concession agreement with the Secretary of State. Any further discounts are a matter for SRC's commercial judgment.

Copia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has about the sinking of the fishing vessel Copia; what consideration he has given to recovering the ship and crew; what representations he has received on the subject; and if he will make a statement;

(2) where responsibility lies for the recovery of bodies on fishing vessels sunk in inland waters; what arrangements are made for such a recovery in the case of the Copia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 15 March 1994]: The marine accident investigation branch inquiries into the accident are in progress. No representations have been received by this Department on the subject, other than the letter of 7 March from the hon. Member.

The Department will not contemplate salvaging a wreck except where there are firm grounds for surmising that raising a wreck would establish the nature and cause of the accident and there are no other means of achieving this.

There is no general requirement on the part of any official organisation to recover bodies in such circumstances. Nevertheless, immediately after the accident when police divers located the wreck they looked for the bodies of the crew, but unfortunately without success.

Shipping Register

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the representations he has received for Liverpool to be the base for a national open register of shipping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Since the Baltic Exchange's proposals for a British open register for shipping were received in early December, the Liverpool chamber of commerce and industry has written to reaffirm its support for it and for the proposal that the registry should be located in Liverpool.

As I explained to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 24 January, Official Report, column 78, the proposal raised complex issues which required careful study. An announcement will be made shortly.

Road Franchising

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to franchise local roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We have no such plans.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Self-Financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many self-financing regulatory authorities his Department has set up since 1992; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; and what was the staffing establishment at the latest available date, last year and two years ago.

Mr. David Davis: There are no self-financing regulatory authorities in the departments for which the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has responsibility.

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last two years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago for the comparable bodies.

Mr. David Davis: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last two years.

Mr. Waldegrave: Rules and regulations made by my Department during this period are as follows:

Chessington Computer Centre Trading Fund Order (1993)
Race Relations (Prescribed Public Bodies) Regulations (1994)
Research Councils (Transfer of Property etc) Order (1994)

Citizens Charter

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will give a full report of progress on the citizens charter since the publication of the first report in November 1992.

Mr. Waldegrave: "The Citizen's Charter Second Report: 1994" setting out progress in fulfilling citizens charter commitments across the public service is published today. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

WALES

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, columns 884-85.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office does not have a computer-aided facilities management system. However, a computerised system holding information relating to the Department's information technology assets is in place and a project is under way to provide by the end of the year a system which will cater for the Department's real estate, property management and asset inventory requirements.

The existing system was purchased from Workgroup Systems at a cost of £7,500 and commissioning is estimated to have taken 150 person hours. It was installed in order to provide a secure record of assets rather than in the expectation of direct savings. There is no evidence to suggest that it has influenced the level of reported theft and losses.

Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many persons responded to press advertisements inviting applications for positions on non-departmental public bodies in Wales in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many persons who responded to press advertisements for positions on non-departmental public bodies have been appointed by him in the last 12 months.

Mr. Redwood: More than 2,500 people made inquiries following the advertisements in Welsh newspapers in July 1993 inviting nominations to the Welsh Office register of candidates for public appointments. Of these, 959 returned completed nominations. Most of the nominations were received between September 1993 and January 1994. The new names have been added to those considered as and when vacancies arise.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which non-departmental public body chairman and board members will be required to hold their annual review meeting with Ministers in the first quarter of the year 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 March 1994]: My ministerial colleagues and I hold meetings with all the NDPB chairmen to consider their targets for the forthcoming year. Some of these will take place during the first quarter of this year.

Equal Pay

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the 1975 equal pay directive as it refers to Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The 1975 Equal Pay Directive is implemented in Great Britain by means of the Equal Pay Act 1970 as amended by the Equal Pay (Amendment) Regulations 1993.

Female Workers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the part-time earnings of female workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: According to the New Earnings Survey, in April 1993 average gross earnings for part-time females on adult rates in Wales were £71·30 per week for manual employees and £101·90 for non-manual employees. These averages are similar to those of most other regions.

F. L. Steelcraft

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much grant aid has been paid out from public funds in the past to (a) F. L. Steelcraft or (b) F. L. Steelcraft Ltd. of Borth, Aberystwyth, Wales; and on what dates.

Mr. Redwood: To comment on the Department's relationship with individual companies would be a breach of commercial confidentiality.

Farm Workers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake a tour of Wales meeting farm workers to discuss wages, conditions of work and the future of the Agricultural wages board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: No. The future of the Agricultural wages board is currently being considered in the light of the responses to the consultation exercise completed last year.

Earnings

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to improve the wages of female workers.

Mr. Redwood: My strategy is based on the continued success of United Kingdom macroeconomic policy; improving standards of education and training in Wales; improving access to markets; and ensuring a good supply of development land and facilities for industry and commerce. The continuing success of this strategy should enable average earnings for both men and women in Wales to increase still further.

Documents

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the titles of all items published during the last three years by his office and by all public bodies to which he makes appointments, which were available for sale, and which were published in the English language only indicating the price, reference numbers, and dates of publication in each case;

(2) if he will list the full titles of all publications issued during the last three years by his office and by public bodies to which he makes appointments, which were available for purchase, and which were printed in both the Welsh and English languages, indicating the prices, reference numbers, and dates of publication in each case.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information as requested is not centrally available but details of documents published by the Department indicating the price, reference numbers, year of publication and whether available in Welsh are contained within the "Welsh Office Publications List 1992". It is published annually and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Disabled People

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives or schemes he has launched in Wales to compensate disabled people for the additional value added tax costs being imposed.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the package of assistance announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his statement on 30 November 1993 at columns 922-24.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 595, regarding cardiac surgery in Wales, what level of additional resources is being made available and to which health authorities for purchasing purposes; in which trusts and directly managed units for provider purposes new facilities are being developed; and what are the relevant dates for commencement and completion of such developments.

Mr. Redwood: In addition to their discretionary allocations, from which cardiac services are also purchased, £6·5 million is available in 1993-94 to assist health authorities move towards the target level of cardiac surgery in Wales. I shall announce provision for 1994-95 in due course.

We have completed the development of cardiac facilities at the University Hospital of Wales which can now deliver 800 adult cardiac operations a year. New facilities, which will deliver the balance of need in South Wales, are to be developed at Morriston Hospital NHS Trust. Planning is currently underway and the centre is expected to become operational in 1997.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Redwood: The number of rules and regulations made by statutory instrument for Wales alone by the Secretary of State for Wales during the past three years is as follows: 1991—73; 1992—131; 1993—84.

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what is was five years ago.

Mr. Redwood: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Library of the House.

Health Service Costs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of administration costs for family health service authorities for Wales as a whole for each year since 1989-90, indicating the percentage increase in constant prices which has taken place since 1989-90 and the latest available year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Revenue expenditure of family health service authorities in Wales on administration was £4,242,000 in 1989-90, £6,910,000 in 1990-91, £8,265,000 in 1991-92 and £9,150,000 in 1992-93.

This represents an increase over the period of 81 per cent. at constant prices. In 1992-93 the cost of this administrative expenditure represented 1·9 per cent. of the total spent on family health services in Wales.

Source: FHSA White Paper Accounts.

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many self-financing regulatory authorities his Department has set up since 1979; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment; and what it was last year and two years ago.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office has not set up any self-financing regulatory authorities since 1979.

Welsh Economic Council

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decision he has reached on the proposal to establish a Welsh Economic Council.

Mr. Redwood: I have carefully considered the responses to the Government's consultation paper on this proposal and have decided to proceed with the establishment of a Welsh Economic Council.

The Welsh Economic Council, which will be classified as an advisory non-departmental public body, will provide a forum for discussing with wealth-creators and interest groups the economic and industrial progress of Wales. Its role will be to advise on areas like improvements in training and education and to discuss how to boost enterprise, jobs and development further.

The council will comprise between 10 and 20 members from the private and public sectors, appointed by me on an individual, rather than representational, basis. It will usually meet no more than three times a year, with the first meeting to be held on Wednesday 30 March.

Health Service Funding

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decisions he has now reached about the allocation of resources for hospital and community health and related services for Wales in 1994-95.

Mr. Redwood: I announced on 17 December my decision on the overall allocation to the national health service in Wales for 1994-95. Within the £2,076 million cash available I now propose to allocate £1,536 million to hospital and community health services—H and CHS—and the cash-limited element of the family health services—FHS—in Wales.

The funds will be distributed as follows.

Health authorities will receive £1,295 million for current purposes—an increase of £53 million or 4·3 per cent. over 1993-94 plans. Health authorities will receive £113·5 million for capital investment. The sum of £67·4 million will be provided for education and training of NHS staff and as contributions toward the running costs of England and Wales bodies, and family health service authorities will receive £14 million for their management and administration costs and £45·8 million for general medical service practice support costs.

In addition, authorities and trusts will be expected to generate efficiency savings of 2·25 per cent. and to achieve a further 5 per cent. reduction in their management, administrative and clerical costs. These savings will be available to meet the cost of pay settlements next year and for further investment in patient care.

Details of the allocations to health authorities and family health authorities and the provisional external financing limits for NHS trusts is contained in a statement which has been placed today in the Library of the House.

Cathedrals

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what conclusions he has reached on the provision of grant aid for cathedrals.

Sir Wyn Roberts: After careful consideration of detailed information presented to us by the cathedral authorities and on advice from our independent advisers, the Historic Buildings Council for Wales, we have decided to help underpin the architectural needs of Welsh cathedrals.

Over the next three financial years we will set aside some £675,000 towards the restoration costs faced by Welsh cathedrals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Entry Clearance Officers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance is given to entry clearance officers overseas regarding answering queries from solicitors about their clients' applications for visas; if he will publish this guidance; and what plans he has to issue revised guidance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Entry clearance officers overseas are advised that posts should reply direct to letters from solicitors in the United Kingdom on routine matters unless they have reason to believe that the Home Office or the FCO has already become involved. In that case, the letter should be briefly acknowledged and a copy sent to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in London, with a memorandum containing relevant information.

There are no plans to revise this advice.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people currently work as entry clearance officers in British embassies and high commissions; where they are situated; what grades they work at; what number and percentage are women; and what is the ethnic breakdown of officers.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1993, 259 man-years were spent at British posts overseas on entry clearance officer—ECO—work. This figure includes staff who have other responsibilities as well as entry clearance work.

Most ECOs are grade DS9 or equivalent—immigration officer in the case of immigration service staff serving on secondment, or LEII in the case of locally engaged ECOs.

A list of posts designated to receive applications for entry clearance is available in the Library of the House.

A precise breakdown of the gender and ethnic background of those officers currently serving as ECOs could be furnished only at disproportionate cost, but 50 per cent. of the FCO's DS9 complement are women, and 1·6 per cent. are from ethnic minorities. I understand that the corresponding figures for immigration officers overseas are 22 per cent. and 4 per cent.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training entry clearance officers receive.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All diplomatic service officers receive induction and other vocational training. Those appointed as entry clearance officers also attend a three-week training course in London before taking up their appointments. Locally engaged ECOs also attend these courses.

Home Office staff seconded as entry clearance officers attend a short pre-posting "conversion" course.

Like other staff, ECOs also receive on-the-job training, in the light of their posts' workload and resources.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many requests he received from hon. Members in (a) 1993, (b) 1992, (c) 1991 and (d) 1990 to exercise ministerial discretion over visa applications; in how many in each year the decision of the entry clearance officer was overturned; to how many in each year he replied personally; and to how many in each year the migration and visa unit replied.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table shows the number of representations on visa matters received during 1990-93 inclusive and the number which received ministerial replies. The others were replied to by the migration and visa correspondence unit, except in cases where no reply was necessary.

	Total	Ministerial replies
1990	4,561	884
1991	4,577	588
1992	5,069	287
1993	5,879	346

It is not possible to say how many of these representations specifically requested the exercise of ministerial discretion, but many of them did so, if only by implication.

Ministers overturn ECOs' decisions only in exceptional circumstances, as described in my letter to the hon. Member of 7 July 1993.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance is given to entry clearance officers overseas regarding answering queries from hon. Members about their constituents; if he will publish this guidance; and what plans he has to issue revised guidance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Entry clearance officers at posts are instructed not to reply direct to letters received from Members of Parliament but to acknowledge them and return them to the migration and visa correspondence unit for reply.

The arrangements for handling enquiries on immigration were set out in the booklet "Representation by Members of Parliament on Visa and Immigration Cases—A Guide" which was circulated to Members under cover of my letter of 7 July 1993.

There are no current plans to update this guidance.

Belize

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Belize Government for assistance consequent upon the withdrawal of the battalion from Belize; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have made it clear to the Belize Government that we stand ready to participate in any consultations that they may request on Belize's future security and that we are prepared to play our part in any consultations which would lead to an appropriate response should the security of Belize be threatened in the future. We will also maintain our programme of assistance to the Belize defence force and Belize will continue to be a beneficiary under Britain's bilateral aid programme.

Jammu and Kashmir Document

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to date with the Indian authorities in respect of Madam Speaker's statement of 21 February, Official Report, column 21, regarding the document from Jammu and Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have taken no action with the Indian authorities.

"National Security"

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide an explanation of the phrase "national security" used in the Intelligence Services Bill; and how this term relates to the use of the term "national security" in section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The term "national security" has been in general use for many years and is well recognised and understood in statute. It is used in both the Intelligence Services Bill and Data Protection Act 1984 in the same way as in the many other statutes in which it is included with no further definition.

"Serious Crime"

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the differences between the meaning of "serious crime", used in the Intelligence Services Bill [Lords] and the term "serious arrestable offence" used in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A detailed definition of "serious arrestable offence" is provided in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 for the particular purposes of that Act. The term "serious crime" is widely understood and in the context of the Intelligence Services Bill does not require further definition.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each year since 1990.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 15 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has signed two public interest immunity certificates since 1990. The first was dated 26 June 1991 and the second 26 January 1992. Both were signed in connection with the case of Andrew Balfour, who was dismissed from the diplomatic service.

Chemical Weapons Treaty

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to introduce legislation to ratify the chemical weapons treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We intend to introduce the legislation necessary to ratify the chemical weapons convention as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Korea (Military Manoeuvres)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on reports of the cancellation of team spirit military manoeuvres on the Korean peninsula.

Mr. Goodlad: Exercise Team Spirit is a matter for the Governments of the Republic of Korea and the United States of America.

Pakistan

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to secure a report from the Pakistani authorities concerning the murder of Mohammed Afzal in Juarah village, Pakistan on 4 October 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British high commission in Islamabad continues to press the Pakistani authorities for a full report. However, as Mr. Afzal was a dual British-Pakistani national, they are not compelled to provide it.

EDUCATION

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many self-financing regulatory authorities his Department has set up since 1979; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment; and what it was last year and two years ago.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has set up no self-financing regulatory authorities since 1979.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Boswell: The Department's records give the number of general statutory instruments passed in each of the last three years as follows:

Year	Number
1991	59
1992	68
1993	74
TOTAL	201

The number of local statutory instruments for each of the last three years is as follows:

Year	Number
1991	12
1992	9
1993	7
TOTAL	28

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Boswell: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

Pupils (Exclusion)

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils are wrongly excluded (a) for a fixed term, (b) indefinitely and (c) permanently, in the (i) north, (ii) central and (iii) south districts in Manchester.

Mr. Forth: Such information is not held centrally.

Doncaster College

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what correspondence he has had with the principal of Doncaster college during the last three months in respect of (a) the appointment and (b) the ending of appointment of college governors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: There has been no such correspondence during this period between my right hon. Friend and the principal of Doncaster college. The Department has, however, received correspondence from a governor on a number of matters relating to the conduct of the corporation and this is being pursued with the chairman of governors of Doncaster college.

School Tuck Shops

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to recommend to the governing body of schools that only drinks which are sucrose-free should be stocked in tuck shops on school premises indicating from which manufacturers such drinks can be bought.

Mr. Forth: Local education authorities and, where appropriate, governing bodies of self-governing—grant-maintained—schools are responsible for providing meals and any other food, including drinks, at their schools. It is for them to decide what is provided, taking into account local circumstances.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of prime ministerial receptions in 1993-94.

The Prime Minister: The cost to my office of ministerial receptions in 1993-94 is included in the overall administrative expenditure which is published every year in the Cabinet Office departmental report.

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister following the meeting on 23 February between the head of the middle eastern department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Riad El Taher and the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will consider the case for urging the United Nations to lift sanctions before the summer heat arrives in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates; and what estimate he has made of the incidence of disease in the river valleys.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 March 1994]: I am looking into the specific point which the hon. Member put to me in the House on 8 March.

The Security Council decided on 18 January that there are no grounds for lifting sanctions but medical supplies have never been subject to sanctions. There is no authoritative estimate of the incidence of disease in the river valleys.

Renault

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 581, whether he will urge the French Government to sell Renault to a German car manufacturer.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Paul Bennett

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister signed in July 1992 the public interest immunity certificate in relation to the prosecution of Paul Bennett.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the then Home Secretary signed the certificate.

Royal Tour (Caribbean)

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Prime Minister what is the purpose of the royal tour of the Caribbean and the cost, including the use of the royal yacht Britannia; and under which expenditure heads the cost will be borne.

The Prime Minister: The purpose of Her Majesty the Queen's visit to Commonwealth countries and dependent territories in the Caribbean basin and to Bermuda was to reaffirm the close relationship which exists between the United Kingdom and those countries and territories. In each destination a number of specific objectives were achieved. These included demonstrating the importance we attach to our continuing responsibility for the dependent territories; and the Queen's continuing commitment to her realms. The visit to Guyana marked our recognition of the restoration of democratic government there.

Costs to the United Kingdom will be borne by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence, the Metropolitan police and by Buckingham palace. Exact figures are not available: some bills have not yet been presented and the cost of diplomatic service staff who worked on the visit could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on the cost of individual voyages by the royal yacht is not maintained.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 850, which treaty provisions will apply when deciding whether the European Parliament will be consulted on the ratification of GATT.

The Prime Minister: The European Parliament will be consulted in accordance with the provisions of article 228 of the treaty of Rome, as amended by the Maastricht treaty. The Foreign Affairs Council agreed on 21 February that the assent procedure, as set out in that article, will apply.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, columns 857-59.

Sir John Wheeler: The majority of the systems were developed in-house using existing equipment with the remaining six systems being purchased at a cost of £320,000 from the companies listed:

Britannia Information Business Systems Ltd.
BIS Ltd.
RMS Service.

It is not possible to estimate the time taken to commission the various systems.

The systems were not designed with the intention of producing savings, but as an effective and efficient means of providing proper asset management. Therefore no figures for savings are available.

At this stage the systems have not had any discernible impact on the identification of theft.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

	Statutory rules laid		Statutory instruments made by the Secretary of State
	Regulations	Orders	Regulations	Orders
1991	12	25	3	3
1992	10	20	3	6
1993	19	17	Nil	4

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Sir John Wheeler: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

Arts (Business Sponsorship)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what reports he has sought or received from the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts (Northern Ireland) on its recent sex discrimination admission; and if he will make a statement on the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts' capabilities to conform to the law and accepted standards of good practice in recruitment and selection policies and procedures;

(2) what action he proposes to take to ensure that the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts (Northern Ireland) designs and implements appropriate equal opportunities and fair employment policies, following its recent sex discrimination admission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My Department is aware of a settlement by the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts in a recent sex discrimination case. Senior appointments within the association are made by its headquarters office in London in consultation, as appropriate, with regional committees.

The Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts is an independent company and it is a matter for it to ensure that its recruitment policies conform with the law and with accepted standards of good practice.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of whether the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts (Northern Ireland) conforms to his recently promulgated policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: None. Northern Ireland Departments are still considering how best to apply the policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines to services provided by or on behalf of the Government in the Province.

Ulster Young Militants

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will proscribe the Ulster Young Militants; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: The question of whether this and other organisations should be proscribed is kept under review. The fact that a particular organisation is not proscribed confers no immunity from prosecution in respect of criminal acts which it or its members may commit.

Victim Support

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the outcome of Victim Support Northern Ireland's request for additional funds to develop its services to victims of crime in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The Government acknowledge and commend the important work carried out by the staff and volunteers of Victim Support Northern Ireland to provide advice and support for the victims of crime. The organisation has been directly funded by the Northern Ireland Office since 1988.

Victim Support Northern Ireland recently submitted a request for additional funding to enable it to create an executive management structure and develop its services to people of Northern Ireland. The Government recognise the importance of these developments and have allocated an additional £60,000 to the organisation. This represents a 30 per cent. increase on current annual funding—which will bring total funding to £267,000 in 1994-95, and underlines the Government's commitment to the provision of effective support for victims recovering from the distress caused by crime.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the tables.

	Number
Statutory instruments made
1991	84(2[1])
1992	87(10[1])
1993	77(2[1])
Government Bills which became Acts
1991	4
1992	1
1993	2

[1] Orders in Council which are included in the total.

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Hague: The cost of ministerial receptions and similar functions so far in 1993-94 is £4,990·60.

In addition, the annual reception for disabled people and representatives of disability organisations was held on 10 March at an estimated cost of £6,000.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) council tenants, (b) housing association tenants, (c) private tenants and (d) owner occupiers were in receipt of housing benefit in the Doncaster area for the latest date for which he has figures available; and what were the figures (i) 12 months and (ii) 24 months ago.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table.

Percentage of Tenants in Receipt of Housing Benefit in Doncaster

	1991	1992	1993
Local Authority	65	64	62
Housing Association[2]	not collected	40	47
Private[3]	58	not available	not available

Data Sources:
The housing benefit management information system quarterly caseload counts of the number of claims where housing benefit is in payment, and, 1991 census figures and the housing investment programme returns made to the Department of the Environment for 1992 and 1993 of the numbers of tenancies, by tenure type.

Notes:
[1] Because the information has had to be drawn from various sources, consistent data for the three years cannot be provided. The figures are, therefore, the best estimate based on the available information.
[2] The number of housing association tenants in receipt of housing benefit was not collected before May 1992.
[3] The information on private tenancies is not available for 1992 and 1993 because the data source of tenancy types cannot isolate owner-occupiers from non-housing association private tenancies. It also cannot identify unoccupied dwellings.
[4] Owner-occupiers in England and Wales have not been eligible for housing benefit (rate rebates) since April 1990 when community charge benefit was introduced.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement as to why the Child Support Agency's headquarters in Belfast refused to believe that the husband of Christine Joyce, the late Derek Joyce, had died four years ago, for the purposes of continuing to pay widow's benefit.

Mr. Burt: Owing to a clerical error, a maintenance application form was sent to Mrs. Joyce on 19 April 1993. An apology was sent to Mrs. Joyce on 4 May 1993 and the case was closed. The agency has had no further contact with Mrs. Joyce.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases referred to the Child Support Agency by hon. Members in 1993 have not yet resulted in a conclusive response being provided; and what action he is taking to ensure that such delays are avoided.

Mr. Burt: The chief executive of the Child Support Agency received more than 2,200 letters from hon. Members in 1993, of which 255 remain to be answered. Targets for answering letters are not currently being met, but necessary steps are being taken to ensure that letters from hon. Members are answered as promptly as possible.

Maternity Pay

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement concerning maternity pay in Wales and on the EC pregnant workers directive 1992.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) on 8 March at cols. 139-40. The proposals outlined in the reply include maternity pay in Wales.

Prisoners

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether the Benefits Agency requests the Prison Service to inform it if a person is received into custody in England and Wales;

(2) how much benefit he estimates was claimed fraudulently by prisoners in England and Wales last year;

(3) how much he estimates to be the total amount of benefit fraudulently claimed by prisoners in England and Wales between 1987 and 1992;

(4) how many fraudulent claims from prisoners in England and Wales have been reported by staff or the inmates themselves to the relevant authorities since 1987;

(5) what action has been taken since 1988 to close loopholes which may contribute to fraudulent claims for benefit from prisoners in England and Wales.

Mr. Burt: As with all referrals of benefit fraud, individual reports of benefit claims continuing after people have entered prison are always followed up, investigated where necessary and benefit terminated where appropriate. We do not, however, keep statistics to enable us to separate this type of fraud referral from other categories and are not, therefore, in a position to quantify historical losses.

In response to the continuing problem of benefit fraud amongst prisoners new controls were introduced on 4 March. The Prison Service now provides the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service with a weekly list of all newly convicted prisoners in England and Wales. This will ensure that all benefit recipients have their cases reviewed on entry to prison.

Furthermore, an exercise is being carried out by the three agencies to identify all benefits payments being made in the name of people who are currently in prison. Investigations will follow, benefit will be terminated where appropriate and recoveries sought in all overpayment cases. Prosecutions will also be considered in each case.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the national insurance contributions unit informs the Benefit Agency following the receipt of form F1113 after a claimant is received into custody.

Mr. Burt: If a prisoner indicates on form F1113 that he was receiving a social security benefit immediately prior to his arrest the Contributions Agency informs the appropriate district office of the Benefits Agency or the Employment Services Agency, or both. However, new procedures now incorporate a full exchange of information between the Prison Service and the Benefits Agency so that all benefit claims will be reviewed on a person's entry to prison in England and Wales.

Information Technology Services Agency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are (a) the staff numbers at each location of the Information Technology Services Agency and (b) the numbers of such staff at each location who are banned from transfer to other posts elsewhere within the Government service; what is the operative date of the ban; and on what date staff were made known of the ban.

Mr. Hague: The Information Technology Services Agency—ITSA—employs 4,500 permanent staff at locations in the north east, north west, Reading and London. ITSA's plans to transfer its day to day operations to the private sector, announced on 31 January, may affect up to 2,000 jobs mainly based in the north east and north west. Staff will be expected to transfer with the work under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

None of ITSA's staff has been banned from applying for posts elsewhere within the Government service.

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Hague: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993", and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many self-financing regulatory authorities his Department has set up since 1988; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment now; and what is was last year and two years ago.

Mr. Hague: None.

Social Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the budget for his Department's district social fund in respect of the Doncaster area for the current year as set at 1 April 1993; whether the budget was subsequently increased; how much remains in the budget; how many applicants have been refused a grant, giving the reason for refusal; how many applicants have been refused a loan, giving the reasons for refusal; how many applicants refused made an appeal; and how many of these appeals were successful.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 15 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Social Fund (SF) in the Benefits Agency's (BA) Doncaster District.

Details of the initial budget allocations for the Doncaster District for the 1993-94 financial year are in the Library. There has not been any subsequent additional budget allocation this year. The balance outstanding as at 28 February 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, was £100,544 for grants and £130,270 for loans.

You asked for the number of applicants refused a grant or loan in the District. Information on the SF is not kept by SF applicant but by SF application. At 28 February 1994 the numbers of grant and loan applications refused were 4,873 and 4,407 respectively. The reasons for refusal are given at Annex A.

The new Social Fund Computer System, introduced to Doncaster in September 1993, provides a more detailed record of the reason each individual item within an application is refused. This was not previously the case. Consequently, statistics from the two systems are not always compatible.

There is no right of appeal against discretionary SF decisions. Applicants dissatisfied with a decision may seek a review of the decision and this is initially conducted within the District. If still dissatisfied, the applicant can ask for a review by the Independent Review Service (IRS) which is independent of the Department and the Agency. For the period 1 April 1993 to 28 February 1994, 1,503 review applications were received by Doncaster District. These figures include those that requested a review by the IRS. Overall, 370 resulted in a changed decision.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

[1] Latest available data

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what restrictions are currently being imposed on payments from the social fund in Coventry;

(2) what extra provision has been made to meet the extra demand on the social fund as a result of Bosnian refugees taking up residence in Coventry.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Robert Ainsworth, dated 15 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the Social Fund (SF) in Coventry.

Firstly, you asked what restrictions are currently being imposed on payments from the SF in Coventry. It might be helpful if I explain that it is the duty of the Area Social Fund Officer (ASFO) to manage the District SF allocation so that the highest priority needs are consistently met throughout the year. To do this the ASFO issues guidance to Social Fund Officers (SFO) on the high, medium and low priority needs within the District. It must be pointed out that whilst SFOs must take this guidance into account it is not binding on them. As such, a SFO may raise the priority of an application in order to make a payment.

I can inform you the ASFO at Coventry has decided that high and medium priority application can be consistently met from the District allocation. Other than the exclusions mentioned in the Secretary of State directions no restrictions are imposed on any Benefit Agency District with regard to making payments from the SF.

Finally, in answer to your second question, the District has been able to meet the SF expenditure as a result of applications from Bosnian refugees taking up residence in the Coventry area from their existing allocation.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefit Recipients (Hospital)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to clarify whether the item in social security form BR2215, referring to the need to inform the Benefits Agency if a recipient goes into hospital, applies to out-patient visits.

Mr. Hague: The administration of retirement pension and widows benefit, for which this form is used, is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 15 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about clarification of the wording in form BR2215.

Form BR2215 is used where a customer has their Retirement Pension or Widows Benefit paid direct into an account every four or thirteen weeks. The form comprises of a set of notes which advise the customer which changes in their circumstances should be reported; the form is issued every year at the time of the uprating. The note which refers to "going into hospital" does not apply to customers who are visiting a hospital as an out-patient. The wording of the note on the BR2215 is identical to the corresponding note that appears in order books.

We have no evidence to suggest that the present wording is misleading our customers into notifying us of out-patient visits. Therefore, at this stage, there are no plans to alter the wording of the note.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments have been made in each region of Scotland since October 1993.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the cold weather payment scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 14 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many cold weather payments have been made in each region of Scotland since October 1993.

EMPLOYMENT

Ministerial Receptions

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in his Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of receptions held by Ministers in the Employment Department in 1993-94 is £4,042.

Employment Policy

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what aspects of Government employment policy are subject to legal proceedings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All actions, decisions or legal instruments by Government Departments are in principle subject to judicial review. The EC Commission may bring infraction proceedings under article 169 of the EC treaty where it believes the legislation of a member state is inconsistent with EC law. A member state may also bring proceedings in the European Court of Justice to challenge the legal basis on which EC directives or other instruments have been adopted.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for two areas of employment law which are currently subject to judicial review or infraction proceedings:

(i) The Unfair Dismissal (Variation of Qualifying Period) Order 1985, which introduced the two-year qualifying period for unfair dismissal, is being challenged as constituting indirect sex discrimination in the case of R. v. Secretary of State for Employment ex parte Smith and Perez;

(ii) proceedings against the United Kingdom under article 169 of the EC treaty, in respect of the acquired rights and collective redundancies directive, are currently before the European Court of Justice, where the outstanding issue is whether the United Kingdom must specifically provide for employee representatives for the purpose of consultation.

The United Kingdom has initiated proceedings in the European Court of Justice to challenge the health and safety legal basis of the recently adopted directive on working time.

Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest annual accident figures for (a) the Doncaster area and (b) South Yorkshire, as a whole; and what are the corresponding figures for (i) five years and (ii) 10 years ago.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information is provided in the following table. Due to changes in the reporting of major injury legislation, figures for 1983 are not directly comparable with those for later years.

Occupational injuries in Doncaster and South Yorkshire as reported to the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates and local authorities[1].

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the number of (a) full-time male employees and (b) part-time female employees since May 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates of part-time and full-time employees are available only for quarter months. The available information is shown in the table:

[1] June 1978. Male full-time estimates are not available for 1979.
[2] Latest available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people were shown as out of work or seeking it in the labour force survey, in each quarter since 1979; what was the percentage of official unemployment as measured at the time and the percentage on the unemployment count as now calculated; and if he will make a statement explaining trends in the differences between the figures.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The official measure of unemployment from the labour force survey is shown for the period requested in the table. These figures have remained the same as when first published. For comparative purposes, the claimant unemployment figures on the consistent seasonally adjusted and unadjusted bases are also given. Since the introduction of the internationally comparable International Labour Organisation measure of unemployment in 1984 both official measures of unemployment have shown broadly similar trends.

[1] From 1979 to 1983 the labour force survey was carried out biennially, and between 1984 and 1992, annually. Since spring 1992 the LFS has been conducted quarterly.

[2] The labour force definition of unemployment applied for the years 1979-1984. Thereafter, the internationally agreed ILO definition of unemployment has been used. This definition counts as unemployed those people without paid jobs who were available to start work within the next two weeks and had either looked for work in the four weeks prior to interview or were waiting to start a job they had already obtained. The LF definition of unemployment used prior to 1984 is essentially the same as the ILO version, except for the fact that it is based on looking for work in the single week prior to interview rather than four weeks as with the ILO definition. The ILO unemployment rate is the percentage of economically active people who are unemployed on the ILO measure.

[3] Seasonally adjusted unemployment consistent with current coverage. This series is based on the count of those claiming unemployment related-benefits at Employment Service local offices, formerly unemployment benefit offices—"the claimant count"—who on the day of the count were out of work, available for work, and actively seeking employment. The denominator used to calculate the rate consists of the unemployed, employees in employment, the self-employed, those on work related Government training schemes and Her Majesty's forces. The claimant count figures are the weighted averages of the published figures for the months of each LFS quarter.

[4] (a) "Claimant" or "Registrant" count figures that have not been adjusted for seasonal influences or for changes in the coverage of the monthly count.

(b) From 1981 onwards the figures are from the claimant count. The 1983 rate uses the same denominator as the registrant count. Thereafter the denominator as described in (3) above.

[5] The 1979 and 1981 figures are from the "registrant count", a count of those registered as out of work. This count was abandoned in October 1982 when registration at a jobcentre became voluntary and threatened the integrity of the count. The denominator used to calculate the rate consisted of the unemployed and employees in employment.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who are the members currently appointed to the Race Relations Employment Advisory Group.

Mr. Forsyth: The members currently appointed to the Race Relations Employment Advisory Group are: Mr. S. Azam, Ms K. Carberry, Mr. R. Cochrane, Mr. E. Cotter, Mr. R. Gilbert, Dr. A. Hirmis, Ms M. Lai, Ms G. Mills, Mr. H. Ouseley, Mrs. K. Siviter, Ms S. Sootarsing, Mr. G. Taylor, Ms J. Tomlin, Mr. S. Ward and Mrs. C. Wells.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who are the members currently appointed to the committees for the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given. Employment Service regional directors and directors for Scotland and Wales appoint members of these committees on behalf of the Secretary of State. However, Ministers appoint their chairmen, and I am attaching a list of the current chairmen. All current appointments to CEPDs expire on 31 March 1994. The committees will be reconstituted for a term of three years, and all appointments considered afresh, from 1 April 1994.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Peter Kilfoyle, dated 16 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question asking who are the members appointed to the Committees for the Employment of People with Disabilities.

There are 60 CEPDs, each with an independent chairman, and up to 14 members. Chairmen are appointed by the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Employment with special responsibility for the employment of people with disabilities, on behalf of the Secretary of State. Members are appointed by my Regional Directors and Directors for Scotland and Wales, on behalf of the Secretary of State.

CEPDs were established under the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944. Their statutory role is to advise and assist the Secretary of State for Employment on matters related to the employment and self-employment of people with disabilities in their areas. In practice they work closely with my people within their areas, particularly with Placing, Assessment and Advisory Teams, in promoting employment opportunities for people with disabilities.

Each Committee includes equal numbers (either two or three) of members appointed after consultation with organisations representing employers and workers—to represent employers and workers generally. The other members are appointed as independents on the basis of the personal contribution they can make to work of their Committee. They usually include the manager of a local sheltered workshop, a member of the medical profession and other with a direct interest in the employment of disabled people locally.

Because members are appointed at regional level, and the Committees work primarily with PACTs locally, we do not maintain an up to date national list of the 800 to 900 members of the Committees.

I hope this is helpful.

Youth Unemployment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new initiatives he plans to reduce youth unemployment in the Doncaster area.

Miss Widdecombe: The local employment service and training and enterprise council deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes to help young people in the area find the best and quickest route to employment. The number of young people who have waited for more than eight weeks for a youth training place in the Doncaster area has fallen by 98 per cent. in the last year. The Government intend to improve the range of opportunities available to school leavers still further in Doncaster and elsewhere by introducing modern apprenticeships in 1995.

European Regional Funding

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department assesses applications made for European Union objective 3 funding from Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The European social fund is very heavily subscribed and highly competitive. Initially, project selection criteria are applied by each of the sectors responsible for managing ESF applications. These criteria reflect the priorities set out in the objective 3 plan to use ESF resources throughout Great Britain for 1994 onwards. They ensure that sector managers recommend to the Employment Department those projects which provide high quality and best value for money. The Department then considers the applications and issues approval letters where appropriate. This assessment process applies to applications across the whole of Great Britain, including Wales.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a list of all applications made for EU objective 3 funding to his Department in respect of areas of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Until the negotiations on the objective 3 plan to use European social fund resources throughout Great Britain have been concluded, it is not possible for the Employment Department to invite or approve any applications for ESF assistance. Meanwhile the sector managers involved in objective 3 have already applied selection criteria to prospective projects. This will minimise delay in submitting recommended applications to the Department once the Commission has approved the plan. I advised the hon. Member in the reply I gave to him on 14 February 1994, Official Report, column 643, that we continue to press upon the Commission the need to have an urgent decision.

Social Charter

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will itemise (a) the key elements of policy listed in the principal items of the existing European Community's social action programme and (b) the principal items in the proposed social charter provisions restricted to the other 11 EU member states.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For the complete list of items included in the social action programme, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 19 October 1992, Official Report, columns 116-20.

The only item to have been taken forward so far under the agreement on social policy by the other 11 member states is the proposal for a Council directive on mechanisms for informing and consulting employees.

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Library.

Outdoor Education Centres

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all outdoor education centres, giving their location and the frequency of visits made by the Health and Safety Executive over the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not collected in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Ambulance Services

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage response by each ambulance service in England meeting the minimum standard within the patients charter; what are the comparable figures for meeting the ORCON standard; what were the comparative figures for the previous two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is included in "Patient Transport Services 1992-93", copies of which are available in the Library.

Ambulance emergency response time standards, commonly referred to as ORCON standards, were first introduced in 1974. Revised standards, introduced following a 1990 review, are in the patients charter.

Health Visitors

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health visitors are now being trained; and how many in 1984.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Year Ending 31 March	Entries to Training
1984	848
1992	694

Source: English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting Annual Report Table 5.3.

The number of whole-time equivalent health visitors in 1994 was 9,700 and in 1992 was 10,250—an increase of 5·6 per cent. over the last eight years.

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many manufacturers of counterfeit medicines have been detected in the United Kingdom this year; and what steps are being taken by the Medicines Control Agency to protect NHS patients from counterfeit medicines, particularly in respect of those that are entering the country under the guise of parallel imports.

Mr. Sackville: Two. All reports of possible counterfeits are immediately investigated by the enforcement unit of the Medicines Control Agency, MCA, and any subsequent investigation given a high priority. The MCA also assesses the degree of hazard to the public and if necessary alerts relevant organisations and the public accordingly.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many reports her Department has received of counterfeit medicines being (a) detected and (b) distributed in the United Kingdom in each year since 1990 and to date in 1994; and if she will name the products involved and the source of the products.

Mr. Sackville: Information in this detail could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Department of Health receives between 20 and 30 such reports each year, the products involved are usually major brand leaders or—more recently—anabolic steroids. Eighty per cent. of the reports are related to "diverted" products. These products are legally manufactured within product specification but diverted to the United Kingdom from other markets.

Greater London Health Authority

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was allocated to Greater London health authority purchasers in each year since 1990; and what percentage this represents of all revenue funding for hospitals and community health services in each year.

Mr. Sackville: Allocations to district health authorities as purchasers of health care were made for the first time in the 1991-92 financial year. It is the responsibility of regional health authorities to allocate resources to districts and this information is not separately identifiable in the information collected by the Department.

Expenditure by district health authorities in Greater London in 1991-92 and 1992-93 is shown in the table; it excludes expenditure by general practitioner fund holders. The figures for individual authorities over the two years are not directly comparable in every case because of boundary changes.

Figures for 1993-94 are not yet available.

Greater London district health authorities' expenditure accounted for 18·1 per cent. of total expenditure by district health authorities in England in 1991-92 and 18·0 per cent. in 1992-93.

Powered Wheelchairs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of including powered wheelchairs for occupant control out of doors in the artificial limb and appliance centre service; and what plans she has to provide this service.

Mr. Bowis: Decisions about the issue of wheelchairs, including powered indoor-outdoor wheelchairs, are matters for arrangement between district health authorities and national health service trusts. No estimate of the cost of providing these wheelchairs on a national basis has been made. In 1991-92 total expenditure on the wheelchair service was £46·93 million.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the changes in the number of places in staffed residential care homes catering primarily for people who are mentally ill or have learning difficulties in (a) the Doncaster health authority area and (b) Trent regional health authority in each of the last four years, divided into (i) publicly owned, (ii) privately owned and (iii) voluntary sector owned.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is shown in the table.

Cornwall Health Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the non-executive directors of the Cornwall health trust requested assistance towards the cost of their defence on charges of libel; and what is her Department's response.

Dr. Mawhinney: Officials of the National Health Service Management Executive received a letter dated 26 January from the chief executive of the Cornwall Healthcare NHS trust asking that consideration be given to meeting the cost of the legal action against the trust's non-executive directors from central funds. Mr. J. H. Askham has recently been appointed as chairman of the Cornwall Healthcare NHS trust: officials will shortly be discussing with him the way forward for the trust.

Limb Defects

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations or research her Department is carrying out in respect of children who have been born in England and Wales during the last 10 years with missing or defective limbs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) on 1 March at column 678.

Disciplinary Procedures

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures her Department has to collect information from NHS trusts in regard to disciplinary action taken under the new procedure HC(90)9.

Dr. Mawhinney: We do not collect such information.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors accused of personal misconduct under the new procedure have appealed to the Secretary of State under paragraph 190(d) procedures, for each year since 1990; and of these how many cases were (a) dismissed, (b) settled through premature retirement and (c) reinstated.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received representations from two doctors under paragraph 190(d) of the "Terms and Conditions for Hospital Medical and Dental Staff (England and Wales)" to refer to a panel the question whether their appointment was terminated on the sole ground of personal misconduct. These representations were made in 1993 and the cases are still under consideration.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many doctors suspended from duty under the new procedure HC(90)9 for each year since 1990 have been suspended for (a) personal misconduct, (b) professional misconduct, (c) professional incompetence or (d) some other substantial reason;

(2) how many doctors suspended from duty under the new procedure HC(90)9, for each year since 1990, have had (a) internal hearings only and (b) full independent professional hearings under annex B HC(90)9 procedures; how many cases were dismissed; in how many cases settlements were made out of court involving premature retirement of the doctor; and how many were reinstated;

(3) how many doctors were suspended from duty under the new procedure HC(90)9 for each year since 1990 in each region.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. Decisions on disciplinary action for hospital doctors or dentists rest with the employing authority or trust. This includes the decision as to whether to suspend a practitioner.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors suspended from duty under the new procedure HC(90)9 have been refused a request for a paragraph 190 hearing because the original ground for dismissal was personal misconduct.

Dr. Mawhinney: Doctors who are suspended from duty cannot request a paragraph 190 hearing unless they are subsequently dismissed.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors dismissed under the new procedures HC(90)9, for each year since 1990, have appealed to the Secretary of State under paragraph 190 procedures; and of these how many cases were (a) dismissed, (b) settled through premature retirement and (c) reinstated.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of 11 appeals have been lodged by doctors eligible to appeal under paragraph 190 of the terms and conditions of service since the new procedures set out in HC(90)9 were introduced in March 1990. None of these appeals arose from the application of the procedures in HC(90)9.

Of these 11 appeals two were upheld, two were dismissed and one was withdrawn. The outcome of the remaining six appeals is not yet known.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums she has expended in each of the last five years for research into (a) the causes and (b) the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department is funding a resarch project to investigate long-term progression in rheumatoid arthritis and to study aetiology and prognostic factors. Departmental funding for this ongoing project began in 1980 at the clinical operational research unit—CORU—at University college London. The project is being funded in collaboration with pharmaceutical companies. The central funding is approximately £15,000 per year although this forms only part of the £327,975 allocated to CORU in 1993-94 to undertake its remit of studying applications of operational research and information technology to clinical aspects of health care.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council—MRC—which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to support on its own expert judgment

Psychiatric Care (Women's Wards)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will direct that health authority purchasers must ensure that women who are admitted to psychiatric hospitals are guaranteed care on a women-only ward if they request it.

Mr. Bowis: Our advice to health authorities contained in the "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook", copies of which are available in the Library, is that one of women's particular concerns is the choice of a single sex ward or single sex area. In addition the patients charter requires health authorities to provide services which respect patients' privacy, dignity and religious and cultural beliefs.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ask the Mental Health Act Commission to monitor arrangements made for the aftercare of patients covered by section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983, as recommended in the Ritchie report.

Mr. Bowis: We will consider this in consultation with the Mental Health Act Commission.

Abortions

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed on women who were less than 13 weeks pregnant (a) in each regional health authority and (b) in each district health authority, in England and Wales in 1992 and 1993; and how many of these operations involved admission and discharge of the patient on the same day.

Mr. Sackville: The information for 1992 will be placed in the Library. For reasons of confidentiality, statistics for district health authorities are presented by DHA of woman's usual residence, not by DHA of termination. Information for 1993 is not yet available.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many fee-paying private bed abortions were performed in NHS hospitals in each regional health authority in England and Wales in 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Sackville: Information on private abortions carried out in national health service hospitals is collected as part of the hospital episode statistics system. The quality and completeness of this data is at present inadequate to provide regional level data but analysis conducted so far indicates that in both 1991-92 and 1992-93 the proportion of all abortions carried out in NHS hospitals that were performed privately was approximately 1·5 per cent.

Osteoporosis

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding has been made available in each of the past five years to regional health authorities in London for screening osteoporosis; how many women in London have been screened for osteoporosis in each of the past five years; how many clinics exist in London for the specific purpose of screening for osteoporosis; and how many women in London have been diagnosed as suffering from osteoporosis in each of the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: There is no national population screening programme for osteoporosis and therefore no central funding as there is not yet evidence to show that such a programme would be effective. District health authorities are responsible for assessing need and for ensuring that suitable diagnostic services for individual women are made available.

Medical Product Licences

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the licensing authority responsible for granting product licences for parallel imports of medicines is currently subject to a legal challenge in the courts.

Mr. Sackville: On 26 January a pharmaceutical company in the United Kingdom was granted leave for a judical review of a decision by the Medicines Control Agency, on behalf of the licensing authority, to grant a parallel import product licence to a company to market a product imported from Belgium. The hearing is expected in April.

Blue-green Algae

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning the number of people in the North West Water region who are allergic to blue-green algae.

Mr. Sackville: None. The numbers of people with allergies are not available centrally.

Illnesses including skin rashes, eye irritation, vomiting, diarrhoea, fever and pains in muscles and joints have occurred in people who swam through or swallowed water with an algal scum. Very few reports of such occurrences have come from the United Kingdom. There have been no reports of long term effects or deaths in humans from such exposures.

In 1990, the Department advised that although algal scum is not always harmful, it is a sensible precaution to avoid contact with the scum and the water close to it.

Accommodation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the tenure of the Trent regional health authority headquarters' premises;

(2) what is the tenure of the Doncaster health authority headquarters' premises.

Mr. Sackville: Trent regional health authority headquarters is freehold. Doncaster health authority headquarters is leasehold for 125 years from 4 December 1992.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the average savings made by each fundholding practice in 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 17 January at column 387.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the resources of fundholding general practice is being used to purchase health provision from the private sector; what is her policy in respect of such purchasing; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 7 February at column 52.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities which have indicated to general practitioners an inability to fund extra-contractual referrals during the current financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for individual district health authorities. The National Health Service Management Executive has issued guidance to district health authorities who are expected to work closely with general practitioners in managing their budget for extra contractual referrals. Copies of the guidance contained in FDL(93)07 are available in the Library.

NHS Information

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will announce the results of the review of her Department's requirements for information from the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: We are anxious to do all we can to reduce further the number of forms which currently have to be filled in by national health service units and returned to the Department, as part of our statistical database.

We have already reduced and rationalised the contents of 21 different forms. A further five returns are being abolished, because the information they contain is now available from other sources.

In addition, I am pleased to announce that from 1 April this year the Department will no longer require returns giving the following information:

Form KH10—Radiotherapy Machine Activity;
Form KH13—Diagnostic Departments—Physiological Measurements;
Form KO39—Hospital Eye Services.

There is clearly a limit to the amount of information required by the Department and the NHS Management Executive on a national service regionally and locally administered. Moreover, release from the burden of filling in forms will give NHS units more time for activities which have a greater bearing on direct patient care.

All statistical returns from the NHS are being continually reviewed.

Michael Buchanan

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are the members of the inquiry team set up by the North West London mental health trust to investigate the care and treatment of Michael Buchanan, convicted of manslaughter after discharge from Shenley psychiatric hospital; and whether the report will be published.

Mr. Bowis: The membership of the independent inquiry panel is:

Mr. C. Heginbotham, Chief Executive, Riverside Mental Health Trust (Chairman);
Dr. R. Hale, Consultant Psychiatrist, Tavistock Clinic;
Mrs. L. Warren, Non-Executive Member, Brent and Harrow Health Authority;
Mr. T. Walsh, Assistant Director of Commissioning, Brent and Harrow Health Authority;
Mrs. J. Carr, Non-Executive Director, Parkside Health NHS Trust.

The report of this panel will be made public.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning of all types were recorded monthly in each year since 1988, by health authority.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available in the form requested. Data are published weekly, quarterly and annually by regional health authority, standard regions and local authority areas in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys MB2 series—Communicable disease statistics, copies of which are available in the Library.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many rules and regulations her Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the tables.

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of quangos for which she is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Sackville: This information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Library.

Peto Institute

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, (1) pursuant to her answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 597-98, what study her Department has made of the extent to which families and institutions in the United Kingdom now require the services of the proposed International Peto Institute in Budapest;

(2) what assessment her Department has made of whether the proposed International Peto Institute will deliver training to meet United Kingdom standards and requirements;

(3) when she will issue new briefing on conductive education;

(4) what assessment she has made of whether the Government's policy that conductive education should be available as an option within the system would be more effectively achieved by supporting the development of an equivalent facility in this country.

Mr. Bowis: The demand for the services of the proposed new International Peto Institute will become apparent when it comes into operation. Under the agreement between the United Kingdom and Hungarian Governments, the proposed new institute has to provide training in accordance with the standards established by the present Peto Institute. The Department of health has already provided funding under its section 64 scheme to the Birmingham Foundation for Conductive Education and the Hornsey centre. There are no current plans to issue guidance on conductive education.

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many self-financing regulatory authorities her Department or its predecessors has set up since 1979; what is the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; and what was the current staffing establishment at the latest available date, last year and two years ago.

Mr. Sackville: Since 1979, the Department has set up the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting as a self-financing regulatory body.

The total gross expenditure for 1992-93 was £8·657 million. Information on running costs for 1991-92 and 1990-91, and staffing for the last three years is detailed in "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Library.

London Health Authorities

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been treated by each health authority in (a) Inner London and (b) Greater London since March 1993; and what were the figures in each of the three previous years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not yet available for the period since March 1993. Information for previous years is published in "Ordinary and Day Case Admissions for England", copies of which are available in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Support

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of total agricultural support through direct payments is secured annually by (a) the largest 20 per cent. of farmers and (b) the smallest 20 per cent. of farmers.

Mr. Jack: I regret that the information is not available. While the farm business survey collects details of direct agricultural support payments from a sample of farms, it does not provide us with farm by farm returns which would be required to answer this question.

Horticultural Imports

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received about damage to United Kingdom growers caused by the importation of foreign horticultural produce, with particular reference to lettuces, tomatoes and cucumbers, at prices below the cost of production, packaging and transport; and what powers exist either in the United Kingdom or the European Community to prevent such market distortions whether caused by EC or non-EC member states.

Mr. Jack: The Department has received representations from the NFU and growers about difficulties in the markets for salad crops. Market management of horticultural crops is a matter for the Commission. However, under the transitional terms provided for in the treaty of accession, the Commission may take measures in the event of exports from Spain to the rest of the Community disrupting markets. Some horticultural produce, including tomatoes and cucumbers but not lettuces, are currently subject to a reference price system which establishes minimum import prices at certain times of the year for produce from third countries.

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many self-financing regulatory authorities her Department has set up since 1979; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment now; and what it was last year and two years ago.

Mr. Jack: Unfortunately this question could be answered only at disproportionate cost. I will write to the hon. Member to explain why this is the case.

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the number of quangos for which she is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Jack: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on parliamentary scrutiny of the use of public interest immunity certificates; what proposals he has to improve such scrutiny; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Scrutiny of public interest immunity certificates is a matter for the Courts in each case.

SCOTLAND

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Lang: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of statutory instruments, including orders, schemes, rules, and regulations but excluding instruments made jointly with other Departments, made by my Department in the years 1991, 1992 and 1993 are:

	Number
1991	307
1992	381
1993	346

Not all such instruments will have contained substantive regulatory provisions; information as to which instruments contained such provisions is not held centrally.

School Buildings

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the amount spent by each local education authority in Scotland on the repair and maintenance of school buildings in (a) 1978-79, (b) 1984-85 and (c) in each year since 1989-90 at constant 1993 prices.

Mr. Lang: The available information is given in the tables. The capital figures in table 2 include expenditure on new building work as well as on repairs and maintenance, information on which is not recorded separately.

Notes:

1. The figures in table 1 have been compiled from local authority financial returns and in table 2 from capital payment returns submitted by local authorities to the Scottish Office. Both sets of figures have been adjusted to 1992-93 prices using the GDP deflator.
2. Generally capital expenditure (table 2) is less in later years compared with 1978-79. This reflects a substantial and progressive decline in school pupil numbers which has reduced the requirement for new school building.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has yet determined the level of fee remission grant which will be available to parents under the assisted places scheme in school session 1994-95.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is making £10·251 million available for fee remission in 1994-95. Fifty-five schools across Scotland will participate in the scheme. This funding should enable the number of pupils currently benefiting to be maintained at slightly above 3,000.

Sea Birds

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information he has on the number and species of birds found dead recently on the east coast of Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 March 1994]: The Institute for Terrestrial Ecology, under contract to the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, is investigating levels of heavy metals and pesticide residues in samples of dead sea birds beached recently. Initial results indicate no significant level of contamination.

Surveys of beached birds are carried out by various organisations and I understand that post mortems have been carried out to determine the general condition of dead birds. In many cases birds have been found to have suffered starvation.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigations are under way on the causes of deaths of sea birds on the east coast of Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 March 1994]: The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds organised a survey of dead birds on beaches in east Scotland on the weekend of 26 and 27 February. The number of dead birds recorded was nearly 6,400, which is four times higher than a similar count last year.

Eighty per cent. of birds found were guillemots, but other prominent species were shag and razorbill. The total number of dead birds will never be known exactly, but an estimate of 50,000 total fatalities is still valid.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which forests have been sold by the Forestry Commission in each of the last five years; to whom they were sold; for how much they were sold; and to what use they were put after sale.

Sir Hector Monro: Lists giving details of the areas of forest land sold by the Forestry Commission from the start of the disposals programme in July 1981 to December 1992 are held in the Library of the House. The lists provide the name of the purchaser and the price paid where the purchaser has agreed that this information can be made public. The Commission is compiling a list of the areas sold in 1993 and a copy will be placed in the Library shortly. The Commission does not maintain records of the subsequent use of the woodlands it sells. However, woodlands cannot normally be converted to another use without planning permission.

Freshwater Fishing Rights

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list full details, including the price of the lease from the Forestry Commission, of the freshwater fishing rights, excluding salmon, on Loch Awe and Loch Avich; and for what reasons the lease was not put up for public auction.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission's fishing rights on Loch Awe and Loch Avich are leased to the Loch Awe Improvement Association for three years from 1 May 1992. The rent is £1 per annum; the association manages the fishings on behalf of the commission and issues day permits to the public.

The lease was not offered on the open market because the commission considered that a lease to the association would be more successful in conserving the fish stocks and increasing the availability of authorised fishing for freshwater fish in the lochs, in accordance with the objectives of the Loch Awe and Associated Waters Protection Order 1992.

Motorways

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned in Scotland either (i) as new motorway or (ii) as existing motorway being widened.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland there are 159 miles of trunk road motorway and a further 15 miles on non-trunk motorway, responsibility for which lies with local authorities.

Twenty-two miles of new motorway is currently under construction, with a further 58 miles of new motorway planned.

Much of the motorway network constructed in the 1960s and 1970s is reaching the end of its structural life and requires major maintenance or reconstruction. Some of this work may involve widening.

Health Care International

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what system he has to monitor adherence to the conditions of authorisation as set out in the annex of the letter of authorisation for the Health Care International hospital at Clydebank dated 6 October 1987 and signed by N. S. Munro, assistant secretary, Scottish Home and Health Department.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Office has regular contact with senior representatives of HCI. These discussions cover matters relevant to the development of the hospital at Clydebank, including those specified in the authorisation.

Outdoor Education Centres

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names, location and county of each of the outdoor education centres in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

GPs (Drug Sales)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the annual value of sales of Adifax, Tenuate, Dospan and Duromine direct to general practitioners;

(2) what plans he has to control the supply of dangerous drugs direct to general practitioners.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 March 1994]: This information is not available. The sale of medicinal products direct to GPs for private purposes is outwith the national health service.

The supply of dangerous drugs direct to general practitioners is already strictly regulated under the provisions of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and its subordinate legislation. Under regulations 9(4)(a) and 14(2) of the Misuse of Drugs Regulations 1985, an authorised supplier may supply schedule 3 drugs to a general practitioner only upon receipt of a written requisition.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will investigate allegations as to the sale of addictive dangerous drugs to general practitioners and their subsequent sale to customers for slimming purposes, without medical examination, at prices far in excess of the cost to the NHS;

(2) what safeguards are in place to protect patients from being given addictive, hallucinogenic drugs for slimming purposes, without prior medical examination or control and supervision.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 March 1994]: If an allegation is made that a GP working within the NHS has breached his/her terms of service, it would be for the health board to consider in the first instance. The subsequent disciplinary procedure may involve the Secretary of State or the General Medical Council—GMC—at a later stage. Allegations of professional misconduct against a medical practitioner, whether or not he/she is working within the NHS, should be directed to the GMC.

The safeguards in place to protect patients are as follows.

All practising doctors in the United Kingdom must be registered with the GMC. A doctor found guilty of serious professional misconduct such as the prescription or supply of dependence—inducing drugs other than in the course of bone fide treatment, can be struck off or suspended from the register of the GMC.

Also, detailed and specific guidance on the prescribing of drugs likely to cause dependence is provided in the British National Formulary—BNF—which is published jointly by the British Medical Association and the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. The BNF is provided free of charge to all GPs within the NHS.

Glasgow development agency

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate the withdrawal of Glasgow development agency funding from projects in the city; and if he will take steps to ensure the loss of this money is made up.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 March 1994]: The question of funding support from the local enterprise company for individual projects in the city of Glasgow is a matter for Glasgow development agency.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Glasgow development agency has to reduce funding to (a) the Glasgow regeneration fund, (b) Glasgow works and (c) the Glasgow education business partnership.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 March 1994]: This is a matter for the local enterprise company, which I am sure will be happy to discuss the matter with the hon. Member.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate the reasons for Glasgow development agency's withdrawal of funding from Firhill business centre; and if he will take steps to save the project.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 March 1994]: The organisation, decision making and performance of Glasgow development agency are matters for the board of the local enterprise company itself, and for Scottish Enterprise.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate the reasons for Glasgow development agency's withdrawal of funding from Firhill business centre; and if he will take steps to save the project.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 March 1994]: The level of support which Glasgow development agency provides for the Firhill business centre is a matter for the local enterprise company, but my right hon. Friend is not aware of any decision on its part to withdraw funding.

Dentistry

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount spent per child on general dental services, including in the calculation those not registered with a general dental practitioner.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 March 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

General dental service expenditure on children in Scotland: 1992-93

(a) Gross expenditure (£000)	(b) Number of registered children	(c) Number of children in the population	(d) Cost per registered child (£)	(e) Cost per child in the population (£)
29,626	702,037	1,153,147	42·20	25·69

Notes:

1. The gross expenditure on general dental services (GDS) in column (a) comprises capitation payments, weighted entry payments, child item of service payments for treatments given under capitation, and child item of service payments for treatments given on an occasional basis in the financial year 1992-93.
2. Column (b) is the number of children registered with a general dental practitioner (GDP) at September 1992.
3. Column (c) is for June 1992.
4. Children may also be treated in the community or hospital dental services as well as in the general dental service. Children who are not registered with a GDP may receive GDS treatment on an occasional basis.

5. There is also some non-fee expenditure on general dental services (eg, reimbursement of non-domestic rates, maternity payments, and employer's superannuation payments) which cannot be apportioned between child and adult treatments. In the financial year 1992-93, this represented approximately 4 per cent. of expenditure on the GDS.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department spends on child-care provision for the under-fives and out-of-school provision for children aged over five either directly, excluding provision for departmental staff, or indirectly through resources made available to local authorities or other organisations; what form of provision is thereby provided; how many places are thereby provided; and if he will make a statement on child care.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Good quality day care has a valuable part to play in the development of young children. Out-of-school care can help older children to develop a broad range of interests and to adopt a positive approach to the use of their leisure time.

The Scottish Office supports the provision of various forms of day care through the urban programme and through grants under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. In 1993-94 almost £7 million has been made available from these sources. Grants for out-of-school care projects are also available through local enterprise companies under the initiative launched last year by the Secretary of State for Employment.

Within the local authority expenditure settlement for 1993-94 provision of £30·37 million was made for day care for children.

The latest available information about the form and level of day care provision in Scotland is contained in the Scottish Office Bulletin "Services for Children 1991 and 1992", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in each year since 1990.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 March 1994]: In 1993, I signed two public interest immunity certificates and in each of the other years none.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 March 1994]: Such purchases are included within my Department's overall administration expenditure which is published every year in the annual report.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many bottles of (a) whisky and gin and (b) sherry and port were consumed by his private offices in 1993-94.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 March 1994]: Detailed information of this sort could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people have died each year in Scotland from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease over the past five years;

(2) if he will list the dates and locations of each death in Scotland from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease over the past five years and the respective dates on which the Department of Health's Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease surveillance units were first notified of each suspected case; and in any case where notification was not provided before death, if he will explain why notification was not provided earlier;

(3) what is his Department's procedure for notifying health authorities of suspected cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 March 1994]: The number of people in Scotland who have died from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (CJD) in each of the past five years is as follows:

	Definite	Probable	Possible
1989	5	—	—
1990	3	—	—
1991	5	—	—
1992	4	—	—
1993	5	2	2

The location of deaths from CJD, both definite and probable, for the period 1 May 1990 to 30 April 1993 is given in figure 1 of the second annual report of the CJD surveillance unit. Of the cases notifed to the CJD surveillance unit before death, this occurred on average 61 days before death. However, in five cases diagnosis was made at post mortem by the CJD surveillance unit's dedicated pathology laboratory. This is an important source of data for the unit as there is no diagnostic test for CJD in life.

There is no departmental procedure for notifying health boards of suspected cases of CJD, since the information would already be known to the clinician involved in the case. Information on suspected cases is available from the unit's annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Attorney-General how much the Law Officer's Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, column 783.

The Solicitor-General: The Departments for which I am responsible have no computer-aided facilities management systems in place.

Mr. Paul Bennett

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what representations he received from agencies of either the Government of South Africa, or the prosecution or judicial authorities of South Africa prior to committal proceedings against Mr. Paul Bennett;

(2) what representations he received from agencies of either the United States Government or the United States prosecution or judicial authorities prior to committal proceedings against Mr. Paul Bennett.

The Attorney-General: None.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General why a public immunity interest certificate was originally applied in the case of Paul Bennett; in what circumstances; and for what reason it was subsequently lifted.

The Attorney-General: Paul James Bennett was committed for trial on 22 May 1991 at Southwark Crown court by the Horseferry Road magistrates court. He then sought judicial review of the committal on the ground that he had been brought within the jurisdiction in circumstances which were unlawful.

The applicant sought discovery of a number of documents relating to communications between police forces or prosecuting authorities, both in this country and abroad, in connection with the detention and investigation of crime and the apprehension of offenders. That is a class of document which ordinarily attracts public interest immunity and in July 1992 the then Home Secretary signed a public interest immunity certificate in respect of those documents. In the event the question of disclosure did not arise for decision at that stage because the divisional court dismissed the application for judicial review on the ground that it had no power to inquire into the circumstances by which a person had been brought within the jurisdiction.

That ruling was the subject of a successful appeal to the House of Lords, which remitted the case to the divisional court on 24 June 1993. That court considered the question of disclosure on 19 October 1993. The Crown agreed on the advice of counsel that the court should be invited to order discovery of the documents, on the ground that they went to the heart of a factual dispute which had by then been made material by the decision of the House of Lords. The court upheld the claim for public interest immunity, but accepted that, in the circumstances of the particular case, the balance of the competing public interests lay in disclosure.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Eggar: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

Aid and Trade

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which aid and trade provision projects approved for Indonesia since 1979 could be used to support military activity; and what monitoring takes place of whether aid and trade provision projects are used to support Indonesian military activity.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply. The majority of the aid and trade provision allocations in Indonesia have been for civil infrastructure, e.g. for electricity generation, railways development and the provision of bridging materials. We have also supported projects for a wide range of other purposes, e.g. coal mining and improvement of university science facilities. None of the projects we have supported is designed to support military activity and we have no indication that any have been so used. Frequent monitoring visits to assess progress in implementation and ex-post project evaluation visits have not indicated any evidence of military use.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the Government's best estimates of the number of jobs created within the United Kingdom as a direct result of support provided to projects in developing countries under the aid and trade provision in each of the last five years; and if he will explain the method by which these estimates have been reached.

Mr. Needham: Projects supported by ATP have created a significant number of United Kingdom jobs since the scheme's inception in 1977-78. The precise number is difficult to estimate. This information could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which British firms have benefited from aid and trade provision assistance; by how much; and for what projects in Malaysia and Indonesia in each year since 1979.

Mr. Needham: For a detailed list of all ATP projects, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 28 October 1993, Official Report, column 732.

Malaysia (Contracts)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated value of confirmed United Kingdom contracts and contracts presently under negotiation with Malaysian authorities; and how many British jobs are involved.

Mr. Needham: It is not possible to give precise figures. But exports worth hundreds of millions of pounds have been under discussion, involving thousands of jobs.

Ryrie Rules

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the Ryrie rules are applied to each agency and enterprise for which he is responsible.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ryrie rules were abolished in 1989.

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Darling: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 575, what information he has as to whether the Official Receiver intends to apply for the suspension of the discharge of the bankruptcy of Mr. Asil Nadir.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Official Receiver is taking legal advice on matters relating to a possible application under Section 279(3) of the Insolvency Act 1986 for the suspension of Mr. Nadir's automatic discharge from bankruptcy. The Official Receiver expects to be able to make a decision in the light of that advice in the near future.

World Trade Organisation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers the World Trade Organisation will have once the general agreement on tariffs and trade is ratified to require a country that refuses to bring its legislation into line with a GATT ruling to change its laws.

Mr. Needham: The proposed World Trade Organisation (WTO) will have no powers to compel members to bring domestic legislation into conformity with the adverse findings of dispute settlement proceedings. In such circumstances, the member would be able to choose between bringing measures into conformity with WTO rules, offering compensatory market access concessions—either temporary or permanent—or accepting retaliatory withdrawal of market access concessions by the aggrieved member. Both compensatory and retaliatory measures would be proportional to the impairment involved—there is no punitive or coercive element.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what role he envisages for the World Trade Organisation once the GATT is ratified.

Mr. Needham: The proposed World Trade Organisation (WTO) will organise and help give effect to the structure of rules and market access commitments agreed among its prospective members in the course of the Uruguay round, as well as providing a forum for future trade negotiations as its members see fit. Each member of the WTO will itself be responsible for following those rules and implementing its market access commitments, assisted by the WTO secretariat. The secretariat will be fully accountable to WTO members.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the World Trade Organisation will be democratically accountable.

Mr. Needham: The proposed World Trade Organisation (WTO) will provide an institutional structure to give effect to the rules and market access commitments agreed between prospective members of the WTO in the Uruguay round. As such it will be fully accountable to its members.

Engineering Products

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the United Kingdom output of engineering products in the fourth quarter of each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is provided in the following table:

United Kingdom output of Engineering Products[1]

Year	Index of production Base year: 1990=100 (seasonally adjusted)
1979-Q4	86·1
1980-Q4	74·8

Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the percentage change in imports of finished manufactures since 1973; what has been the change in United Kingdom production and exports of finished manufactures; and what has been the effect on manufacturing employment.

Mr. Needham: Between 1970 and 1993 the value of United Kingdom imports of finished manufactures increased by 1,450 per cent. Over the same period, the value of exports of finished manufactures increased by 985 per cent.

Due to major differences between the industrial and trade classifications, it is not possible to provide comparable information on United Kingdom production and employment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, on current trends, United Kingdom manufacturing output will exceed the 1989 level by the end of the century.

Mr. Sainsbury: On the basis of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", manufacturing output is likely to pass its 1989 level within the next year and a half.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what figures for the terms of trade of manufactured goods from 1979 to date he is using for his study of the competitiveness of British manufacturing; and if he will publish these figures.

Mr. Needham: The terms of trade can be readily derived from unit value indices held on the Central Statistical Office database, which can be accessed from the Library of the House.

Single Market

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence he has that United Kingdom manufacturers generally have gained more than they have lost as a result of the single market.

Mr. Needham: One year on from the completion of the single market framework, it is too early for a full assessment of its effect on United Kingdom manufacturers. It will take some time for companies fully to adjust to the single market changes and to exploit all the new opportunities. This is true for all member states: thus the European Commission will not be producing an assessment of the economic impact of the single market until 1996.

Nonetheless, a number of surveys indicate that British firms are already benefiting from the single market. For example, a CBI survey in November 1993 found that 68 per cent. of United Kingdom companies interviewed were experiencing greater opportunities for trade with the rest of the European Community now, compared with five years ago.

In 1992 Customs and Excise produced an analysis of the costs and benefits to business as a result of changes under the single market customs, VAT, excise and trade statistics regimes. They have recently, as part of a single market implementation review involving consultation with about 1,000 businesses, carried out an initial validation of the cost/benefit analysis. This confirms the original assessment that there should be an overall net benefit to United Kingdom business of at least £440 million during the first five years. Additional benefits, arising from increased trade opportunities and the scope for efficiencies in transport units and stock levels, which were not included in the initial analysis, were also identified.

Japan

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will urge the Japanese Government to reduce its export surplus by allowing the exchange rate to rise without imposing other impediments on trade.

Mr. Needham: The Japanese trade surplus is due to structural economic factors including the persistently high savings rate in Japan. Changes in the yen parity will be conditioned by market factors. We and our Community partners urge the Japanese Government to stimulate demand in the economy and to increase imports by macro-economic means such as the recent package of fiscal measures, and by introducing an effective programme of deregulation in the Japanese economy.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of United Kingdom overseas investment in 1979; and what it was in 1993.

Mr. Needham: Information for 1979 is published in table 8.2 of "The Pink Book 1990, United Kingdom Balance of Payments". Information for 1993 is available only up to the third quarter. I refer the hon. Gentleman to "First Release, Balance of trade with countries outside the EC November 1993, Central Statistical Office, (94)191", table G. Both publications are available in the Library of the House.

Post Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for south Yorkshire the post offices currently being considered by the Post Office for franchising.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that no post offices in south Yorkshire are currently being considered for franchising.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which post offices in south Yorkshire are still under the authority of the Post Office.

Mr. McLouglin: I understand from the Post Office that there are four directly-managed Crown post offices in south Yorkshire at Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield. In addition there are some 380 post offices with agency status in the county.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices in south Yorkshire have been franchised in each year since the introduction of the policy.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers of post offices which have been franchised in south Yorkshire are as follows:

1992	1
1993	2
1994 (to date)	1

Of these, three resulted from Crown office conversions and one from the transfer of an agency office to a franchisee.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post and sub-post offices have been given agency status in south Yorkshire; and if he will list them.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that six Crown post offices have been converted to agency status in south Yorkshire. These are:

Wombwell
West street Sheffield
The Moor Sheffield
Mexborough
Hillsborough
Leopold street, Sheffield.

SL Homes Ltd.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the directors of SL Homes Ltd. last notified to Companies house;

(2) what is the date of filing and the financial period covered by the most recent accounts filed by the company SL Homes Ltd.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Chief Executive of Companies House Executive Agency for which my Department is responsible. I have therefore asked Mr. Durham to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Durham to Mr. David Shaw, dated 14 March 1994:

The latest list of directors of SL Homes Limited notified to Companies House is as follows:

Morris Aitchison
William Drummond
William McCracken
Harry Sneddon Miller (resigned 20 August 1993)
James McLean Chalmers
John Davidson
Brian John Dempsey
William Paterson
John Scullion

The most recent accounts filed by SL Homes Limited cover the financial period 1 January 1991 to 31 December 1991 and were delivered to Companies House on 9 October 1992.

The accounts to 31 December 1992 were due to be delivered by 31 October 1993 but are still outstanding. A default letter was issued to the company at its registered office address on 5 November 1993 informing the company that the accounts were outstanding. As a response was not received, a second letter was issued to the same address on 8 March 1994 in which the company was asked whether it is still in business or operation, to date we have not received a reply to this letter either. We now propose to issue final reminders to each director at their homes addresses.

I hope this information is of help to you.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade following the letter to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, from the Minister for Trade of 17 February, if he will publish in the Official Report a correction to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 228-29.

Mr. Needham: My letter of 17 February to the hon. Member has already been placed in the Library of the House. It corrected an omission from the list of witnesses to have appeared before the Scott inquiry in open session, provided in my answer to the hon. Member of 8 February, Official Report, columns 228-29. Mr. Stephen Day, formerly an official of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, appeared before the inquiry on 4 May 1993.

Haulage Contractors

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with insurance companies concerning the impact of increased insurance premiums on haulage contractors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None. This is a matter for the commercial judgment of individual insurance companies, with which the Government cannot interfere.

Nuclear Review

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what undertakings were given in respect of the timing of the nuclear review in response to the first report of the Trade and Industry Select Committee of Session 1992-93 on the future of British energy policy and the market for coal; when he now expects the review to begin; with what remit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 16 December 1993, Official Report, columns 759-60 to the hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant).

Energy Industries

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what resources are committed to the monitoring of the performance of the publicly owned energy industries, to which reference is made at page 50 of his departmental annual report 1994, and expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm 2504.

Mr. Eggar: The information is contained within part 5 of MINIS 93, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's contribution to the jointly funded programme promoting research into waste recycling and cleaner technologies to which reference is made at page 33 of his departmental annual report and expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm 2504.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department has committed £11·2 million under grant schemes which closed to new applications during 1993 to support research and demonstration of innovative environmental technology. On 7 December 1993, Official Report, column 149 my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced a successor joint programme with the Department of the Environment which would have the aim of encouraging the adoption by industry of best practice in environmental technology and techniques. The Department will be contributing £11 million to this £16 million programme which is due to run for five years.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. McLoughlin: No agency chief executive in this Department is currently paid more than £82,925.

Coal Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the sources of coal imported in 1993 by volume.

Mr. Eggar: Imports of coal by country of origin in 1993 were:

	Thousand tonnes
USA	4,288
Australia	4,105
Colombia	2,453
Poland	1,712
South Africa	781
Russia	713
Canada	632
Other extra EC	694
Intra EC[1]	3,022
Total Imports	18,400

Source: HM Customs and Excise.

[1] Following the introduction of the "Intrastat" system for collecting data on trade with our EC partners, the figure for Intra EC trade involves some estimation of unrecorded imports. It also includes an estimated proportion of imports routed to the United Kingdom via other EC countries.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of coal imported in 1993.

Mr. Eggar: The value of coal imported in 1993 is estimated as £687 million this includes types of coal which are not mined in the United Kingdom.

Following the introduction of the "Intrastat" system for collecting data on trade with our EC partners, this value involves some estimation of unrecorded imports. It may, therefore, be subject to greater subsequent revision than figures collected on the previous basis.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what ways he plans to amend the individual divisional objectives in each of his departments to reflect the Government's commitment to deregulation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 15 March 1994]: The reduction of regulatory and administrative burdens on business is one of the Department's overall objectives. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is using the management information for Ministers—MINIS —system to ensure that divisional objectives reflect this as appropriate.

Distillers plc

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to publish his Department's inspector's report on the takeover of Distillers plc by Guinness plc in 1986.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 15 March 1994]: The inspectors have not yet been able to conclude their enquiries and in consequence have not submitted a final report. When they do it will be considered for publication.

Office of Water Services, Yorkshire

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what indication he has received from Eric Wilson on his proposed appointment as the chairman of OFWAT's Yorkshire customer services committee; what representations he has received concerning the decision not to reappoint Dianne Scott to the chair of the committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 March 1994]: The appointment of the chairman of OFWAT's Yorkshire customer service committee is a matter for the Director General of Water Services after consultation with my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. I understand that no representations have been received by the President following the announcement of the appointment of Mr. Eric Wilson to the chair of this committee.

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many members of OFWAT's Yorkshire customer services committee have, to date, tendered their resignation; what indications he has received from other members of their intention to resign from the committee; how many places on the committee are currently vacant; and what is the recommended total membership of the committee.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 March 1994]: These are matters for the Director General of Water Services.

Vehicle Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the percentage change in the levels of exports of buses, coaches and mini-buses between 1988 and 1992; what were corresponding figures for United Kingdom (i) imports and (ii) exports from Germany, Italy, Belgium, Sweden, Spain and France; which countries accounted for the bulk of the change in United Kingdom exports; and when he expects United Kingdom exports to reach their 1988 level.

Mr. Needham: The available data are published by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders Limited in the annual series of "Motor Industry of Great Britain, World Automotive Statistics". Data for United Kingdom exports of buses and coaches, defined as vehicles with 10 seats or more, in total and by country can be found in table 62; the equivalent for imports is in table 91. This publication is available in the Library of the House. My Department does not forecast the balance of payments.

DEFENCE

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, column 821.

Mr. Aitken: Information on computer-aided facilities management systems in my Department is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, a computerised system known as the works information management system, is currently being introduced in MOD headquarters buildings in Whitehall, Bath and Glasgow, principally to provide a register of assets in accordance with Government accounting regulations. The system is operated under licence from Pierce Management Services and is being commissioned on behalf of my Department by Building and Property Facilities Management Ltd. at an estimated cost of £357,000, of which £253,260 has been spent to date. It is not possible to identify the hours spent on commissioning the system nor the savings from its operation, since it is not yet fully operational.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the Defence Export Services Organisation; and what its annual expenditure was in each of the last five years.

Mr. Aitken: The Defence Export Services Organisation exists to help British defence manufacturers market and sell their products abroad, within the parameters laid down by Government policy, and to dispose of surplus MOD equipment. The net cost of the organisation in 1993-94 is expected to be some £16·3 million. Changes in accounting conventions make exact comparisons with earlier years difficult.

Agency Chief Executives

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian agency chief executives in his Department are currently paid more than £82,925, excluding performance-related bonuses; and whether such chief executives were recruited directly to their present post from outside the civil service.

Mr. Hanley: The chief executive of the Defence Research Agency is the one chief executive in my Department who earns more than £82,925 per annum. He was recruited from outside the civil service.

Arms Sales

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arms or defence-related equipment have been sold to the Philippines in each year since 1986.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our policy to reveal details of arms sales to individual countries.

Military Training

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many fatalities occurred during static line training between 1970 and 1990; how many of them were head injury cases; and how many were reservists or Territorial Army members.

Mr. Hanley: There were five fatalities during the course of military static line training between 1970 and 1990, one of which resulted from injuries to the head. Four of these fatalities involved reservists or members of the territorial army.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many deaths there were at the military training drop zone at West-on-the Green in the period 1975 to 1983; and what were the dates of each incident.

Mr. Hanley: There were four fatal accidents in the course of military parachute training at the drop zone at Weston-on-the-Green during the period 1978 to 1983. These occurred on 30 March 1978, 13 June 1978, 20 June 1979 and 16 September 1981. Static line parachute jumps were being performed in all four cases.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which is the largest civilian aircraft that could be landed at RAF Finningley in normal operating conditions.

Mr. Hanley: The runway, taxiways and parking area at Finningley are capable of normal use by aircraft of up to the size and weight classification of the Boeing 747. However, the operation of aircraft of this size is currently constrained by ground obstacles adjacent to the taxiways.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the length of the runway at RAF Finningley; and how many (a) civilian and (b) military aircraft have landed or taken off from RAF Finningley for each of the last four years and the current year to date.

Mr. Hanley: RAF Finningley has a single runway, RW 20/02, which is 2,744·5 m in length. Civilian and military aircraft movements to or from Finningley in the past three years and the current year to date are as follows; figures for 1990 are not available:

Year	Civilian aircraft movements	Military aircraft movements[1]
1991	17	45,000
1992	16	60,000
1993	20	61,000
1994[2]	4	9,300

[1] Approximate.
[2] To date.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what scope there is to extend the existing runways at RAF Finningley within the aerodrome's existing curtilage.

Mr. Hanley: There is 800 ft of land between the airfield boundary and the threshold of the runway at Finningley. However, the use of this space for a runway extension is not considered practical, partly because of the obstacle presented to aircraft taking off or approaching by the railway line immediately outside the airfield's northern boundary, and partly because the land in question is low-lying and would therefore require extensive works to render it suitable for a runway extension.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which is the largest (a) military and (b) civilian aircraft to have landed, or taken off, from RAF Finningley during the last 10 years.

Mr. Hanley: The largest military aircraft to have landed at, or taken off from, RAF Finningley during the last 10 years is a Lockheed C5 Galaxy, and the largest civilian aircraft to have done so is Concorde.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total annual cost of running the aerodrome at RAF Finningley.

Mr. Hanley: For financial year 1993-94 the estimated running costs for RAf Finningley are £30,700,000. This includes the operating costs of units based at or run from RAF Finningley, as well as the operating costs of the airfield.

Runway Capacity

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the airports and aerodromes in Yorkshire and Humberside that his Department owns or controls, other than RAF Finningley, what scope there is to extend the existing runways within the airports or aerodromes existing curtilage.

Mr. Hanley: The runways in question could in principle be extended by the following distances:

	Runway	Metres
RAF Leeming (only one operational runway)		1,000
RAF Linton-on-Ouse	RW 04	100
	RW 22	350
	RW 28	220
	RW 10	60
Church Fenton	RW 06	Nil
	RW 24	360
	RW 16	120
	RW 34	Nil
Dishforth	RW 34	150
	RW 16	Nil
	RW 28	(after levelling) 320
	RW 10	Nil
Topcliffe	No extension is possible at Topcliffe; the runways are due to be reduced in length to accommodate Army training requirements

Apart from RAF Leeming, all figures assume that runway approach lighting could be placed on adjacent farmland.

Airport Running Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the airports or aerodromes that his Department owns or controls in Yorkshire and Humberside, other than RAF Finningley, the total annual cost of running them.

Mr. Hanley: For financial year 1993-94 the total running costs for RAF Leeming and RAF Linton-on-Ouse are estimated at £54,760,000 and £20,300,000 respectively. The figure for RAF Linton-on-Ouse includes the cost of running the relief landing grounds at Church Fenton, Dishforth and Topcliffe.

Airports and Aerodromes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the area of each of the airports or aerodromes that his Department owns or controls in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Hanley: The total area of each site is as follows:

RAF Leeming	474

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of his Minister of State for the Armed Forces' visit to south Yorkshire on 27 January; what locations he visited; with whom he had discussions; what notification of his visit was given to hon. Members who have constituencies in south Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I visited Menwith Hill station, in north Yorkshire, on 27 January 1994. I received briefings on the current role of the station from various United States and United Kingdom personnel including the chief of station. I gave advance notice of this visit to my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), in whose constituency Menwith Hill station is situated.

European Regional Development Grant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what use his Department has, or plans to, put the £1,000,000 allocated by the European regional development fund grant listed in table 1 on cash plans of his Department for 1993-94, in his departmental annual report and expenditure plans, 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm. 2501.

Mr. Hanley: The EC grant listed at table 1—Cash Plans—of Cm. 2501 reflects the payment during 1993-94 of the sum of £1,375,000 to the Royal British Legion as a contribution towards the design and construction of their joint services training and resettlement centre at Tidworth. The purpose of this grant is to provide job-related training for ex-service personnel and the wives and dependants of service personnel based in the Tidworth area, and for civilians in the local community.

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many self-financing regulatory authorities his Department has set up since 1979; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment; and what it was last year and two years ago.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has not set up any self-financing regulatory authorities since 1979.

Quangos

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of quangos for which he is responsible; how much in public funds has been given to each quango in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment of each quango; and what it was five years ago.

Mr. Hanley: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993" and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies of all editions are available in the Libraries of the House.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has not been responsible for any secondary legislation with a regulatory impact on business in the last three years.

Sir Bedivere

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to invite tenders for the refitting of Royal Fleet Auxiliary Ship Sir Bedivere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: RFA Sir Bedivere is presently the subject of a competition for a ship life extension programme as opposed to a programmed refit. An invitation to tender for Sir Bedivere's SLEP was issued on 26 November 1993 and tender return date is 24 March 1994.

Landing Platform Dock

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the project definition studies for the landing platform dock began; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: There have been two phases of project definition studies for the landing platform dock replacement. Initial project definition studies began in November 1991 and were completed in early 1993. A second phase commenced in May 1993 and is due to complete this spring. We will then take a decision on the issuing of an invitation to tender for the design and build of the first of class.

Malaysia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence project team's advice under the Malaysian memorandum of understanding, on the reasonableness of prices quoted by United Kingdom suppliers was based on the final delivered price in Malaysia.

Mr. Aitken: The advice given was on a Government-to-Government basis and as such is confidential.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which activities of United Kingdom suppliers are being monitored by the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence project team under the Malaysian memorandum of understanding.

Mr. Aitken: The MOD project team monitors progress on those contracts designated under the MOU.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has not been asked to provide advice on negotiations.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence project team set up under the Malaysian memorandum of understanding; how much of the cost will be covered by the management fee; and what are the component costs of the project team.

Mr. Aitken: The cost of the project team is funded entirely from the management fee.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial Studies Board

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many advisory committees, in addition to the Ethnic Minorities Advisory Committee, operate under the auspices of the Judicial Studies Board; what are their terms of reference; and if he will list the members and chairpersons of each of these advisory committees, including the Ethnic Minorities Advisory Committee.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Ethnic Minorities Advisory Committee is the only advisory committee of the Judicial Studies Board.

The current membership of EMAC is:

Mr. Justice Brooke (Chairman)
Mr. Trevor Hall (Vice-Chairman)
Ms Kamlesh Bahl
Professor Michael Banton JP
Mrs. Jasu Chatwani
Judge Gerald Coles QC
Ms Shirley Daniel
Mrs. Sylvia Denman CBE
Mr. Navnit Dholakia OBE, JP
Mr. Peter Herbert
Dr. Zaka Ullah Khan OBE, JP
Judge Nicholas Medawar QC
Mr. Goolam Meeran
Ms Patricia Scotland QC
Professor Avrom Sherr
Mr. Ranjit Sondhi

Judges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judges were educated at independent schools; and what proportion this is of the total in England.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Aggregated information relating to the schools attended by judges is not readily available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what statistics he has of the political allegiance of judges in England.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Statistics are not kept on political affiliation. Judges are appointed without regard to political affiliation and members of the full-time judiciary may not engage in political activity.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average number of hours per week a judge works in court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he has taken to implement (a) the progressive introduction of open advertisements for some judicial vacancies and (b) other reform measures he advocated in his Department's press notice 158.93 of 7 July 1993 on improvements in the judicial appointments system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In his speech to Her Majesty's Judges at the Guildhall on 7 July 1993 the Lord Chancellor said that because of the wide range of issues involved and the extensive preparatory work which his programme would entail, it would be some time before all the measures could be introduced over the whole field of judicial appointments. That work is currently in progress, and an announcement will be made as soon as practicable.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates in England have declared political allegiances; and if he will provide an analysis.

Mr John M. Taylor: This information can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to allow those whose applications to become magistrates are rejected to know the reasons for their rejection.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No proposals are required. Candidates are informed of the result of their applications and it is open to anyone not satisfied to seek further reasons from the local advisory committee. The desirability of balancing benches in terms of age, gender, ethnic origin, political affiliation and occupation means that many otherwise suitable applicants are not appointed.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what considerations underlie the requirement on prospective magistrates to state their political allegiances.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor does not wish that any bench should become, or remain, unduly overweighted with the supporters of any one political party. It is for this reason that political allegiances are sought, but they are not a qualification or disqualification for appointment and candidates are not required to disclose this information. The key consideration for appointment is that a candidate should be suitable.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Details of the numbers of staff employed in each civil service grade are set out in the table. In column 2 of the table the total number of staff employed in each grade appears; column 3 shows the percentage of women in each grade.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will provide whatever information is available of those occasions on which he, or other Ministers in his Department, now or in the past, have signed public interest immunity certificates since 1979; and for what reasons.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No public interest immunity certificates have been signed either by me or by the Lord Chancellor since our appointments. Otherwise, the information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many cases since 1990 judges have been asked to consider a public interest immunity certificate.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Legal Aid

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps have been or may be taken against solicitors and counsel who do not ensure that an unsuccessful legally aided litigant is ordered to pay costs.

Mr. John M. Taylor: An unsuccessful legally aided litigant's liability to pay costs is provided for by section 17 of the Legal Aid Act 1988. Any solicitor or counsel acting for a litigant who is successful against a legally aided litigant would have to consider the question of costs against that background.

Legal Aid

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of time and resources, on average, were spent on activities not directed to processing or furthering any individual cases (a) before and (b) after franchising and BS5750.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) All but a small number of the Legal Aid Board's central staff have been involved in the processing or furthering of individual cases. On average the staff not involved, excluding Legal Aid Board members, have numbered 60: approximately 4 per cent. of the work force.

(b) The board's management systems accredited under BS5750 are the mechanism by which it processes work and therefore are an integral part of the resources directed to processing and furthering individual cases. A small central team of three staff is responsible for maintaining the documentation of the management system and ensuring the necessary control systems are in place to monitor compliance. The number of full-time equivalent staff employed on franchising will be between 70 and 80; approximately 5 per cent. of the board's employees.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of (a) civil and (b) criminal legal aid applications were processed by the Leeds legal aid board within (i) two weeks, (ii) six weeks and (iii) over six weeks for 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) In 1992-93 the Leeds area office of the Legal Aid Board processed 74·9 per cent. of civil legal aid applications within two weeks and 94·1 per cent. within six weeks; 5·9 per cent. took more than six weeks.

(b) The grant of criminal legal aid is for the most part the responsibility of the magistrates courts and the Crown court. However, in certain circumstances, area committees of the Legal Aid Board consider applications for review of refusal of grant by the courts. Information on the length of time taken to process applications for criminal legal aid or applications for review is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what criteria the costs of successful legally aided litigants' costs are met out of the legal aid fund rather than by unsuccessful litigants; and what was the cost to the legal aid fund of the meeting of costs in this way in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The order as to costs is a matter within the discretion of the courts. The information requested about the cost to the fund of paying successful legally aided litigants' costs is not available.

Barristers

Mr. Martin Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what was the cost to public funds in 1992-93 of providing barristers (a) to prosecute cases and (b) to defend cases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost of providing barristers to prosecute cases brought by the Crown Prosecution Service, the Serious Fraud Office, Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in 1992-93 was £81·7 million. Information on payments made by other prosecution agencies is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Payments to barristers in respect of criminal legal aid amounted to £136·5 million. Payments are also made from central funds in cases where a privately represented defendant is awarded a cost order on acquittal. However, it is not possible to identify payments made specifically to barristers from central funds since the information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Legal Aid

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how the practice of paying counsel directly who have been instructed by solicitors acting for the Legal Aid Board accords with the professional rules and practice which should apply to counsel receiving fees directly from clients.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is no professional rule which requires payments to counsel to be made by the instructing solicitors rather than by the solicitor's client. It is customary for payment to be made by the solicitor but this is not a requirement, professional or otherwise. Direct payment to counsel by the Legal Aid Board, or by any client, avoids unnecessary work and delay.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his latest estimate for 1993-94 of the percentage of (a) civil and (b) criminal legal aid applications processed by the Leeds legal aid board within (i) two weeks, (ii) six weeks and (iii) over six weeks.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) In the 11 months to the end of February 1994 the Leeds area office of the Legal Aid Board processed 81·2 per cent. of applications for civil legal aid within two weeks and 94·9 per cent. within six weeks; 5·1 per cent. took more than six weeks.

(b) The grant of criminal legal aid is for the most part the responsibility of the magistrates' courts and the Crown court. However, in certain circumstances, area committees of the Legal Aid Board consider applications for review of refusal of grant by the courts. Information on the length of time taken to process applications for criminal legal aid or applications for review is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of time and resources are currently spent on franchising and BS5750.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The board's management systems accredited under BS5750 are the mechanism by which the Legal Aid Board processes work and therefore represent a central call on the resources directed to processing and furthering individual cases. Over 90 per cent. of the board's employees are involved in such work. A small central team of three staff has the responsibility of maintaining the documentation of the management system and ensuring necessary control systems are in place to monitor compliance. The number of full-time equivalent staff employed on franchising will be between 70 and 80; approximately 5 per cent. of the board's employees.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of (a) civil and (b) criminal legal aid applications processed by the Leeds Legal Aid Board for the years (i) 1992-93 and (ii) 1993-94 to date had to pay a contribution towards their legal aid costs.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) In respect of civil legal aid, the Legal Aid Board does not maintain separate figures for individual area offices on this point. Nationally the figures are as follows: (i) 14·1 per cent., and (ii) 14·2 per cent.

(b) The Legal Aid Board has only very limited involvement in the grant of criminal legal aid which, for the most part, is the responsibility of the magistrates courts and the Crown court. In 1992, the last year for which figures are available, about 5·8 per cent. of grants of criminal legal aid made by the courts were subject to a contribution.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions the Legal Aid Board has sought to argue that a successful legally aided litigant's costs can be paid out of the legal aid fund in any event and so it does not make any difference to the successful legally aided litigant or his solicitors and counsel whether the costs of the successful litigation against the Legal Aid Board are paid out of the legal aid fund or out of the Legal Aid Board's own budget for conducting litigation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available. The decisions reached as to costs and costs orders made by the courts in proceedings involving the Legal Aid Board will, however, reflect all the circumstances of the litigation.

Pepper v. Hart

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) of 7 March, Official Report, column 70, on Pepper v. Hart, what estimate has been made of the additional cost of litigation arising from the case; and what issues regarding such cost are being taken up with the governing bodies of legal practitioners.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No formal estimate has been made of the additional cost of litigation directly attributable to the decision in Pepper v. Hart. The primary issues to which my earlier answer referred concern the availability of Hansard, the costs to those outside Government of tracing proceedings which might be relevant, and the ways in which such costs might be kept to a minimum.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) of 7 March, Official Report, column 70, on Pepper v. Hart, if he will list the practical steps which are being put into practice to correct mistakes in ministerial statements during the passage of legislation; and in what manner such corrections will be published.

Mr. John M. Taylor: If it proves necessary to correct any inadvertent ambiguity or error in a ministerial statement made during the passage of a Bill, the aim is to do this as promptly as possible at an appropriate point during the further consideration of the Bill. The best means of doing so and reading such a correction into the official record will depend on a number of factors, including the stage which the Bill has reached and the nature of the proceedings at that point.

DNA Genetic Fingerprinting

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate for the number of entries in the national DNA genetic fingerprint database; whether a DNA sample could be taken in relation to any individual convicted of a serious arrestable offence once the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill passes into law; and how many entries there are on the criminal names index of the police national computer that currently relate to serious arrestable offences.

Mr. Maclean: At present DNA records relating to some 3,000 offences are held by forensic science organisations in England and Wales. Under the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill the theoretical maximum size of the DNA database would be about the same as that of the fingerprint record—about 5 million records—since the proposed power to take samples would be broadly the same as the present power to take fingerprints. Whether and how quickly the database reaches this size would depend upon the operational criteria which the police apply in taking samples for DNA analysis.

Under the provisions of the Bill samples for DNA analysis may be taken from any person convicted of a recordable offence, which includes a serious arrestable offence. Amendments will be introduced to ensure that this power applies only to those convicted after the coming into force of the provisions. The number of entries on the criminal names index of the police national computer which relate to serious arrestable offences is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek an order making powers to prohibit the use, by the police, of a DNA genetic fingerprint relating to those who have committed no crime.

Mr. Maclean: None. There are circumstances in which the police need to take samples of DNA analysis, with consent, from people who are not suspected of any crime: an example is the husband of a rape victim, for eliminating purposes. We shall be introducing amendments in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill to regulate the use to which information from such analyses may be put.

Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of police officers per 100,000 population for each year since 1979 for (a) the Humberside, (b) North Yorkshire, (c) South Yorkshire and (d) the West Yorkshire police authority areas.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is contained in the following table.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration the Data Protection Registrar has given to the definition of "record" in subsection 4 of clause 43 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill, in respect of each of the eight data protection principles.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The registrar has expressed his concern that the definition used in the Bill may throw doubt on the meaning of "record" in other statutory provisions, and for that reason the Government are considering tabling an amendment to delete the definition. The registrar has not expressed a view about the implications of the definition for the data protection principles.

Crime, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there were in (a) the Doncaster area and (b) South Yorkshire as a whole in each of the last 14 years for (i) house burglary, (ii) theft from vehicles and (iii) robbery; and if he will give the total number of convictions for these offences for each year during this period as a proportion of all offences committed.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1979, 1980, 1982, 1984, 1986, 1988, 1990 and 1992 is given in the table. Data for other years would involve disproportionate cost.

Detainees (Self-harm)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many acts of deliberate self-harm there have been among those held in detention for immigration or asylum reasons in each of the last four years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of immigration detainees who have committed acts of deliberate self-harm in immigration detention accommodation, and in Haslar holding centre, in the last four years is as follows:

	Immigration Detention Accommodation	Haslar
1990	8	3
1991	15	0
1993	16	2

Information about acts of self-harm in other Prison Service establishments did not identify immigration detainees separately until June 1993. Between June and December 1993 there were 13 such incidents.

Prison Numbers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of people imprisoned in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. Derek Lewis to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 17 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking what was the total number of people imprisoned in each year since 1979.

Information on the number of receptions into Prison Service establishments for the years 1979 to 1991 is published in the 1989 and 1991 editions of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (Table 1.14, Cm 1221 and 2157) copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The latest available provisional information for 1992 and 1993 is given in the attached table.

[2] A person initially received as untried and subsequently received as convicted unsentenced is counted in both sets of figures. A person subsequently received as a sentenced prisoner is counted separately in those figures.

Life Sentences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prison inmates were serving life sentences in prisons in England and Wales on 1 March.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 17 March 1994:

POPULATION OF LIFE SENTENCE PRISONERS

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the population of life sentence prisoners in Prison Service establishments.

The latest available information is for 31 January 1994 and shows that there were 3,148 prisoners in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales serving life sentences, of whom 3,040 were men and 108 were women.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the total amount of public money spent annually on crime prevention in England and Wales; and what percentage this represents of the cost of policing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information available is as follows. Estimated expenditure on crime prevention in its widest sense across Government Departments in England and Wales in 1992-93 was £200 million. That figure is separate from and additional to public expenditure on the police which was £5·9 billion in 1992-93 and £6·2 billion in 1993-94, an increase of 87 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79. The prevention of crime is one of the key functions of the police. Local authorities also spend money on crime prevention, but information on this is not held centrally.

Rule 43 Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were being held on rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 1 March.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 17 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners held on Rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 1 March.

The table shows the number of inmates held on Prison Rule 43 and Young Offender Institution Rule 46 on 1 March 1994.

	Rule 43 and rule 46 (own protection)	Rule 43 and rule 46 (good order and discipline)
Men	1,284	248
Women	11	3
Total	1,295	251

The table does not include inmates held in vulnerable prisoner units. On 1 March, 1,773 inmates were being held in these units who were not on either Rule 43 or Rule 46.

Prisoners (Christmas Leave)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list by (a) HM prison, (b) HM remand prison the number of prisoners who applied for Christmas leave and the number of those who were granted Christmas leave; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what criteria he uses when deciding which prisoners may be granted Christmas leave; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 17 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the Office, to reply to your recent Questions about the criteria used to consider applications made by prisoners to be granted Christmas leave, and the number of prisoners who applied for and were granted Christmas leave last year. Figures for previous years are not available.

The criteria governing the grant of temporary release and home leave are set out in Circular Instructions 12/1988, 36/1989 and 43/1992, copies of which are in the House Library. Remand prisoners are ineligible to apply under either scheme.

In addition, specific advice was issued to governors in November last year setting out guidance on the arrangements for the grant of home leave and temporary release over the Christmas and New Year periods. A copy of this instruction (IG 29/1993) is also in the House Library.

The figures set out below show those establishments which received applications for home leave or temporary release, and the number of applications made and granted specifically to cover the Christmas period, including 25 and 26 December 1993. Some establishments have not retained records of the number of applications which were made, and these are indicated as not available (N/A) in the table.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Provisional information for remand receptions into Prison Service establishments in the areas specified in 1993 is given in the table.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the cell of the month bonus scheme began at HM prison Moorlands; how much has been paid out to date; which other HM prisons have a similar scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 17 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Moorland Prison and Young Offender Institution.

The cell of the month scheme began on 19 December 1993. Since the scheme commenced, a total of £114 has been paid out. The scheme at Moorland is a local initiative. No central records of such initiatives are maintained and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Correspondence

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Caernarfon, dated 18 October 1993, concerning the case of the late Dewi Jones of Llanaelhaern in Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I hope to respond to the hon. Member very shortly.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown, by race, for the latest date he has figures available, of the inmates held in each of the remand centres in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 17 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking if he will give a breakdown by race, for the latest date he has figures available, of the inmates held in each of the remand centres in Yorkshire and Humberside.

The latest available information is for 31 December 1993 and is given in the table. The ethnic breakdown of the population is based on the Census of Population ethnic coding classification which was introduced in prisons in October 1992.

Mandatory Life Sentences

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently serving mandatory life sentences for murder; and how many of those have at all times denied their guilt.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available provisional information is for 31 December 1993 when there were 2,564 prisoners in Prison Service establishments serving mandatory life sentences for murder. Information on inmates who deny their guilt is not collected centrally.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. Michael Howard: The figures requested are given in the table, which sets out, by grade, the total number of non-industrial Home Office staff, including those in agencies, on outward secondment or on maternity or special leave, and the number and percentage of women in each grade. The information was generated from the Home Office personnel system on 15 March 1994.

Campsfield House

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals are currently detained at Campsfield; and of these how many are (a) on hunger strike and (b) being force fed.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State being for the Home Department how many people are currently being held at Campsfield house; and how many have refused food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On Tuesday 15 March there were 191 people detained at Campsfield house; 118 were refusing food; none has been force-fed.

Mr Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is responsible for the management of Campsfield house; who previously held such responsibility; how frequently Home Office officials visit Campsfield; and how reports on its management are made to Ministers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since its opening on 29 November 1993 the Campsfield house immigration detention centre has been managed on behalf of the Immigration Service by Group 4 Total Security Ltd. under a total management contract. Home Office officials are based permanently at Campsfield house to oversee the management of the contract and report, through senior headquarters staff, to Ministers.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date a Minister in his Department most recently visited Campsfield house.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I visited Campsfield house today.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average it takes his Department to reach a decision on individual cases of those held at Campsfield house; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that those held at Campsfield house are fully able to put their reasons to his officials for wishing to stay in the United Kingdom; what percentage of those held at Campsfield have been able to have qualified representatives to argue their case at the Home Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All those detained under the powers contained in the Immigration Act 1971 have the reasons for that detention explained to them and they are informed of their right to legal advice and assistance, in a language which they understand. In addition, at Campsfield house there are posters advertising the free services available from the Immigration Advisory Service and the refugee legal centre and detainees are free to make and receive telephone calls. Legal representation may visit detainees between 9 am and 9 pm every day. Others may visit between 2 pm and 9 pm, every day. The permanent Immigration Service staff at the centre are also available to provide advice and assistance as necessary.

General Pinochet

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total policing costs associated with the recent visit to London of General Augusto Pinochet.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is a long-standing practice not to disclose the costs of security operations.

Mr. Paul Bennett

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the procedural impropriety referred to by presiding Lord Justice Mann in the case of Mr. Paul Bennett and the subsequent discontinuance of the committal proceedings;

(2) if the services of Mr. Paul Bennett were used or employed by any of the United Kingdom's police or Government agencies prior to committal proceedings being undertaken against him.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 16 March 1994]: Operational matters are entirely the responsibility of the chief officer of the police force concerned. Furthermore, it would not be appropriate to make any comment at this stage on the actions of the police since the case may be considered further by the courts. I understand that a formal complaint has been lodged with the Metropolitan police.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Management Systems

Ms Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, column 771.

Mr. Hague: Computers are used by those employed in facilities management as part of their day-to-day work. There is no reason to suppose any link between this and the number of thefts from the Department.

Disability, Working Allowance

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the reasons for the current level of take-up of the disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have commissioned research from the Policy Studies Institute as part of the evaluation of disability working allowance. The evaluation will examine take-up issues. The final report from the Policy Studies Institute is due in 1995. The final evaluation is due for completion in October 1996.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the value of the independent living fund 1993; what proportion has been allocated to date; and what proportion has been allocated to claimants in Wales.

Mr. Scott: Financial provision of £4 million was made for the Independent Living (1993) Fund in 1993-94. I am informed by the director of the fund that, as at 1 March, 17 per cent. of this amount had been spent.

I am further informed that the total weekly payments to all United Kingdom clients stood at the same date at around £31,000, representing an ongoing commitment equivalent to 40 per cent. of this year's financial provision.

Around 10·5 per cent. of the amount so far in payment to disabled people is being paid to applicants in Wales.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the assessment points for the cold weather payments trigger and the days on which the temperature fell below the trigger point in each case over the last calendar year.

Mr. Scott: A list of the Meterological Office weather stations used by the cold weather payment scheme, together with the temperature information used to determine triggers is held in the Library. Information is held only for the mean temperature over periods of seven days and is not available on a daily basis.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients currently in receipt of invalidity benefit are over the age of 58 years in the Doncaster area.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his current estimate of the average value of benefit to those in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Doncaster area.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Doncaster area for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the full range of information requested is not available. For that information which is available I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by Mr. Bichard on 3 December 1993 at columns 121-22.

Correspondence

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters were received from, and written to, hon. Members by him and his ministerial colleagues in February.

Mr. Hague: This Department received 2,522 letters from hon. Members during February. Of these, 259 were passed to chief executives of the Department's agencies for reply. A total of 1,656 replies, mostly to correspondence received in January, were sent by Ministers.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. Hague: The information requested for permanent staff employed by the Department, including its agencies, on 28 February 1994 is as follows:

Grade 1	1	0
Grade 2	4	0

Others	160	73
Total	95,691	67

[1] Including part-time staff paid for more than 10 hours a week.

Notes:

1. Total of 95,691 equates to 88,976 full time equivalent staff.
2. The table excludes:—
   - i staff on loan or secondment and not being paid by the Department
   - ii staff on unpaid leave for more than three months or on unpaid maternity leave
   - iii casual staff.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Interviews

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the interviews he gave to (a) the broadcast and (b) print media on 8 and 9 March, respectively; and if he will arrange for transcripts of his broadcast interviews to be put in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 8 March I gave formal radio and TV interviews to: ITN 5.40 pm news, Channel 4 news, BBC TV 6.00 pm news, Sky TV, BBC Radio PM programme and GMTV.

On 9 March I gave interviews to BBC Radio Today programme, LBC, BBC Jimmy Young programme, Channel 4 news, HTV and BBC Radio Bristol. I was interviewed by NHK TV Japan on the Science White Paper.

In addition I spoke to print journalists and broadcasters as I arrived at various engagements during the day.

My Department does not hold transcripts of these interviews and they can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out the criteria and conditions he adopts in deciding whether to give full or abbreviated replies to parliamentary questions.

Mr. Waldegrave: I answer parliamentary questions on the basis set out in paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. David Davis: The staff in post figures as at 15 March 1994 for the Cabinet Office, the Office of Public Service and Science, including CCTA, and the six executive agencies for which I am responsible—Chessington computer centre, Civil Service College, Occupational Health Service, the Recruitment and Assessment Services, COI and HMSO, are as follows:

ENVIRONMENT

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of new furniture for his private office during the year 1993-94.

Mr. Gummer: Such purchases are included within my Department's overall administration expenditure which is published every year in the annual report.

Landfill Sites

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will conduct an urgent study into the extent of water pollution problems posed by landfill sites; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will conduct urgent studies into the connection between the landfill sites at (a) Dooking, (b) Edgefield, (c) Hempton, (d) Mayton Wood, (e) Beetley,, (f) Attlebridge, (g) Blackborough End, (h) Costessey, (i) Harford, (j) Barnack road, (k) Helpston, (l) Wereham, (m) Rocklands, (n) Pakefield, (o) Norwich lane, (p) Buckden, (q) Bear's Pit and (r) Foxhall I and II, and water pollution;

(3) what is the scientific basis for the criteria used by the Waste Regulation Authority to decide whether it is unlikely that pollution of the environment and water will occur from landfill sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment has carried out research for many years on the environmental aspects of landfilling. Since 1990 my Department has been funding specific research into the effects of landfilling on groundwater. This research is continuing.

It has already enabled the Department to produce the monitoring protocols which will be included in statutory guidance to be published shortly with the Waste Management Licensing Regulations to be made under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This information will provide waste regulation authorities with a more precise means to decide whether a landfill site is unlikely to cause pollution of the environment or harm to human health.

The sites listed by the hon. Member are mostly old and/or closed. The waste regulation authorities concerned and the NRA are aware of them and additional studies have been or are being conducted, where they have judged these are appropriate. I see no need for any additional study by my Department over and above the research I have mentioned.

Air Monitoring

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis sites for air monitoring were selected; if he will list the selected sites and the equipment used in respect of each; and when monitoring came into effect.

Mr. Atkins: The basis of site selection, the sites involved, the measurement methods and the dates of monitoring for urban monitoring sites funded by the Department of the Environment are given in the first report of the quality of urban air review group published in January 1993 which has been placed in the Library of the House. Similar information for rural monitoring of ozone is given in the first report of the photochemical oxidants.

Local Government Superannuation

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the organisations and individuals who have responded to the report of the efficiency scrutiny of the local government superannuation scheme; and if he will place their responses in the Library;

(2) which organisations and individuals who responded to the report of the efficiency scrutiny of the local government superannuation scheme supported the decentralisation of the local government scheme so as to allow local authorities to take responsibility for their own pension provision.

Mr. Gummer: My Department's efficiency scrutiny report on the local government superannuation scheme was completed in July 1993. Over 1,000 copies were circulated widely in England and Wales, together with a discussion paper. Two hundred and forty responses were received from local authorities, other organisations and individual scheme members. A list of respondees has been placed in the Library, but no authority has been received to publish their actual comments. However, respondees may be willing to give an indication of their views if approached. The following organisations expressed varying degrees of support for the scrutineer's recommendation that local authorities should take responsibility for their own pension provision:

Cambridgeshire County Council
Somerset County Council
Bradford Metropolitan Council
Birmingham City Council
Babergh District Council
Cherwell District Council
Woking District Council
National Rivers Authority
The Pensions Trust
Association of British Insurers
Bacon and Woodrow
Clay and Partners
Godwins Ltd.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the reason for his projected progressive reduction in the expenditure projected on radioactive substances policy from £2·4 million in 1993-94 to £1·3 million in 1996-97 in figure 22 of his Department's annual report and expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm 2507.

Mr. Atkins: The reduction in research expenditure on radioactive substances policy set out in figure 22 of Cm 2507 reflects the completion of the Department's current research and monitoring programme on radon. Research on other aspects of radioactive substances policy is being maintained on a stable basis, subject to normal year-to-year variations.

Basildon

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what remaining assets the Commission for New Towns has to dispose of in Basildon; and when it will be wound up.

Mr. Baldry: In addition to the 2,444 rented and shared ownership dwellings and 10·7 acres of land due to be disposed of to the Basildon community housing association before the end of March, the Commission for the New Towns retains the following assets for disposal in Basildon:

390 acres of developable land;
186,633 sq. feet of freehold commercial premises;
6,700 sq. feet of freehold industrial premises;
560,067 sq. feet of leasehold/leaseback industrial premises;
13,190 sq. feet of other miscellaneous properties;
54 commercial ground leases;
3 residential hostels where negotiations are currently in progress with the managing agents;
6 miscellaneous properties used for social/voluntary purposes.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 27 July 1993, the Commission for the New Towns is to be wound up by no later than 31 March 1998. In the mean time, the Basildon office of the Commission will close to the public on 31 March 1994.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the reason for the proposed reduction in expenditure between 1994-95 and 1995-96 on research and monitoring in the environment, as set out at figure 9 on environmental protection expenditure of his Department's annual report and expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm 2507.

Mr. Atkins: Details of expenditure within the environmental protection programme are given in figure 22 of Cm 2507. Funding of environmental protection research and monitoring increased by about 50 per cent. since the 1990 White Paper, "This Common Inheritance". Year-to-year variations in funding, should be expected as projects move from start-up to completion. For example, the period between 1994-95 and 1995-96 is dominated by the procurement spend profile of the advanced along track scanning radiometer satellite instrument, which is due for launch in 1998.

Liverpool Housing Department

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report into complaints of corruption in the Liverpool city housing department; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No. Local authorities are accountable to their electorate and, where necessary, to their auditor and to the courts for the conduct of their business. If the law has been broken it is a matter for the police.

PM10 Particulates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to set a limit on acceptable levels of PM10 particulates in the air.

Mr. Atkins: The expert panel on air quality standards, a group of independent medical and scientific experts which recommends air quality standards to the Secretary of State for the Environment, is currently considering a standard for particulates.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the link between levels of PM10 particulates in the air and traffic levels.

Mr. Atkins: The recently published second report of the quality of urban air review group estimated that in 1991 road vehicles contributed 27 per cent. and 42 per cent. of United Kingdom emissions of PM_{10} and black smoke respectively. In London, QUARG estimated the contribution of road vehicles to emissions of black smoke was 94 per cent.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, columns 294-95, which local authorities made representations to his Department seeking the use of nature of housing tenure as an indicator for the purpose of standard spending assessment distribution prior to his announcement of a provisional settlement for 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: Prior to consultation on the provisional revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95, as part the review of standard spending assessments, the following local authorities made representations in support of the use of nature of housing tenure as an indicator in the calculation of SSAs.

Barrow Borough Council
Dudley Metropolitan Borough Council
London Borough of Greenwich
Leeds City Council
Sheffield City Council

Hazardous Chemicals

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he published his departmental discussion paper on reducing emissions of hazardous chemicals to the environment; how many copies have been prepared; at what cost; and to whom it has been circulated.

Mr. Atkins: The discussion paper "Reducing Emissions of Hazardous Chemicals to the Environment" was published on 7 March 1994. A total of 1,200 copies have been prepared at a cost of £25,800, which includes the cost of drafting the paper, the graphical work, printing and its distribution. The paper has been circulated within my Department, other Government Departments, relevant agencies and non-governmental organisations, industry and trade associations, all of which have interests in either the manufacture, supply and use of hazardous chemicals as well as their potential impact on human health and the environment.

Air Pollution

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of the Government Chief Medical Officer's report on asthma and air pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: No.

The Department of Health's independent Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollution has not yet reported on the effects of air pollutants on asthma. Their report is expected to be published this year.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he has made in charges payable by operators of industrial processes licensed by air pollution control authorities under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) on 9 March 1994, Official Report, column 300.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has received since May 1992 from his advisory committee on releases to the environment; and what actions he has taken in response to the reports.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1 May 1992 the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment has given advice to the Secretary of State on 20 applications to release genetically modified organisms to the environment, made under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992.

For each application made under the regulations, all ACRE's advice has been considered by the Secretary of State in deciding whether to issue a consent to release a genetically modified organism.

Details of each application and ACRE's advice relating to them are kept on a public register.

Conservation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent meetings he or officials of his Department have had with the Business and Technology Education Council on its national vocational qualifications scheme on environmental conservation.

Mr. Atkins: None. However, the Department suppports the Council for Occupational Standards and Qualifications in Environmental Conservation, which is working with the Business and Technology Education Council to deliver environmental conservation national vocational qualifications.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support his Department gives to the Institution of Environmental Health Officers programme to improve energy efficiency in private sector housing.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has collaborated with the Institute of Environmental Health Officers on a series of workshops for IEHO members aimed at improving energy efficiency in private sector housing. We are currently considering other possible methods of collaboration.

Acidity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of his departmental critical loads advisory group reports on critical loads of acidity in the United Kingdom; and what actions he plans to take arising from its recommendations.

Mr. Atkins: The Government warmly welcome the reports of the critical loads advisory group and its various sub-groups. The reports contain a number of recommendations as to further research which the Department will be considering. The group's findings have been and will continue to be an essential element informing the Government's development of effects—based emission control policies and the Government's position in international negotiations designed to reduce transboundary air pollution.

Cadmium Plating

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent support his Department has given to assist research in the private sector or research establishments on clean production technologies to replace the use of cadmium plating in corrosion protection.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has recently offered a grant of up to £390,000 towards the costs of a three-year project initiated by the National Centre for Tribology, within AEA Technology. The centre will undertake the project along with a consortium of 20 or more companies. The project will investigate new technologies to replace cadmium plating in corrosion protection and in bearing materials.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total area of sea bed covered by (a) licensing applications for a Government view of marine dredging of aggregates and (b) licensing applications for the marine dredging of aggregates which have received a favourable Government view, in each year since 1989.

Mr. Baldry: The total area of seabed covered by current licensing applications for a government view of marine dredging of aggregates is 196·08 sq km. The total area of seabed covered by licensing applications for the marine dredging of aggregates which have received a favourable government view, in each year since 1989 is as follows:

1989 — 34·85 km^2
1990 — 35·73 km^2
1991 — 49·17 km^2
1992 — [1]
1993 — no favourable government views given.
1994 — no final decisions on government views given to date.

[1] The licensing application covered by the one favourable government view issued in 1992 was for a change in tonnage for two previously licensed areas: there was no increase in area.

North Race Bank

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to give a decision on the Government's view of the production application by National Rivers Authority Anglia for the extraction of sand from the North Race bank.

Mr. Baldry: My Department issued a letter on 15 March, stating that it was minded to issue a favourable Government view for limited extraction by NRA on Race bank, subject to the finalisation of strict conditions.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payments have been made to date in respect of the City Challenge programme for Bolton; and what further authorisations are currently due.

Mr. Baldry: A total of £5·753 million grant has been paid to date in respect of Bolton's city challenge expenditure in 1993-94, the first year of the programme.

Bolton city challenge partnership is forecasting a full spend of its £7·5 million funding allocation for 1993-94. A remaining £1·747 million grant is therefore due to be paid in respect of city challenge expenditure in this financial year.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the home energy efficiency scheme to all people aged 60 years or over.

Mr. Atkins: Proposals to amend the regulations governing the home energy efficiency scheme which would extend eligibility for the scheme to those receiving disability living allowance and those aged 60 and over were laid before Parliament on 9 March.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will estimate how much it would cost to extend the home energy efficiency scheme to all pensioners and people with disabilities;

(2) if he will estimate how much it would cost to extend the home energy efficiency scheme to all people aged 60 years or over.

Mr. Atkins: An extra £35 million per year is to be made available for the home energy efficiency scheme from 1 April 1994, when the scheme is to be extended to those receiving disability living allowance and those aged 60 and over.

Water Disposal Areas

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to designate new areas as high natural water dispersal areas;

(2) how many areas are designated as high natural water dispersal areas in other EU member states;

(3) when those areas currently designated as high natural water dispersal areas were given that designation;

(4) how many areas in the United Kingdom are designated as high natural water dispersal areas under the EC urban waste waters directive; and if he will list them;

(5) what criteria are used for designating areas as high natural water dispersal areas;

(6) what research is currently being conducted into high natural water dispersal areas.

Mr. Atkins: High natural dispersion areas will be identified on the basis of criteria adopted following a public consultation exercise in the United Kingdom in March 1992.

No areas have yet been formally identified in the United Kingdom. An announcement will be made in due course. We do not have any information on other member states' intentions.

Once the high natural dispersion areas have been identified, the comprehensive studies required by the directive will be carried out to demonstrate that primary treatment will have no adverse environmental effect in these areas.

Council Tax

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities where persons in a lower council tax band may be paying a higher level of council tax than equivalent persons in a higher band due to the operation of the transitional relief scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: On the basis of information received so far it appears that some cases of this kind may arise in 1994-95 in Blyth Valley, Derwentside, Greenwich, Wakefield and Wandsworth, as a result of the decisions of these authorities to reduce headline levels of council tax considerably compared with 1993-94.

Isle of Dogs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of capital and any other allowances claimed by companies in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone; and how much of that total had been claimed by the time the deadline was extended after Canary Wharf went into administration.

Mr. Baldry: The total cost of capital allowances for all enterprise zones in Britain, estimated at 31 March 1993, was approximately £1 billion in 1993-94 prices. No information on the cost of capital allowances is available for individual enterprise zones or developments within them.

The total cost of rate relief on the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone, up to its expiry on 25 April 1992, was £113 million in 1993-94 prices.

(2) if he will publish a table giving the top 10 suggestions for how to improve London contained in the responses to the questionnaire accompanying the document "London: Making the Best Better";

(3) what stage has been reached in assessing the responses to the questionnaire accompanying the document "London: Making the Best Better"; by what date the assessment will be complete; and when he will publish the full results;

(4) what (a) proportion and (b) number of responses to the questionnaire accompanying the document "London: Making the Best Better", referred to a need for greater investment in London's transport system, on the basis of his preliminary assessment.

Sir George Young [holding answer 11 March 1994]: The analysis of the replies to the consultation document "London: Making the Best Better" is complete, and we will publish a digest of the responses later this month.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a full list of all organisations, individuals and Government Departments sent details of his preliminary assessment of the responses to the questionnaire accompanying the document "London: Making the Best Better", together with the date on which details were sent.

Sir George Young [holding answer 11 March 1994]: In accordance with normal practice my right hon. Friend is consulting ministerial colleagues on a draft text of a digest of the responses to the London questionnaire which will be published shortly. No other organisations or outside individuals have been consulted.

TRANSPORT

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funds he has made available to the franchise director to implement privatisation in 1993-94; and what is his current estimate for 1994-95.

Mr. Freeman: Around £2 million has been provided in 1993-94 to cover the running costs of the office of passenger rail franchising. Estimated running costs in 1994-95 are £10 million.

Government support for passenger services will continue to be provided. The estimated level of support in 1994-95 is £1,825 million, the greater proportion of which will be paid via the Franchising Director.

British Transport Police

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what legislative steps the Government intend to take in connection with the jurisdiction of the transport police.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what change will take place on Railtrack's vesting day to powers of pursuit or arrest by the British transport police constables;

(2) what change to powers of pursuit or arrest will be experienced by British transport police constables on the vesting day of any rail franchise;

(3) what plans he has to introduce legislation relating to the powers of the British transport police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he now intends to take to protect the powers and scope of jurisdiction of the British transport police after 1 April.

Mr. Freeman: The Government will introduce at the earliest possible opportunity a short Bill to clarify the jurisdiction of the British Transport police following discussions with British Rail and the chief constable.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has come to a firm conclusion on the future of vehicle inspectorate testing functions.

Mr. MacGregor: I have decided, in the light of responses to the proposals outlined last May, and taking account of the work I subsequently commissioned from consultants Price Waterhouse, not to transfer the vehicle inspectorate's testing activities to the private sector.

The consultants concluded that while privatisation was feasible a number of my main objectives, including, in particular, the development of significant competition in the provision of testing services and the transfer of the freeholds of the testing sites to the purchasers, would not be possible if a successful sale was to be achieved. Moreover, their analysis drew attention to the possibility that privatisation might limit the scope for innovation in the future provision of testing services, a concern shared by the road transport industry. The consultants also confirmed the views previously expressed to me that most customers believe that they are well served by the vehicle inspectorate.

In deciding that the whole of the inspectorate should remain an executive agency of the Department of Transport I have instructed the chief executive to develop plans which will build substantially on the organisation's current levels of efficiency and quality of service. I have asked the chief executive to report quickly to me on the scope for substantial future savings. I will also be taking forward an initiative to facilitate a significant expansion of the arrangements for on site testing by the inspectorate's staff at operators' own, suitably equipped premises. This featured in the industry's own response to my original proposals.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Aerospace

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade during what periods since 1990 there has been a Government appointed director on British Aerospace's main board; who were the nominees; and if they receive payment for their services.

Mr. Sainsbury: There has been a Government-appointed director throughout the period since 1990. The appointee is Mr. Keith Brown. He is a director of the company and has, therefore, received no payment from Government for his services.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what golden share provisions have continued to exist with British Aerospace since 1992; when the terms on which such shares were varied; and what golden shares provisions could apply to British Aerospace subsidiaries, after their disposal by that company.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government have held a special share in British Aerospace public limited company throughout the period since 1992. The rights attaching to the special share are set out in the company's articles of association. There has been no amendment to the articles to which these rights relate in this period. The Government do not hold a special share in any of British Aerospace's subsidiary companies, so no special share provisions apply to such companies.

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what was the import/export ratio for trade in manufactures with Brazil in 1993 to the latest available date and what was the corresponding surplus or deficit; what were the figures for 1970, 1979 and 1985 and the corresponding level of the real exchange rate compared to 1993; and if he will list the principal surpluses or deficits in 1993 together with the reasons therefore;

(2) what was the import/export ratio for trade in manufactures with Switzerland in 1993 to the latest available date and what was the corresponding surplus or deficit; what were the figures for 1970, 1979 and 1985 and the corresponding level of the real exchange rate compared to 1993; and if he will list the principal surpluses or deficits in 1993 together with the reasons therefore;

(3) what was the import/export ratio for trade in manufactures with Austria in 1993 to the latest available date and what was the corresponding surplus or deficit; what were the figures for 1970, 1979 and 1985 and the corresponding level of the real exchange rate compared to 1993; and if he will list the principal surpluses or deficits in 1993 together with the reasons therefore;

(4) what was the import/export ratio for trade in manufactures with Finland in 1993 to the latest available date and what was the corresponding surplus or deficit; what were the figures for 1970, 1979 and 1985 and the corresponding level of the real exchange rate compared to 1993; and if he will list the principal surpluses or deficits in 1993 together with the reasons therefore;

(5) what was the import/export ratio for trade in manufactures with Sweden in 1993 to the latest available date and what was the corresponding surplus or deficit; what were the figures for 1970, 1979 and 1985 and the corresponding level of the real exchange rate compared to 1993; and if he will list the principal surpluses or deficits in 1993 together with the reasons therefor.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom trade in manufactures, defined as sections 5 to 8 of the Standard International Trade Classification, is published regularly by the Central Statistical Office in the Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom.

Since the beginning of 1993, the publication appears in two parts: overseas trade statistics of the United Kingdom with countries outside the European Community, extra-EC trade; and overseas trade statistics of the United Kingdom with countries within the European Community, extra-EC trade: Intrastat. These publications are available from the Library of the House.

Information on real exchange rates is not available.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the membership of the working group set up by his Department to consider what lessons might be learned from the operating experience now being accumulated on wind farms; and on what dates the group has met.

Mr. Eggar: The working group is concerned only with wind turbine noise. Its membership is:

Nuclear Review

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the terms of reference of the nuclear review; and if it will include a review of the disposal of waste and the merits of dry storage versus reprocessing.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 December 1993 to the hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant), Official Report, columns 759-60.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on British Shipbuilders' external financing limit for 1993-94.

Mr. Sainsbury: British Shipbuilders' external financing limit for 1993-94 was set at minus £7·8 million as recorded in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96" published in February 1993, Cm 2204. The planned EFL has increased slightly due to a decrease of £0·6 million in British Shipbuilders' income on interest. However, this effect has been offset by the transfer to BS of £0·32 million residual balance from its now-dormant subsidiary Sunderland Enterprise and Training Ltd. The net effect is a small increase in the EFL to minus £7·5 million.

Regional Development

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has considered the business plans of the English regional development organisations; and what level of financial support he proposes to offer for 1994-95.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have studied the current performance and future plans of the six English regional development organisations. I am pleased to say that they continue to make a significant contribution to the work of my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau, to the overall success of the United Kingdom in attracting inward investment, and in particular to the performance of their region. In recognition of this, I have today offered £5·605 million of grant in aid for their inward investment promotion activities for 1994-95. In total this is an increase of £50,000 on last year. Last year was an increase of £550,000 on 1992-93. I have allocated the grant aid as follows:

RDO	1994-95 grant £'000	Per cent. share of total grant
Northern Development Company (NDC)	1,461,5	26·0
INWARD Ltd (in the North West)	1,173	20·9
Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association (YHDA)	1,088	19·4
West Midlands Development Agency (WMDA)	818,25	14·6
East Midlands Development Company Ltd (EMD)	400	7·1
Devon and Cornwall Development Bureau (DCDB)	664,25	11·8

These individual grants are very slightly smaller than last year except for the East Midlands Development Company Ltd., and reflect in part the need to respond to changes in assisted area coverage within the total available funding provision for all the English regions.

Grant is offered on an annual basis according to past performance, ability to absorb additional funding effectively, and for an agreed programme of future activities, with proper regard to value for money. It is Government policy to encourage direct inward investment to the United Kingdom because it contributes significantly to economic growth. Inward investment brings benefits both to the country as a whole and more specifically to the assisted areas.

New-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Martlew: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications he has received for energy projects under each type for the third tranche of the non-fossil fuel obligation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that the non-fossil purchasing agency has received around 230 applications in respect of the wind band; 100 in respect of the hydro band; 140 in respect of the landfill gas band; 100 in respect of the municipal and industrial waste band; and 100 in respect of the energy crops band.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1994]: The number of statutory instruments made by the Department in the past three years was as follows:

1992	104
1993	86

Redundancy Arrangements

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the redundancy arrangements applicable to staff employed at the National Engineering Laboratory and Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 16 March 1994]: The handling of staff surpluses arising in the Department of Trade and Industry, including its agencies, is covered by the departmental redundancy agreement. Copies of the current agreement have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Compensation payments are set out in the principal civil service pension scheme section of the civil service pay and conditions code.

Units of Measurement

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to table legislation which will implement the units of measurement directive; and what time has been allowed for the industries affected to make the necessary plans for compliance.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 2 March 1994]: It is the Government's intention that before the summer recess a complete set of implementing measures will be laid in Parliament. Discussions are continuing with trade associations about plans for compliance.

WALES

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to visit Meirionnydd Nant Conwy.

Mr. Redwood: I plan to visit Meirionnydd Nant Conwy again later this year.

Female Workers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many female (a) chief executives and (b) chief officers there are in (i) local government service and (ii) the NHS in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: According to the 1993 "Chief Executive/Chief Officers Salaries and Numbers Survey", conducted by the Local Government Management Board, among the 41 Welsh authorities, out of 45 which responded, there were no female chief executives and 20 female chief officers in post on 1 April 1993.

None of the general managers of health authorities and family health service authorities is female. One of the NHS trust chief executives currently in post is female and two of the NHS trust chief executive-designates, for NHS trusts which become operational on 1 April 1994, are female. Chief officers may be defined in different ways within the NHS and consistent information is not, therefore, available centrally.

Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the environmental initiatives he has taken on green matters within his Department further to chapter eight of the annual report and departmental expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm 2515, on environmental services provided by his Department.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Relevant information is given in chapter 10 on page 117 of the departmental report, Cm 2515. Further details will be provided in the third annual report on follow-up to the 1990 Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance", which the Government will be publishing shortly.

Exhaust Fumes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence he has of a correlation between levels of PM10 particulates in the air and hospital admissions in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A study conducted in Birmingham of the period 1988 to 1990 and published earlier this year has shown that levels of particulates measured as British standard black smoke are a significant predictor of hospital admissions for asthma and all other acute respiratory disorders.

The Department of Health is currently funding a study into the health effects of the London air pollution episode in December 1991. This research will provide useful background into the relationship between hospital admissions and levels of air pollutants.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the Committee on Medical Effects report into the health threat posed by PM10 particulates in the air in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollution has not yet reported on the adverse health effects of PM10 particulates in the air. The Government are seeking definitive advice on this issue and the Committee have set up a sub-group to assess the latest evidence on the health effects of all particulate matter.

Levels of PM10s are monitored continuously at the Government's air monitoring network site in Cardiff. When the advice from the committee becomes available we shall be better able to assess the possible health effects of particulates in the air in Wales.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by month for the last 12 months, the number of working hours he has spent in the Principality.

Mr. Redwood: In the 10 months to the end of March, I will have spent 67 working days in Wales on government and political business. My duties for Wales require me to be in London on Tuesdays and Thursdays for Cabinet Committees and Cabinet. On most Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays I am required to be in London for parliamentary business in the evening.

Electricity

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the gross consumption of electricity in Wales in 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information for 1993 is not yet available. Estimated total sales of electricity in Wales were 16,363 GW/H in 1992.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the reason for the projected reduction between 1993-94 and 1994-95 in housing expenditure in Wales as set out at figure 7.01 in his annual report and expenditure plans for 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm 2515.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As figure 7.01 of the Welsh Office departmental report indicates, total provision for housing programmes in 1994-95 has been set at £634·9 million, an increase of £27 million over 1993-94 plans and £32·9 million over 1993-94 forecast outturn. The table does not include private sector contributions to the Housing for Wales programme. These, together with transfers from local authorities, are expected to take total housing association capital spending to some £200 million in both 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Open Government

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the implications for the operation of his Department of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Redwood: The code of practice on open government will reinforce and build on my Department's existing arrangements for the provision of information. Operational details will be made public in due course.

Rechem

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he received the latest consultants report on the environmental and health consequences of the Rechem incineration plant at Pontypool, commissioned by his Department; how many copies of the report have been printed; to whom they have been made available; and if he will make a statement on its conclusions.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest report on further monitoring of PCB levels around the Rechem plant in Pontypool was published on 10 March. Eighty copies were printed and distribution included the four local MPs; the chairman of the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs; the European Commission; Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; the Health and Safety Executive; Rechem; Torfaen borough council and other local interests. Copies have also been placed in the Library of the House.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State indicated in his recent letter to the hon. Member, the report generally confirms results obtained in the main study. The area of higher concentrations of PCBs and dioxins previously identified near the Rechem plant has also been narrowed down to a strip of land about 200 m wide to the east of the plant.

School Leavers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of female school leavers left school with five or more GCSE's at grades A to C in Mid Glamorgan in the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is given in table 9.11 of "Statistics of Education and Training in Wales: Schools" No. 2, 1994, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of third and fourth year children in Mid Glamorgan are in maintained sector education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The proportion of national curriculum year three and four pupils in maintained sector education in Mid Glamorgan at January 1993 was 99·2 per cent.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to this answer to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) of 3 March, Official Report, column 792, if he will publish in the Official Report the notes on order 24 in the Supreme Court Practice concerning public interest immunity.

The Attorney-General: No. It would not be appropriate to publish in the Official Report lengthy extracts from published works which are widely available. I have, however, placed a photocopy of the relevant pages of the Supreme Court Practice in the Library for ease of reference—deposited paper No. 10250.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General in what circumstances the actual documents to which Ministers have stated that public interest immunity should apply are not themselves made available to the judge.

The Attorney-General: The court will decide, having regard to relevant case law, whether to inspect documents which are the subject of a claim for public interest immunity, and will always do so in a criminal case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the recent public statements by law officers concerning Crown privilege and public interest immunity.

The Attorney-General: I have no such list, but I refer to my answers to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold):

15 December 1993, Official Report, column 640
20 January 1994, Official Report, column 726
3 February 1994, Official Report, column 833
3 March 1994, Official Report, column 792
15 March 1994, Official Report, column 576

Disclosure Guidelines

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General when he proposes to revise his guidelines on disclosure.

The Attorney-General: The recommendations of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice relating to prosecution disclosure are at present being considered. The Government stated in their interim response to the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice that they intend to produce a package of measures which would then be the subject of legislation at the earliest available opportunity.

Makanjuola v. Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the implications for Government Ministers of Lord Justice Bingham's judgment in Makanjuola v. Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and if he will publish in the Official Report the relevant paragraphs of the judgment.

The Attorney-General: The judgment is relevant to my evidence to Lord Justice Scott on 24 March. It is published at page 617 vol. 3 of the "All England Law Reports" for 1992 which is in the Library.

CPS Charges

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General how many charges have been reduced by the Crown Prosecution Service following the defendant's electing for trial by jury for the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: This information is not available and cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the occupation by Indonesia of East Timor in 1975.

Mr. Goodlad: The invasion of East Timor in 1975 was condemned, with our support, in Security Council resolutions at the time. We have not recognised Indonesia's annexation of the territory. We are encouraging Indonesia and Portugal to continue to work together, under the auspices of the UN Secretary-General, to find a solution to East Timor.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to promote a motion critical of Indonesia's human rights record at the current session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Goodlad: The British delegation to this year's session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights worked hard to secure agreements between Portugal and Indonesia on the consensus statement on East Timor.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received recently from the Indonesian Government.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has recently taken to encourage the Indonesian Government to comply with its human rights obligations.

Mr. Goodlad: The Indonesian Government are well aware of our views. Most recently, we supported efforts at this year's session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to secure a consensus statement on East Timor which encourages Indonesia to live up to its human rights obligations.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the total number of civilian casualties sustained in East Timor for each year since 1979 and in total; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: There is no reliable and independent source for information on this matter.

Cuba

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present situation in Cuba.

Mr. Goodlad: Cuba is one of the few remaining communist countries. Some economic reforms have been introduced to counter recent sharp economic decline. But there have been no significant reforms leading to political pluralism. Human rights continue to give cause for concern.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. Goodlad: Using the latest available figures, the number of persons and the percentage of women employed in each grade in this Department, including agencies, is:

EMPLOYMENT

Manufacturing Employment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in employment in United Kingdom manufacturing in absolute and percentage terms since the United Kingdom joined the EC; and what is the corresponding figure for other industrial countries.

Miss Widdecombe: Comparable information for all G7 countries is only available for the production and construction industries combined, of which manufacturing is the largest component. Changes since June 1973 are shown in the following table. The shift from manufacturing towards services is a trend shared by all western industrial nations. Nonetheless, the output of United Kingdom manufacturing industry increased by 1·5 per cent. between 1973 and 1993. This reflects a substantial improvement in productivity, up by 77·4 per cent. over the same period.

Finance Sector Employees

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in banking, insurance and finance in the Yorkshire and Humberside region in the last quarter for which figures are available; and if he will give the equivalent quarter figures for 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is given in the following table:

Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money has been spent by (a) his Department and (b) the European Community on training (i) unemployed youths aged 16 to 18 years, (ii) 18 to 24-year-olds and (iii) the long-term unemployed in the Doncaster area; how many such trainees subsequently found employment; and which organisations were so financed to (1) commission and (2) conduct the programmes in each of the last four years.

Miss Widdecombe: The answer is as follows:

(a) Employment Department:

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council Funding

	1991-92 £	1992-93 £	1993-94 to 30 January 1994 £
Careership (youth training)	13,349,000	10,632,000	12,834,000

18 to 24 years	n/a	293	217
Long-term unemployed	1,136	1,185	1,099

The Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council (TEC) were financed by the Government to commission these programmes and sub-contract them to local providers in the Barnsley and Doncaster area; information on the Doncaster area alone is not available.

(b) The European Community, through the European Social Fund (ESF) provides support, on a national and regional basis, for unemployed young people aged under 25 years and for long-term unemployed adults aged 25 and over. Details of ESF support for unemployed people in the age ranges 16 to 18 and 18 to 24 and for the long-term unemployed in any specific locality, and information on organisations financed to commission and conduct programmes, are confidential to TECs and local authorities.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what follow-up survey has been conducted by his Department of people who have participated in training courses supported by the European social fund; what are the latest results regarding outcome available broken down by sector and region, and separately for male and female, ethnic minorities and people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Follow-up surveys cover all leavers from training for work and youth training programmes, which are supported by the European social fund. Results from these surveys are published monthly in the Employment Gazette. To complement these arrangements, in June 1993 the Department implemented a follow-up system for people participating in ESF courses run by the non-government sectors. Results will be produced annually and we expect the first analysis of 1993 data towards the end of this year.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the number of accidents on youth training broken down by fatal, major and minor for the latest available three-month period, shown by region; and how many youth training providers had contracts terminated (a) in that period and (b) in the three preceding months for reasons of inadequate health and safety.

Miss Widdecombe: Table A gives the latest available youth training accident figures for the quarter October—December 1993.

Notes:

(a) Employment Department (ED) figures for YT trainees have been compiled on a similar basis to those for employees by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). However, the ED's figures also include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments, and road traffic accidents, which would not have been reportable to HSE for employees.

(b) Major and minor injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR).

Information on YT provider contracts terminated by training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies for reasons of inadequate health and safety is not held centrally.

Unemployment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the male rate of unemployment in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) the USA and (e) Japan for each year since 1979; and if he will indicate the reasons for changes.

Miss Widdecombe: International comparable unemployment rates for males are available from 1987 and can be found in "Eurostatistics", which is published by the Statistical Office of the European Community and is available in the Library. Changes in unemployment rates are due to many factors which vary in their effect from country to country, one of which is the particular point reached in a country's economic cycle. The latest monthly figures from the SOEC indicate that the United Kingdom is the only country from the European Community, Japan and the USA where the rate of male unemployment is falling.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the rate of unemployment among men in December 1993 in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) Italy and (d) France.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the following table. No figures are available for the unified Germany.

Internationally comparable ILO unemployment rates for men (December 1993 seasonally adjusted)

United Kingdom	11·9
Italy	7·9
France	9·5

Source: Statistical Office of the European Community (SOEC) monthly Unemployment Bulletin.

The United Kingdom is the only European Community country where the rate of male unemployment has fallen over the year to December 1993.

Jobcentres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were placed in employment by jobcentres in the Doncaster area in each month since April 1992; and what percentage of the unemployed in the Doncaster area this represents.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on jobcentre placings can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Employment information below regional level is only available from the census of employment for 1991.

During 1993 jobcentres in the Doncaster area placed over 400 people into employment each month.

Earnings

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees earned between 0 and 10 per cent. below, and between 0 and 10 per cent. above the national insurance lower earnings limit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that in an average week approximately 220,000 employees earn between 0 and 10 per cent. below the national insurance lower earnings limit and approximately 190,000 employees earn between 0 and 10 per cent. above the LEL.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women currently earn less than the national insurance lower earnings limit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) on 9 February 1994, Official Report, column 292.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what hours are worked per week on average by employees earning less than the national insurance lower earnings limit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that in April 1993 employees earning below the national insurance lower earnings limit worked an average of 11·6 hours a week.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the average weekly earnings of employees earning less than the national insurance lower earnings limit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that the average gross weekly earnings of employees earning less than the national insurance lower earnings limit is approximately £24.

Open Government

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the implications for the operation of his Department, and the Health and Safety Commission, of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department and the Health and Safety Executive already answer many hundreds of thousands of inquiries each year, through, for example, their "public enquiry point" service. The code of practice will reinforce and build upon existing arrangements for the provision of information to the public.

Financial Services

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 201, how many people were employed in banking, insurance and finance in Greater London, including those not resident in Greater London, in the latest quarter for which figures are available and the equivalent quarters of 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is given in the following table:

Employees in employment in banking, finance, insurance and business services and leasing (SIC division 8): Greater London

	Number
December 1989	798,000
December 1990	773,000
December 1991	726,000
December 1992	699,000
December 1993	712,000

Employment Service

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the reasons for the introduction of the new regional, district and area management structure of the Employment Service; how will it differ from existing arrangements; what are the implications for awarding and monitoring contracts entered into with external organisations operating job clubs; how it relates to and affects PACT—placing assessment and counselling—teams and other services for unemployed people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 17 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the new introduction of the Employment Service management structure.

The Employment Service (ES) is setting up a structure of Districts in order to focus more effectively on the delivery of services to its clients, and provide better value for money. Districts will consist of a number of local offices serving discreet local labour markets, and they will be managed through the existing network of ES Regions.

The new arrangements become operational from April 1994, when the Area tier of management will cease. The new structure will ensure that more senior managers will be directly responsible for managing resources and performance within districts. The existing network of local offices will remain in place, and continue delivering services to clients.

District Managers will be responsible for awarding contracts to external organisations operating Jobclubs, and for ensuring that these contracts are monitored. In this they will be assisted by programme contracting specialists.

The specialist disability service delivered by Placing, Assessment and Counselling teams (PACTs) will be strengthened by the appointment of Regional managers. Their role is to maximise the potential of PACTs, establish effective working relationships with local offices in the new districts and ensure that the appropriate specialist programmes and services are available for clients.

They will also work with District Managers to provide appropriate help for clients with disabilities who do not need specialist help in funding or retaining work.

I hope this is helpful.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women are employed by the Employment Service; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total work force of the Employment Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mrs. Ann Clwyd, dated 17 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of women employed by the Employment Service and what percentage of the total workforce this represents.

I have looked at the latest available staff-in-post figures taken at 1 January 1994. These show that we presently employ 49,061 staff. Of this figure 35,119 are women, which represents 71 per cent. of the total workforce.

I hope this is helpful.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many rules and regulations his Department has passed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made the following number of statutory instruments in the last three years:

	New instruments	Other instruments
1991	25	10
1992	29	12
1993	27	9

"Other instruments" cover those which amend, replace, or revoke existing instruments, or are commencement orders.

Not all instruments impose requirements or regulations on business.

Self-financing Regulatory Authorities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many self-financing regulatory authorities his Department has set up since 1979; what was the annual running cost of each of the self-financing regulatory authorities in each of the last three years; what is the current staffing establishment; and what it was last year and two years ago.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 March 1994]: None.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women are employed at each civil service grade in his Department as a whole; and what percentage of each grade is constituted by women.

Miss Widdecombe: The numbers and percentages of women in each grade in the Employment Department Group at 1 January 1994 are set out in the following table:

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Records

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Prime Minister whether the 30-year rule applies to the handwritten records of each Cabinet meeting; and, after the lapse of this time, whether they will be open to public scrutiny.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Secretary's handwritten records of Cabinet meetings are regarded as subject to the Public Records Acts which make provision for the release of public records after 30 years. Section 3(4) of the 1958 Act permits the retention of such records for longer than 30 years, subject to the Lord Chancellor's approval.

The question of the release of the notebooks was considered in the summer of 1993, in accordance with a recommendation in the Wilson committee's report on "Modern Public Records", Cmnd. 8204. The Lord Chancellor has approved the continued retention of the notebooks. It is proposed that a further review will take place in 10 years' time.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 17 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 17 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Coastal Erosion

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many square miles of coast have been lost to the sea since 1979.

Mr. Jack: Recent studies suggest that the average annual rate of coastal erosion is probably in the range of 0.08 to 0.2 sq m per year. Much of the material lost as a result of this erosion contributes to coastal accretion or the formation of beaches or banks which provide protection to other coastal areas.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average net annual income of farm owners in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The farm business survey collects data from a sample of farms throughout the United Kingdom which are classified as full-time holdings. Results are not readily available for the United Kingdom as a whole, but the table provides information on the occupier's net income for wholly owner-occupied farms in each of the four home countries in 1992-93.

French Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has made to the European Commission about the French emergency aid package for the French fishing industry; how much of this aid is new money; for what purposes it is paid; and what assessment she has made of the resulting advantage of French industry over the United Kingdom industry.

Mr. Jack: According to the announcement by the French Government, the aid package takes a variety of forms, including the rescheduling of loans, social payments to fishermen's families, advancement of reimbursement of market withdrawal costs, government-funded promotion of fish, and reduced national insurance contributions. The European Commission has responsibility for assessing state aids and for overseeing their compliance with articles 92 and 93 of the treaty. We have written to the Commission asking them to consider urgently whether the aid package gives French fishermen an unfair economic advantage and whether all its elements are in accordance with EU legal provisions. I understand that the Commission is actively pursuing this.

Farmers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the numerical difference between the number of United Kingdom citizens whose primary economic activity is farming and the number of public employees and private contractors employed by her Department.

Mr. Jack: No figures are available on the number of United Kingdom citizens whose primary economic activity is farming.

EU Enlargement (Agricultural Protection)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the notional loss to United Kingdom agricultural producers as a result of the transitional agricultural protection allowed to Austria, Sweden and Finland on their accession to the European Community.

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom agricultural industry should benefit from the immediate abolition of border controls as a result of the agreement by the applicant countries to introduce CAP support prices from the date of accession. While the European Union has authorised Austria, Finland and Norway to introduce transitional, degressive national aids where support levels for particular commodities are significantly reduced, such aids should not adversely effect United Kingdom producers. These arrangements will be approved and supervised by the European Commission to ensure that competition is not distorted.

Farm Animals (Poland)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are carried out to ensure that farm animals coming from Poland are free from radioactive contamination.

Mr. Soames: Council Regulation (EEC) No. 737/90 lays down conditions governing imports into the European Community of agricultural products, including live animals, originating in third countries following the Chernobyl accident. The regulation specifies maximum permitted levels of radioactivity in imported products and requires checks to be made at the point of entry to the Community. In the United Kingdom such checks are the responsibility of port health authorities, acting under the Imported Food Regulations 1984.

Food Imports

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the overall value of all food and food products imported from other EU countries; and what proportion, in cost terms of these imports from (a) France and (b) Germany were of (i) meat and (ii) dairy products in 1980, 1990 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: The following is the information requested:

Imports of food and food products into the United Kingdom from other EU countries

Year	EU 11 £ million	France £ million	Germany £ million
1980	2,611	356	210
1990	6,659	1,043	621
1992	7,597	1,252	773

Food imports from France and Germany that were meat products and dairy products

	From France		From Germany
Year	Meat per cent.	Dairy per cent.	Meat per cent.	Dairy per cent.
1980	9·6	8·8	12·6	16·0
1990	15·3	11·3	11·2	22·0
1992	16·9	11·3	8·8	20·6

Aggregates

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food in respect of how many licensing applications for marine dredging of aggregates her Department has commissioned research into the implication for fisheries of such applications in each year since 1989.

Mr. Jack: Applications for dredging licences are made to the Crown Estate, but the Department is consulted under the Government view procedure because of our concerns about the impact of dredging operations on the marine environment and fisheries. We look to licence applicants to produce a properly researched and comprehensive environmental statement in support of their applications and the Ministry's directorate of fisheries research has recently issued guidelines to indicate the range of issues which need to be considered. Copies of these guidelines have been placed in the Library of the House. In addition from time to time the Department's scientists carry out specific research of their own. Since 1989 they have initiated the following studies relating to marine aggregate extraction:

Migration of sole across Hastings Shingle Bank;
overwintering of crabs;
recolonisation of benthos in dredged areas;
the importance of Race Bank to the North Sea crab population;
physical effects on the seabed.

Some of the work is still in progress.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research her Department has commissioned into the implication for fisheries of the production application by the National Rivers Authority, Anglia, for a licence to extract aggregate from North Race bank—area 405; and when the results of the research are expected to be finalised.

Mr. Jack: To enable the Department to make its contribution under the Government view procedure on an application from the NRA to dredge sand from Race bank the Department has required a series of studies to be undertaken. These include a one-year programme of work being carried out by the Institute of Estuarine and Coastal Studies of Hull university under contract to NRA, in conjuction with MAFF scientists. Studies of the turbidity of the area to be dredged, the benthos and epibenthos and plankton surveys are all included. A series of potting surveys will be undertaken and two have already been carried out. Longer-term work will be undertaken on crab migration using tags and survey trawls will be undertaken of demersal and pelagic fish species.

Additionally MAFF undertook its own study of crab larval distribution in the southern North sea in July 1993 with particular emphasis on the Race bank and north Norfolk areas. Further physical studies by MAFF are continuing. These include current measurements, sidescan sonar, and underwater TV surveys of the benthos and epibenthos. We shall also be undertaking work on the particle size of sediments in the area.

Much of the work has already been completed and most of the outstanding results will be available later this year. In addition some of the longer-term work, such as the crab migration study, will continue to generate information over the next few years.

Mycoplasma Bovis

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farm holdings in the United Kingdom have been affected by mycoplasma bovis before and after the introduction of the single market in each year since 1990; how many cattle are currently infected; how and when the disease was introduced into the United Kingdom; and from where it came.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Mycoplasma bovis was first recorded in the United Kingdom in 1975. It is not a notifiable disease and comprehensive data is not maintained. There are no records of the total numbers of infected animals. The numbers of cases recorded by the veterinary investigation laboratories in the United Kingdom for the years concerned are:

Year	Farms
1990	61
1991	56
1992	36
1993	29

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which EU member states mycoplasma bovis is a notifiable disease.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Mycoplasma bovis is not a notifiable disease under EC legislation. We have no information on whether member states require notification under their own national legislation.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Government are taking to combat mycoplasma bovis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no statutory powers in respect of mycoplasma bovis.

Days at Sea

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current state of the dispute over the legality of the days at sea regime under the Sea Fisheries (Conservation) Act 1992.

Mr. Jack: Following a hearing between 1 November and 5 November 1993, and in accordance with its judgment of 2 December, the High Court has referred a number of questions on the days at sea regime to the European Court of Justice. The court's order includes a request for expedition, and the Government hope that the court in Luxembourg will recognise the need for a ruling within a reasonable timescale. Meanwhile, as I announced on 14 December, implementation of days at sea has been suspended.

Decommissioning

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many agreements have been made under the decommissioning scheme; on what date the agreement was finalised for the last fishing vessel to be decommissioned; and what is the schedule for the next sequence of decommissioning agreements.

Mr. Jack: Under the Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning) Scheme 1993 135 vessels have been decommissioned: all claims were submitted before 1 March, as required by the scheme.

Decommissioning formed part of a package of conservation measures which is being reviewed following the decision to suspend implementation of days at sea controls, and I am not yet in a position to announce a further scheme.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the position of the German Government regarding bovine spongiform encephalopathy and the importation of British cattle and beef into Germany.

Mr. Jack: Every necessary measure has been taken to protect both animal and public health in the United Kingdom and in our trade with the European Union. These measures have been endorsed not only by the European Commission and the Scientific Veterinary Committee in Brussels but by the World Health Organisation and its veterinary equivalent the OIE.

I have warned the German authorities that I would regard any unilateral action as contrary to Community law and technically indefensible.

The Commission has already told the German authorities that it shares my assessment of the adequacy of the current arrangements for both cattle and beef and that it would take appropriate action in the event of unilateral action.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list for each civil service grade in her Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. Jack: The information set out as at 1 March 1994 relates to non-industrial staff in MAFF, excluding agencies.

	Total staff	Percentage women
Grade 1	1	0·0
Grade 2	5	0·0
Grade 3	22	4·5
Grade 4	8	0·0
Grade 5	91	11·0
Grade 6	101	11·9
Grade 7	697	19·7
SEO	457	20·1
HEO	943	34·7
EO	1,428	45·2
AO	1,886	64·5
AA	2,011	66·8
Total	7,650	49·5

The figures are given by grade equivalent and include all permanent staff, casuals and staff on temporary release. Part-time staff are counted as 1·0.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the additional cost to EAGGF guarantee spending of the Breydel agreement.

Mr. Jack: The Breydel agreement concluded between the EU and the United States in the closing stages of negotiations on the Uruguay round agreement allows for greater flexibility in the phasing of cuts in subsidised agricultural exports over the period of the agreement's implementation. As a result, there will be an increased possibility of the export of wheat and wheat flour, cheese, beef, pigmeat, poultrymeat, wine, raw tobacco and incorporated foods between 1995 and 2000.

It is not possible, however, to estimate the precise cost to EAGGF guarantee since the cost of increased expenditure on export subsidies would, in the absence of the Breydel agreement, have had to be offset by some increase in expenditure on intervention or subsidised internal disposal for some of the commodities and quantities involved. In that the Breydel agreement opened the way for the successful conclusion of the Uruguay round it also avoided the very heavy budgetary costs which would have followed from the failure of the round.

TREASURY

Value Added Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the average daily arrears of value added tax for each year since 1980 (a) in absolute terms in (i) cash and (ii) current values and (b) as a proportion of tax liability.

Sir John Cope: Information for the years 1986 to 1993 is shown in the table:

Year	Amount (absolute) £ million	Current values £ million	Percentage of payment liability
1986	1,351·6	1,973·3	6·5
1987	1,218·6	1,706·0	5·4
1988	1,060·3	1,442·0	4·2
1989	1,085·2	1,367·4	3·8
1990	1,168·7	1,355·7	3·6
1991	1,623·5	1,753·4	4·3
1992	1,927·8	1,985·6	4·4
1993	1,993·9	2,013·8	4·4
31 December 1993	1,897·2	1,897·2	3·7

Current values represent absolute amounts inflated in line with the retail prices index to prices current at March 1994.

This measure was introduced in the year 1985-86, and no reconstruction can be done for previous years.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amount of value added tax outstanding for each year since 1980 (a) in absolute terms in (i) cash and (ii) current values and (b) as a proportion of tax liability.

Sir John Cope: Information for the years 1988 to 1993 is shown in the table.

Table of value added tax outstanding at 31 March

Year	(a) Amount (absolute) £ million	Current values £ million	(b) Percentage of payment liability Per cent.
1988	837·2	1,138·6	3·3
1989	884·2	1,114·1	3·1
1990	1,180·0	1,368·8	3·6
1991	1,466·6	1,583·9	3·8
1992	1,628·9	1,677·8	3·7
1993	1,572·6	1,588·3	3·5

Current values represent absolute amounts inflated in line with the retail prices index to prices current at March 1994.

Prior to the year ended 31 March 1988 information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the outstanding balance for collection of the value added tax default surcharge for each year since 1986 (a) in absolute terms in (i) cash and (ii) current values and (b) as a proportion of surcharge liability.

Sir John Cope: The available information is shown in the table.

Table of default surcharge outstanding balances at 31 March

Year	(a) Amount (absolute) £ million	Current values £ million	(b) Per cent. of default surcharge liability
1988	50·7	69·0	—
1989	61·7	77·7	—
1990	74·9	86·9	—
1991	102·7	110·9	—
1992	132·3	136·3	57
1993	116·3	117·5	59

Current values represent absolute amounts inflated in line with the retail prices index to prices current at March 1994.

No information is held on the surcharge outstanding for 1986 and 1987, or the surcharge liability for 1986-1991.

The absolute amount outstanding is a year-on-year cumulative total.

The percentage of default surcharge liability is based on the total surcharge assessment issued during that year.

Economic Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the reasons for the scale of (a) the United Kingdom deficit and (b) the German surplus in table 6.4 of "Eurostat Basic Statistics of the Community in 1993"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: A country's visible trade balance depends on the strength of its own domestic demand and that of its trading partners, and on the level of its competitiveness.

Capital (Rate of Return)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the rate of return on capital required by industry to justify investment in new manufacturing capacity solely for import saving and export and of the premium demanded to insure against an appreciation of the currency as a result of the Government's monetary and exchange rate policies.

Mr. Nelson: The upward movement of equity prices over the past couple of years does not necessarily signal any increase in industry's required rates of return. The January CBI "Industrial Trends Survey" showed, for the first time since July 1989, that on balance manufacturers are planning to increase investment in plant and machinery over the next 12 months.

Alcohol

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conclusions Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have drawn on whether United Kingdom citizens are permitted to purchase alcoholic liquor abroad, pay duty in that country and have the goods delivered by a third party to a United Kingdom addresss; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Goods subject to United Kingdom excise duty which have been bought duty paid in another member state of the EU may be brought into the United Kingdom without further duty payment only if they have been purchased by a private individual for personal use and have been personally transported to the United Kingdom by the purchaser. Purchases made in a country outside the EU in excess of a traveller's allowance are subject to United Kingdom duty however they are transported.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in the number of weekly hours worked in manufacturing industry since 1989; and what has been the impact on (a) shareholders, (b) the Exchequer and (c) the living standards of the British people.

Mr. Nelson: Statistics on the weekly hours of manual workers in the manufacturing sector are published each month in the Employment Gazette, table 1.12. Manufacturing productivity performance has been exceptionally good in recent years, and this sector is well placed to continue contributing to sustained economic recovery.

European Community

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has of the extent to which the economic losses from EEC membership foreseen in the economic assessment White Paper of 1970—Cmnd. 4289—have been offset by gains; what the gains have been; and what he now assesses as being the balance of advantages.

Mr. Nelson: As paragraph 104 of the White Paper said, this is not a question to which any calculations could give a precise mathematical answer. Further, there have been major changes since 1970 in the economic, financial and trading relationship between the United Kingdom and the EC. A full update of all the contents of the White Paper could be undertaken only at a disproportionate cost.

Open Government

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the implications for the operation of his Department of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury will use the code of practice to build on its current arrangements for the provision of information. Details of the administrative arrangements will be available shortly.

Economic Growth

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average rate of economic growth per annum in the United Kingdom in the period from 1964 (a) until the United Kingdom joined the EEC and (b) since the United Kingdom joined the EEC.

Mr. Nelson: Average growth rates for gross domestic product can be found in table 16.10 of the 1993 edition of the CSO Blue Book: "United Kingdom National Accounts", which is available in the House of Commons Library.

VAT (Domestic Fuel)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to ensure that VAT is imposed only on fuel consumed after 1 April, and not before this date.

Sir John Cope: Transitional rules already exist giving fuel suppliers the option not to charge VAT on supplies made before 1 April. Customs have had meetings with British Gas and the electricity companies and arrangements are in the place for these suppliers to apportion bills straddling 1 April to take account of estimates of zero-rated supplies made before 1 April.

The Oval

Ms Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what powers the Treasury may object to any proposal by the Duchy of Cornwall to sell the freehold of the Oval.

Mr. Dorrell: The Duchy requires Treasury approval under section 11 of the Duchy of Cornwall Management Act 1863 for any sale or disposal of Duchy land or property. Before approving any such transactions, the Treasury needs to be satisfied that the Duchy will receive the full commercial value of the land or property being disposed.

Under section 7 of the Duchy of Cornwall Management Act 1982, upon application by the Duchy, the Treasury can approve a sale or disposal at less than full value where the latter would be conducive to the good management of the Duchy. In exercising its authority, the Treasury has to take into account any effect on persons living on, or in the vicinity of, the land and to have regard to the interests of future Dukes.

If the Duchy does not satisfy the conditions for an approval under section 11 of the 1863 Act or under section 7 of the 1982 Act, the Treasury would object to the proposed transaction.

The Duchy of Cornwall is responsible for the day-to-day management of its assets, and for seeking Treasury approval to a sale or disposal of any land or property.

Funding Policy

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for funding policy in 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Chancellor has decided to set an annual remit for the Bank of England's operations in the gilt market to clarify responsibilities between the Treasury and the Bank, and to explain the Government's intentions to the markets. The remit will be published before the start of each new financial year.

Every year, the Government aim to sell enough gilts and national savings products fully to fund the PSBR, maturing debt that needs to be refinanced, and any net increase in the United Kingdom's foreign exchange reserves. There is no change to the Government's funding policy as set out in the November 1993 medium-term financial strategy.

The Treasury is responsible for all borrowing for the National Loans Fund, under the terms of the National Loans Act 1968. The Bank of England has long been the Government's adviser and agent in the gilt market, where the bulk of these funding operations are carried out.

The Chancellor will also give the Bank guidelines for the detailed operation of its remit. In the past, individual decisions on funding were taken after discussion between Treasury Ministers, Treasury officials, and the Bank of England. In future, any operations the Bank proposes that fall within the remit and the guidelines will normally be approved by Treasury officials. The Bank will send a monthly report to Treasury Ministers on progress, and there will be regular review meetings between the Treasury, the Bank and the Department for National Savings.

The remit for 1994-95 is as follows:

Funding requirement

As set out in the November 1993 Financial Statement and Budget Report, the Government will continue to operate a full fund policy.

The PSBR for 1994-95 was forecast in the Budget to be £38 billion. Some £9 billion of gilts are expected to mature in market hands and need to be refinanced. Maturing and withdrawn National Savings products will be netted off the National Savings contribution to funding, rather than included in the funding requirement. It is not possible at this stage accurately to forecast net changes over the year in the foreign currency reserves, so these will be assumed to remain unchanged on balance. Any overfunding in 1993-94 will reduce the funding requirement in 1994-95, and any underfunding increase it. The funding outturn for 1993-94 is not yet known.

The funding requirement for 1994-95 is currently forecast to be around £47 billion, adjusted for any over- or under-funding carried forward from 1993-94, and subject to any changes in the Reserves.

National Savings

The net contribution of National Savings to funding (including accrued interest) is assumed to be around £3¼ billion. this is not a target, but an estimate based on experience in previous years and forecasts for 1994-95.

Other debt sales

Net sales of government debt instruments other than gilts and National Savings are expected to make a negligible contribution to funding.

Sales of gilts to banks and building societies

As announced at Budget time, the sales of gilts to banks and building societes in 1992-93 will be taken into account before the end of 1994-95. These amount to £6·8 billion, and the required level of gilt sales will be reduced by that amount.

Quantity of gilt sales

The Bank of England will aim to meet the remainder of the funding requirement by selling gilts to the private sector on the government's behalf. On the basis of the Budget forecast, this means selling approximately £37 billion of gilts, adjusted for any over or under-funding carried forward from 1993-94, and any change in the Reserves.

Pace of funding

The Bank should aim to sell at a broadly even pace through the year.

Methods of sale

Auctions will continue to form the backbone of gilt-edged funding. They will be held at broadly monthly intervals, each normally on the last Wednesday of a calendar month. Each auction should be between £2 and 4 billion of stock.

The remainder of gilt sales may be made by ad hoc taps and tenders.

Review

This remit may be reviewed and, if appropriate, revised by Her Majesty's Treasury from time to time. Revisions will be published.

G7 Jobs Conference

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report on the G7 jobs conference in Detroit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Secretary of State for Employment and I attended the G7 jobs conference in Detroit on 14 to 15 March. Finance and Labour Ministers of the G7, together with some Economics Ministers and representatives of the European Union, attended this meeting, which was opened by President Clinton and presided over by Vice-President Gore. It was the first meeting of G7 Finance and Labour Ministers.

In his keynote opening speech President Clinton said that, in a world of accelerating technological advance, the major countries had to face a choice between protectionism and following the path of change. He said that America had chosen the latter. The President emphasised that people needed to be prepared for a higher skill world; to be ready to change jobs many times in a career; and to change attitudes towards employment of both the young and the old. In conclusion, he believed that the industrialised countries should discuss these issues because it would become easier for them to adopt the right policies at home if they were a part of an international consensus.

There was widespread support for these sentiments throughout the rest of the conference. None of the Ministers supported protectionism. The Secretary of State for Employment and I emphasised the need for sound macroeconomic policies to achieve sustainable growth, open and competitive economies with no protectionism to encourage innovation and enterprise, the importance of improved education and training and active labour market policies, together with flexible labour markets, the need to reduce the costs of employment, and the vital role of small and medium-sized enterprises.

US Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen read out a chairman's statement on behalf of the G7 at the end of the conference. A copy of this has been placed in the Library of the House. The chairman's statement supports the principles and policies that the Secretary of State for Employment and I advocated. It ends with a request for the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development to examine the relationship between productivity, job creation and technology, especially information technology; and to expand its analysis of data on job creation and job loss. The Ministers present agreed to send employment experts to learn about the employment and training programmes of the others.

I believe that this unique conference was very valuable. It will ensure that policies to reduce unemployment will be high on the agenda of G7 Governments, and will be discussed by Heads of Government at the forthcoming G7 economic summit in Naples. Examining and assessing the policies of other countries and achieving a wide measure of agreement on the way ahead will help our Governments to implement the policies necessary to reduce unemployment. The UK Government are absolutely committed to co-operating with this policy agenda in the G7 and the European Union and to strengthening policies that will reduce unemployment.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of gross domestic product and gross domestic product per head, for (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland, (d) Northern Ireland and (e) the United Kingdom; and if he will indicate the appropriate percentages of the United Kingdom average in each case from (a) to (d).

Mr. Nelson: The latest available estimates were published in the December 1993 issue of "Economic Trends", available in the House of Commons Library.

Tax Coding Notices

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number and proportion of incorrect notices of tax coding for 1994-95 which the Inland Revenue has sent out; what are the principal reasons for the errors; and what action is being taken to ensure more accurate notices of coding in future.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Code numbers based on the latest information available to the Indland Revenue are issued in January and February each year. They may subsequently need to be amended if updated information is received or if the Inland Revenue has made an error. It is therefore too soon to estimate the number and proportion of 1994-95 code numbers that for any reason will need amending. The Inland Revenue is constantly striving to improve the quality of service it gives to taxpayers. It is setting targets for getting tax affairs right first time and has systems in place to monitor its performance.

SCOTLAND

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. Lang: The number of staff and the percentage of women in post in the Scottish Office and associated departments as at 1 January 1994, excluding the Scottish Prison Service, are shown by grade equivalent in the table.

Grade (and equivalents)	Women	Total staff	Percentage of Women

Slopping Out

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each prison in Scotland his plans for ending slopping out.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 March 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under the chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. John McFall, dated 17 March 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about slopping out in Scottish prisons.

With the recent completion of the installation of in-cell toilets at Inverness and Aberdeen Prisons, there are 6 prison establishments, out of the total of 20 in Scotland, which in varying degrees require further sanitation facilities. These are Barlinnie, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Perth, Perterhead and Polmont YOI. (Greenock Prison has 4 cells without sanitation but these are held for observation purposes only).

A high priority is being attributed to the ending of slopping out, as indicated in the Estates Strategy for the Service (contained at Chapter 9 of, and Annex B to, the Scottish Prison Service Corporate Plan, a copy of which was deposited in the Library in August of last year). Work is continuing to be undertaken through a rolling programme which, among other things, has to take account of the feasibility of cells being taken out of use for this purpose at a time of high prisoner numbers.

Work is currently underway in installing an electronic locking system, to provide access to night sanitation, throughout a large part of the cellular accommodation at Polmont YOI and it is planned that this will be followed up by projects to provide in-cell toilets in the remaining accommodation.

In the coming financial year, sanitation work is planned to commence in Perth (E Hall), Edinburgh (D Hall), Dumfries (C Wing) and, provisionally, in the latter part of the year, in Barlinnie (D Hall). If we can maintain subsequent progress I would expect the programme to be completed by the end of the 1990s at the latest. Prisoner numbers will however have an important influence on how quickly work can be undertaken.

HEALTH

Life Expectancy and Infant Mortality

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in (a) life expectancy and (b) infant mortality in the last 10 years in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) other OECD countries.

Mr. Sackville: Death rates in almost every age and sex group in the United Kingdom have been steadily declining over the period 1982 to 1991. This has resulted in increases in life expectancy.

From 1982 to 1991 the United Kingdom life expectancy at birth has increased: males from 71·1 years in 1982 to 73·3 years in 1991, an increase of 2·2 years; and females from 77·0 years in 1982 to 78·8 years in 1991, an increase of 1·8 years. For the same period the United Kingdom infant mortality rate has decreased from 1,098·1, per 100,000 livebirths, in 1982 to 735·0 in 1991, a decrease of 33 per cent. Further information is shown in the table.

The information for other Organisation of Economic Co-operation Development countries will be placed in the Library.

Nurse-patient Ratio

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 514, if she will provide figures for the ratio of qualified nursing and midwifery staff to patients (a) by region and (b) by district in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Disability Symbol

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to encourage health authorities and trusts to qualify for the disability symbol.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts and health authorities are free to work with their local employment service placing, assessment and counselling team to qualify for registration on the approved PACT list of disability symbol users.

Ovarian Cancer

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths of women for each of the last five years for which information is available were due to ovarian cancer; what is the latest estimate of the risk of death within five years of the onset of this disease; and what steps are being taken by her Department, and by hospital trusts, to improve detection in the earliest possible stages.

Mr. Sackville: Deaths from ovarian cancer in England and Wales for the years 1988-92 are shown in the table. The average relative five-year survival rate after diagnosis of ovarian cancer is 28 per cent. based on cancers registered in 1981. Early diagnosis of ovarian cancer offers the best prognosis. Research to develop an effective means of ovarian screening in reducing mortality is being undertaken by the Medical Research Council which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who spent £318,000 on ovarian cancer research in 1992-93; as well as by national health service bodies and cancer charities.

Deaths from ovarian cancer in England and Wales in the years 1988-92

Year	Deaths
1988	3,798
1989	3,934
1990	3,995
1991	3,866
1992	3,880

PM10 Particulates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of the Committee on Medical Effects' report into the health threat posed by PM10 particulates in the air;

(2) what is her estimate of the annual number of deaths caused by PM10 particulates;

(3) what assessment she has made of the link between (a) cardiovascular and (b) respiratory disease and levels of PM10 particulates in the air;

(4) what assessment she has made of the link between respiratory disease and particulates of less than 2·5 micrometres across.

Mr. Sackville: The Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollution has not yet reported on the adverse health effects of PM10 particulates in the air. In 1992, the Advisory Group on the Medical Aspects of Air Pollution Episodes concluded that particulate levels were low and not thought to pose a significant threat to health. They stated that this conclusion was tentative and noted gaps in the available information.

COMEAP has since stated that there appears to be sufficient evidence from recent studies in a number of countries to give cause for concern about the possible effects of current levels of fine particles upon health. This is a complex area and it is not yet clear what role changes in low levels of particles play vis-a-vis changes in levels of other pollutants and temperature and humidity in causing the changes in indices of mortality recorded in a number of studies. Despite these difficulties, reductions in levels of fine particles should be welcomed.

In response to a request from the Department for definitive advice on this issue COMEAP has set up a sub-group on particles to assess the latest evidence on the health effects of all particulate matter and advise on needs for further research.

Deaths are not recorded as caused by exposure to particulate matter. The sub-group examining the assumptions underlying the published calculations of mortality and will advise the Department as to whether an estimate of deaths due to particulates can be determined.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the health benefits of a limit on acceptable levels of PM10 particulates in the air.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is advised by the Committee on Medical Effects of Air Pollution, which have set up a particulates sub-group specifically to advise on the health effects of particulate matter. Additionally, the Expert Panel on Air Quality Standards makes recommendations on these to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. EPAQS and the Department of the Environment are considering a standard for particles.

Some members of COMEAP also serve on EPAQS and the professional staff from the Department are members of the secretariat.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the link between asthma and PM10 particulates in the air.

Mr. Sackville: The Advisory Group on the Medical Aspects of Air Pollution Episodes reported in 1992 that suspended particulate matter contains acidic components which, in laboratory studies, have produced inconsistent changes in indices of lung function in asthmatic subjects. The Department has asked for further advice from the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollution and they have set up a sub-group to assess the relationship between asthma and all air pollutants.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of a correlation between high levels of PM10 particulates in the air and hospital admissions.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is funding a study into the health effects of the London air pollution episode in December 1991. This study will relate hospital admissions to levels of air pollutants. A study conducted in Birmingham of the period 1988 to 1990 and published earlier this year has shown that levels of particulates measured as British standard black smoke are a significant predictor of hospital admissions for asthma and all other acute respiratory disorders.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expansion there has been in the facilities during the last three years at the Doncaster royal infirmary and Mexborough Montagu hospital trust for treating children with brain tumours and other cancers.

Mr. Sackville: The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Mr. C. Bryant, for details.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken by (a) her Department, (b) Trent regional health authority and (c) Doncaster health authority into the incidence of brain tumours or the incidence of cancers within the Trent regional health authority and Doncaster health authority areas.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional cancer registries are the major source of information on cancer incidence rates. The Department funds the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to produce data on national incidence rates, but does not fund analysis of this data on a regional basis. The Department also funds the Childhood Cancer Research Group at the University of Oxford through which research is carried out into childhood cancers of all kinds. This research is largely carried out on a national basis and provides data on national incidence rates of childhood cancers.

Analysis of cancer incidence rates at a regional or district health authority level can be carried out by the Regional Cancer Registry, if requested by regional or district health authorities. Last year, the director of public health for the Doncaster health authority obtained data from the Trent Regional Cancer Registry about the occurrence of brain tumours, both in the Doncaster district and in the Trent region, for the period 1982-88. These data showed that the rate of ocurrence of brain tumours in Doncaster is consistent with the rates in Trent and in England and Wales, since 1982.

Dentistry

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 159, what information her Department has available centrally on (a) the number of dental surgeons (i) providing national health service treatment and (ii) not providing national health service treatment and (b) the division of costs between NHS and non-NHS treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: Available information is shown in the table. The table shows, for the Avon family health services authority area, national health service expenditure on gross fees paid to dentists providing general dental services and the number of dentists in contract with Avon FHSA to provide NHS dental treatment.

Gross fees and number of dentists—Avon Family Health Services Authority, 1983-84 and 1988-89 to 1993-94

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been deregistered by their dentists in each regional health authority area in England and Wales during each of the last four years; and how many dentists in each of the regional health authority areas have been involved in the deregistration.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested, which has been collected centrally for England since 3 July 1992, is shown in the table. Over the period July 1992 to December 1993 there was a net increase of over 600,000 patients registered with dentists and 264 dentists in contract with family health services authorities.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Patient Charges

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of revenue raised annually from charges to patients within the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The total amount of revenue raised in England in 1992-93 from charges to patients within the national health service was £844,166,453. This figure covers the whole range of charges which may be made to patients by NHS bodies and includes; prescription charges; dental charges; the sale of dried baby milk under the welfare food scheme; and charges to patients in both NHS trust hospitals and directly managed units, including private patients in NHS hospitals.

Limb Defects

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions her Department has held with the Trent regional health authority and Doncaster health authority concerning the incidence of upper limb defects in children within the Trent regional health authority and Doncaster health authority areas.

Mr. Sackville: None. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) on 1 March at column 678.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what contacts have taken place during investigations of limb defects in the area of the Trent regional health authority and Doncaster health authority between the authorities and the British Medical Association and other organisations;

(2) which agencies in the Trent regional health authority are charged with monitoring the incidence of limb defects in children born within the health authority's area.

Mr. Sackville: These are matters for the Trent regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Michael Carlisle, the chairman, for details.

NHS Numbers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how copyright can be used to protect the NHS number; and whether copyright would prevent the NHS number from being used by other Government Departments, the police or security services.

Mr. Sackville: Copyright infringement, of the use of the national health service number system outside of the NHS, will be taken up by the Controller Her Majesty's Stationery Office, by way of injunction and damages.

Copyright does not cover the use of the NHS number by other Government Departments. However, there is no intention to use the NHS number for anything other than NHS purposes.

Doncaster Family Health Services Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the amount, recipient and date of all grants made by Doncaster family health services authority by year since 1990-91.

Mr. Sackville: The information in the annual accounts of Doncaster family health services authority is shown in the table.

Year	Grants to General Medical Service Trainers £	Practice Teams and Premises—Improvements REVENUE £	Practice Teams and Premises—Improvements CAPITAL £
1990-91	38,498	—[1]	[1]2,491

1992-93	27,472	50,130	100,514

Notes to table:
1. [1]In 1990-91 the expenditure was reported on a different basis to that in subsequent years i.e. as "Improvement Grants", not analysed between revenue and capital.
2. 1992-93 figures are subject to National Audit Office approval.

Complaints

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if all health authorities and NHS hospitals have yet published details of both the number of complaints received and how long it has taken to deal with them; and what progress has been made in centrally collecting and publishing this information.

Dr. Mawhinney: All district health authorities have published annual reports on patients charter performance, including data on the right to complain. This means that information is available locally on the handling of complaints. We will be reviewing the information we collect on complaints and publish centrally, in the light of recommendations of Professor Wilson's independent review committee on national health service complaints procedures, and those made by the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

International Year of the Family

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to review their plans and policies for supporting family life in the international year of the family.

Mr. Bowis: The Government recognise the importance of the family as providing the essential environment for bringing up children and we give every priority and encouragement to the family in the development of policies. It seeks to ensure that all policies take account of their impact on families.

Government policy seeks to enable families to be self-supporting.

The role of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health will be to explain how the Government's policy initiatives affect the family.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security will continue to handle the day-to-day co-ordination of the Government's contribution to the United Nations International Year of the Family.

Marriages

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) 16-year-old, (b) 17-year-old and (c) 18-year-old people got married in each of the last three years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

The numbers of men and women who married at ages 16, 17 and 18 during the last three years for which the information is available are:

England and Wales

GPs (Practice Administration)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hours weekly on average were spent by general practitioners on practice administration in (a) 1985-86, (b) 1989-90 and 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the 1985-86 and 1989-90 surveys of general practitioners' workload, the reported average weekly time spent on practice administration associated with the provision of general medical services was 1·78 hours and 2·48 hours respectively. A further such survey ran for a year from November 1992; interim results, based on the first seven months' data, give a reported average of 3·53 hours a week.

Health Promotion Clinics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will make a statement on the value of health promotion clinics in general practice.

Dr. Mawhinney: New arrangements for health promotion in general practice, based on modern authorative medical opinion and in line with "The Health of the Nation" strategy, were introduced on 1 July 1993. Practice-based health promotion programmes play an important part in helping people to improve their health.

NHS Drugs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much profit in the last year was made from the prescription of drugs and other items which cost the NHS less than £4·75.

Dr. Mawhinney: The concept of "profit" has no meaning when applied to prescription charges.

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 346, on general practitioner fundholders preparatory allowances, what information she has received from regional health authorities in relation to the number of general practitioners who have received the preparatory management allowance in two or more years running.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 10 February at column 419.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy in respect of general practitioner fundholders both prescribing and dispensing drugs; what proposals she has to change this policy; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: In areas where patients do not have convenient access to a community pharmacy, dispensing by general practitioners—whether they are fundholders or non-fundholders—provides an important service. There are no plans to change this policy.

Psychiatric Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the total number of psychiatric beds in each year since 1979.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 16 February at column. 860.

Open Government

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the implications for the operation of her Department of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Sackville: The code of practice will reinforce and build on my Department's existing arrangements for the provision of information. Operational details are being finalised and will be available in due course.

Sex Education

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recommendations she has made to the Secretary of State for Education in relation to sex education in the school curriculum.

Mr. Sackville: The content of the curriculum, including sex education provision in schools, is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Education about sex education in schools.

Mr. Sackville: Ministers in both Departments are in regular touch on a number of issues including sex education.

Orthodontic Treatment

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the current waiting lists for all types of orthodontic treatment for children in Huddersfield and Dewsbury.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on waiting times for in-patient and day case treatment by specialty for district health authorities and trusts is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England". The latest published figures are for September 1993 and copies are available in the Library. Although information is available on waiting times for various paediatric specialties, orthodontic treatment for children is not separately listed.

Electricity Pylons

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the policy which allows electricity pylons to be sited near homes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Advice to Government, including both this Department and the Department of Trade and Industry, about radiation matters is provided by the National Radiological Protection Board. New electric lines above ground, with the exception of connections to individual customers and certain very minor developments, require the consent of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade who may also grant deemed planning permission.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 21 February at columns 40-41 concerning the question of any health risk.

Private Medical Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place a copy of her Department's written evidence to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on private medical services in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's evidence is summarised in paragraphs 10.2 to 10.9 of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on private medical services, a copy of which is available in the Library.

NHS Patients (Private Treatment)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued regarding the offer by NHS staff employed by trusts of private treatment to NHS patients in hospital accident and emergency departments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None. We are not aware of any such offer. The national health service will remain available to all on the basis of clinical need, not the ability to pay.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS consultants, by specialty, undertaking work in the private sector have failed to meet fully their contractual obligations to the NHS for each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service employers are responsible for satisfying themselves that consultants are fulfilling their contractual obligations. The information requested is not available centrally.

Hospital Beds, London

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what number of hospital beds she now determines are required in the capital so that London has the appropriate number of beds.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for hospitals themselves to determine the number of beds required locally taking account of the requirements of local health authorities and general practitioner fundholders.

Private Hotels

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued to regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities and trusts on the use of private hotels.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. National health service bodies are expected to apply value-for-money judgments on the use of such facilities.

Morning-after Pill

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions her Department had on making the morning-after pill available on request from a pharmacist.

Mr. Sackville: Any change to the legal classification of such medicines to allow them to be supplied by pharmacists without prescription would be subject to statutory consultation with all interested organisations.

Dental Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental patients have been deregistered in each family health service authority since July 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table. Since July 1992 there has been a net increase of over 600,000 patients registered with 264 dentists in contract with family health services authorities.

[1] There are a number of grades, mainly on Youth Treatment Service, which do not easily equate to Unified Grades.

Note: Casual staff have been excluded, as have staff on loan to other government departments, on maternity leave of more than three months, and on unpaid career breaks/study leave.

Private Medical Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings she has held over the past year with representatives of private medical service providers; and if she will give details of the identity of participants and the nature of the discussions.

Mr. Sackville: One, with the Independent Healthcare Association, where I met the chairman, chief executive and two board members at their request, at which they expressed their views on a number of issues.

NHS Trusts (Amenity Beds)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether charges levied by NHS trusts for amenity beds include a notional amount to cover, when appropriate, the additional cost of providing a better menu and exclusive use of television, telephone or bathroom.

Mr. Sackville: The charge levied by national health service trusts for amenity beds should cover all appropriate additional costs of facilities provided.

Health Benefits Scheme

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the review of the health benefits scheme including the availability of free prescriptions is now completed.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) on 15 February at column 669.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fine Defaulters

8. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many male persons were committed to prison in Northern Ireland for defaulting on a fine in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage of the total number of male persons committed to prison this represents.

Sir John Wheeler: In 1992, the latest year for which figures are available, 1,671 male persons were received into prison in Northern Ireland for fine default, comprising 34 per cent. of all males received into prison in that year. However, since fine defaulters spend, on average, a much shorter time in prison than other categories of prisoner, they accounted for only 2 per cent. of the average daily population. Approximately one third of those received pay the outstanding fine in whole or in part at the time of reception or shortly afterwards.

Medical Consultants

9. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to improve consultancy cover in the medical specialties to the level recommended by the Northern Ireland Department of Health and Social Services.

Mr. Ancram: Additional consultant posts have been created and further posts will be established in the coming year through the Department's initiative on junior doctors hours. Consultant numbers will also increase as a result of the implementation of the Calman report, and rationalisation of acute hospital services should result in improved consultant cover in all specialties.

Draft Children Order

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to publish the revised draft Children Order.

Mr. Ancram: I do not wish to prejudice the consideration which my noble Friend will be giving to the comments made during the consultation period and in the recent debate in the Northern Ireland Committee. However we hope to have the order laid before the House rises for the summer recess.

Cross-border Security

11. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further progress has been made with the Government of the Irish Republic about cross-border security co-operation.

17. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security.

Sir John Wheeler: The Irish security forces have continued to achieve very positive results against the terrorists, including for example the interception of a primed Mk 15 mortar in Donegal two weeks ago. As the Chief Constable of the RUC made clear yesterday, practical co-operation is at an all-time high and both the British and Irish Governments remain committed to working closely together to maintain and enhance that co-operation.

Political Talks

12. Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his most recent discussions with representatives of the political parties in Northern Ireland and the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

13. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for re-starting talks to determine new political structures for Northern Ireland.

16. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he is making in convening talks between the political parties in Northern Ireland.

27. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the talks he has had with the parties in Northern Ireland and the Irish Government relating to Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) earlier today.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the basis of the talks between the Northern Ireland political parties and with the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 16 March 1994]: The Government's bilateral discussions with three of the Northern Ireland constitutional political parties and their dialogue with the Irish Government, are taking place in accordance with the statement of 26 March 1991 and upon the platform represented by the joint declaration issued on 15 December 1993.

Prospects For Industry

14. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about future prospects for industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: I have received a number of representations about future prospects for industry in Northern Ireland. The number of people employed now stands at 551,200. This is a new record for the Province. Together with recent good news about inward investment, it confirms the excellent prospects for industry in Northern Ireland.

Joint Declaration

15. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest position relating to the joint declaration.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) earlier today.

Security Situation

18. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his assessment of the current security situation in the Province.

22. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on security in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The level of threat from terrorists remains high, but the security forces have been conspicuously successful in preventing attacks and apprehending suspects. Over the last month there have been over 170 arrests of suspected terrorists, 42 people have been charged with scheduled offences, and 16 weapons and 1,075 lb of explosives have been recovered.

Community Care

19. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on community care policy.

Mr. Ancram: The community care reforms introduced in Northern Ireland on 1 April 1993 were first promulgated in the Department's 1990 policy document "People First", which is the equivalent of "Caring for People". These new arrangements for the provision of community care services by health and social services boards are intended to ensure that, as far as possible, people are cared for and supported in community-based settings rather than hospital.

Inward Investment

20. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current level of inward investment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: So far this year the Industrial Development Board has secured seven new inward investment projects involving a total investment of approximately £213 million and promising 1,476 new jobs. I am confident that there will be further announcements before the end of the financial year.

Further and Higher Education

21. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of school leavers are now entering further and higher education in Northern Ireland; and what the figures were in 1979.

Mr. Ancram: A total of 58.2 per cent. of school leavers in Northern Ireland entered further and higher education in 1991-92. The figure for 1979-80 was 33.2 per cent.

Building Workers

23. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he proposes to reduce unemployment among building workers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: Government policy is to create the conditions which produce economic growth leading to demand for construction workers and other employees. In Northern Ireland violence continues to be one of the greatest impediments to such growth. Nevertheless programmes are available from the Training and Employment Agency to help unemployed building workers re-train or find employment.

Interrogation Procedures

24. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for extending to Northern Ireland the tape recording of interrogations and access to legal advice for suspects.

Sir John Wheeler: Both these issues have been raised by Sir Louis Blom-Cooper in his first report as Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres. His report will receive careful consideration.

Interviews with suspects detained under the Police and Criminal Evidence (NI) Order 1989 are currently tape-recorded. The Government remain firmly of the view that recording of interviews with terrorist suspects in Northern Ireland would not be in the overall interests of justice.

Integrated Education

25. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the growth of integrated education in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Parental demand for integrated education continues at a high level. Twelve new integrated schools have been established since 1989, when legislation to encourage and facilitate its development was enacted. 4,000 pupils now attend 21 integrated schools, primary and secondary, throughout Northern Ireland. The Government will continue to respond positively to viable proposals.

Legislative Procedures

28. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the reform of current legislative procedures for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The basic procedures for legislating for Northern Ireland are well understood but my right hon. and learned Friend is always prepared to consider reasonable proposals for improvement. The Select Committee on Northern Ireland Affairs will be able to provide additional scrutiny.

Police Authority

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in new appointments to the Northern Ireland Police Authority.

Sir John Wheeler: The term of office for the current Police Authority for Northern Ireland expires on 28 June. Nominations for potential members have been invited from a wide range of interested organisations. Thirty-two bodies, including 23 district councils, have so far put forward nominations.

Housing

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what terms and conditions two blocks of flats at Camross park, Rathcoole, Co. Antrim were leased to Newtownabbey community project by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that two blocks of flats at Camross park, Rathcoole, have been let to Newtownabbey community project, subject to the following terms and conditions:

1. The tenant shall vacate the premises when required to do so by the Landlord.
2. The tenant shall be responsible for maintenance and repair of the dwelling.
3. The tenant is responsible for payment of rates.
4. The tenant shall be responsible for ensuring that the persons using the premises act in a reasonable manner, both in respect of the treatment of the building and adjoining property and that they avoid conduct likely to cause a nuisance to others, and for ensuring that the dwelling is in a reasonable condition at the termination of tenancy.
5. Written permission from the Housing Executive is required for the following matters:
   (a) To carry out structural alterations and to erect any structure on the grounds of the dwelling.
   (b) To assign or sublet the dwelling.
6. The Newtownabbey Community Project hereby agrees:
   (a) Not to use or permit the premises to be used for any purpose which is in breach of or contravenes any law, order, or regulation for the time being in force.
   (b) Not to use or permit the premises to be used for any purpose which will cause damage to the premises or injury to any person using the premises.
   (c) Not to sell or permit the sale or consumption of intoxicating liquor on the premises.
   (d) To use the premises only for the lawful business of the community project.
7. The Executive reserves the right on notice being given (save in the case of emergency) for the Executive's duly authorised representatives to inspect the premises at any reasonable hour.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if approval was obtained from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to sub-let flats at Camross park, Rathcoole, Co. Antrim to a pigeon club by Newtownabbey community project.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that no approval was obtained from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to sub-let flats at Camross park, Rathcoole to a pigeon club, by Newtownabbey community project.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future security of tenure of a pigeon club in Northern Ireland Housing Executive property at Camross park, Rathcoole, Co. Antrim, sub-let by Newtownabbey community project group.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that Newtownabbey community project, in permitting the use of all or part of the premises to the East Way Housing Pigeon Society, is in breach of the tenancy agreement. The Housing Executive was notified of the breach of tenancy on 9 March 1994 and a formal letter instructing the project to take immediate action to terminate the sub-let to the Pigeon Society was issued on 11 March 1994.

Compensation

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend the proposed tariff régime for compensation in England to the victims of crime to Northern Ireland; and if he has plans to consult interested organisations in the Province.

Sir John Wheeler: I am currently considering what lessons might be learnt for Northern Ireland from the forthcoming changes to the criminal injuries compensation scheme in Great Britain, details of which were published recently by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

If, as a consequence, I consider that changes should be made to the current compensation scheme in Northern Ireland, I am committed to public consultation with interested parties in the Province.

Hume-Adams Agreement

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek a copy of the agreement between the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) and Mr. Gerry Adams.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: No. I believe, and the hon. Member for Foyle has stated, that the Downing Street declaration sufficiently sets out the principles that must govern the future. They establish that in Northern Ireland there can be no place, and no justification, for politically motivated violence, whether of the kind still being perpetrated by the Provisional IRA with Mr. Adams' justification or at all.

School Sports Facilities

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many schools have (a) some playing fields and (b) artificial games areas, excluding playground areas; what were the figures (i) five, (ii) 10 and (iii) 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, information compiled in 1989 indicates that some 325 schools had grass pitches and 314 had hard surface games areas; some schools had both types of provision.

Blood

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the number of blood donors, (b) the quantity of blood donated and (c) the amount of blood required for each health board for each month since April 1993.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 10 March 1994]: The Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service is a regional service and figures are not collected by board but on a province-wide basis.

The number of blood donors on the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service panel is 82,138, while the quantity of blood donated over 1992-93 totalled 63,848 units.

Information on the amount of blood issued for each month since April 1993 is currently not available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Legislation (Amendments)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give examples of small and less controversial amendments to primary legislation, which would be unlikely to be made due to time constraint, which could not be made in the same manner as those contained in chapter II of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill, as indicated in his evidence before the Procedure Committee on 16 February.

Mr. Newton: Chapter 3 of the booklet "Deregulation —Cutting Red Tape" identifies 55 measures which the Government believe would be suitable for the order-making power in clauses 1 to 4 of the Bill. One example which I quoted in my evidence to the Procedure Committee was an amendment to the Patents Act 1977 and the Registered Designs Act 1949 to enable the Patent Office to accept documents in forms other than paper, such as electronic filing. The deregulation initiative is a rolling programme and more measures are expected to come forward in the future.

Exhibitions (Upper Waiting Hall)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to Lancashire Aerospace to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 9 May to Friday 13 May.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the sesquicentenary of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 25 April to Friday 29 April.

EDUCATION

Adult and Further Education

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of enrolments of students aged under 19 years for adult education courses and further education colleges with the Inner London education authority in 1989 and for its successor bodies for each year since.

Mr. Boswell: The number of enrolments by students aged under 19 years on further education courses in adult education centres and further and higher education colleges funded by ILEA in 1989 or by its successor bodies in subsequent years are shown in the following table:

The number of enrolments as of 1 November of the appropriate year by students aged under 19 on further education courses in adult education centres and in further and higher education colleges in Inner London

Academic Year	Number of Enrolments (thousands)
1989-90	31
1990-91	29
1991-92	27
1992-93	29

Staffordshire Schools

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on how many occasions he has visited schools in Staffordshire; if he will give details; and when he next expects to visit schools in Staffordshire.

Mr. Patten: I have not visited any schools in Staffordshire, and at present I have no plans to do so.

Science Education

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the percentages of young people aged 18 to 21 years in full-time education studying a science subject in each of the member countries of the OECD.

Mr. Robin Squire: The readily available information is given in the table.

Students[1] enrolled on higher education science[2] courses as a proportion of the population aged 18-25 in 1991[3]

Nursing

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether mandatory awards will be offered to lecturers in nursing who are being required to upgrade their qualifications to degree level.

Mr. Boswell: Lecturers in nursing who enrol on designated courses and who seek a mandatory award are subject to the same conditions in respect of personal eligibility and previous study as apply to other students.

Primary Schools (Surplus Places)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will initiate a survey by local education authorities of some, or all, of their primary schools which under his criteria possess surplus places of between 20 per cent. and 40 per cent. of those notional place numbers, to assess the impact on their activities prohibiting any use of that proportion of their space currently in use.

Mr. Forth: We have no plans to require local authorities to undertake such a survey. It is for local authorities in the first instance to make plans for the removal of surplus capacity, including the scale and method of rationalisation.

School Premises

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if his formula for a school place in secondary schools permits each pupil within its specified pupil total to possess inside an all-purpose class, or similar room, a personal desk or locker of minimum cubic capacity.

Mr. Forth: The formula for measuring the capacity of schools used in the implementation of the more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 does not cover this level of detail. It is up to schools how they use and furnish their teaching accommodation.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if, in his assessment of school occupancy, he includes classrooms, workshops or other buildings of a temporary character; and when his policy was last changed and reviewed;

(2) what adjustments have been made in the minimum standards in relation to a school place in secondary schools in the last 15 years; for what reasons; and what assessment he has made of any change in pupil space requirements consequent on the introduction of the national curriculum;

(3) if he will state the latest official criteria of what constitutes a school place in (a) maintained primary and (b) maintained secondary schools; and what comparative studies have been made between the minimum standards laid down in (b) and any group of schools whose heads are members of the (i) headmasters or (ii) headmistresses conferences.

Mr. Forth: The more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 mean that schools must, in most cases, admit pupils until they are full. Each school has a standard number, or an approved admission number in the case of a grant-maintained school, which reflects previous levels of intake or the school's physical capacity as measured against a prescribed formula. All suitable permanent and temporary accommodation is taken into account in the assessment of standard numbers or approved admissions numbers.

The provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 and the advice contained in departmental circulars 11/88, Admissions to County and Voluntary Schools, and 6/91, Implementation of More Open Enrolment in Primary Schools, represent the latest steps in a process of continual refinement in the calculation of school capacity.

I am not aware of any comparative studies covering independent schools.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice, or requirement, he makes in approving capital consent for new secondary buildings in respect of (a) the need for split, or smaller, teaching groups for certain classes held in rooms deemed capable of accommodating 30 or more pupils and (b) the need for a significant proportion of space to remain empty in order to construct an educationally efficient timetable.

Mr. Forth: Capital support for new or extended secondary schools is made available through annual capital guidelines to LEAs, and by grant aid for voluntary aided and self-governing GM schools, according to the assessed need for new places in an area. The level of support is based on cost multipliers which reflect the average cost of providing new places. The cost multipliers are based on costs actually achieved in LEA building projects.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what cost limits applied to newly built primary and secondary schools, respectively, in respect of costs per place of the building, net of site costs, and the name, date and authorisation of any official publication advising on how minimum space requirements could be obtained within the limits without prejudice to other costs, including future maintenance.

Mr. Forth: There are no cost limits in respect of expenditure per place on individual LEA schools, although limits may, in the case of voluntary aided schools, be placed on the levels of our grant aid. Under the capital finance system LEAs are free to spend what they like on individual projects. In determining the basic need—that is, the requirement for new school places in areas of population growth—element of the 1994-95 annual capital guidelines, the Department used per place cost multipliers, valued as follows:

Primary	3,747
Secondary	5,116
Secondary (16+)	6,128

These are based on actual LEA projects providing places in new schools and extensions. They include the cost of the buildings, external works, furniture and equipment and professional fees. They do not include the cost of site purchases or VAT. The cost in each case represents a level of achievement being met by about a third of LEAs. The teaching standards adopted in the project are about 15 per cent. above the regulation minimum for a 210-place primary school, and about 8 per cent. above the minimum for a typical secondary school.

The Department's most recent guidance in respect of new primary schools, published in 1989 and called "St. John's School Sefton: the design of a new primary school," illustrated lower teaching area standards than those indicated above. No recent comparable publication has been produced related to secondary schools.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what study he has made, or is planning, of the amount of space available per secondary pupil in any group of independent schools, which are charitable foundations, which are making economical use of their premises.

Mr. Forth: None.

School Leavers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of female school leavers left school with five or more GCSEs at grades A to C in Merseyside in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Robin Squire: The percentage of female school leavers estimated to be leaving maintained schools with five or more GCSEs at grades A to C in Merseyside in 1992 was 33·6 per cent. The latest year for which the information is available is 1991-92, when the school examinations survey was undertaken with a reduced sample of 3 per cent.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. Boswell: The figures are as follows:

	Total in grade	Women as a percentage of total
Grade 1	1	0
Grade 2	3	0
Grade 3	12	0
Grade 4	4	25·0
Grade 5	46	26·1
Grade 6	15	13·3
Grade 7	153	28·1
SEO and Equivalent	112	34·8
HEO and Equivalent	369	49·6
EO and Equivalent	501	60·5
AO and Equivalent	628	74·7
AA and Equivalent	382	66·2
Total	2,229	58·5

These figures include 367 staff in post in the Teachers Pensions Agency of which 71·7 per cent. are women.

Cash Limits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to announce changes to cash limits on votes within his responsibility for 1993-94.

Mr. Patten: The cash limit for class X, vote 1, schools, research and miscellaneous services, will be reduced by £1,500,000 from £708,982,000 to £707,482,000. The reduction will be used to offset an increase in the non-voted cash limit DFE local authority capital to meet increased expenditure on supplementary credit approvals in respect of urgently needed school building projects. The local authority capital cash limit will therefore be increased by £1,500,000 from £48,922,000 to £50,422,000.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will provide substantive answers to the questions from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton of 21 January, and 27 January, concerning the membership of non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Hanley: The delay in answering has been caused by the need to establish whether members would be content for their names to be published, particularly where NDPBs deal with sensitive issues. Market Testing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional non-operational staff have been taken on by his Department to execute the new objective of market testing as set out at paragraph 3 of his Department's annual report and expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, Cm 2501.

Mr. Aitken: Up to 30 additional staff are being recruited on fixed-term appointments for a variety of contract duties. Eight have been appointed.

Additionally, two industrial advisers have been seconded for a period of one year.

Appraisal Strategy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what appraisal strategy he has set in place to monitor the effectiveness of his achieving availability, reliability and maintainability standards, as set out at paragraph 59 of his departmental annual report, Cm 2501.

Mr. Aitken: A comprehensive data collection system is being implemented in each of the services, to monitor the effectiveness of achieving availability, reliability and maintainability standards.

Green Matters (Responsibility)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which departmental Minister is responsible for reporting to the House on green matters within his Department.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence is responsible for environmental matters within the Department. I answer to the House on his behalf.

Indonesia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations he has made into the assertion by Mr. B. J. Habibie, director of Indonesia's armaments procurement programme, to assure himself that the Hawk jets bought from British Aerospace last year by Indonesia will be used for ground attack purposes.

Mr. Aitken: We have received assurances from the Indonesian Government that the Hawk aircraft will not be used for internal security.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evaluation he has made of the use to which Hawk jets sold to Indonesia by British Aerospace last year have been put.

Mr. Aitken: The Hawks purchased by Indonesia last year have not yet been delivered.

Chemical Weapons Testing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what follow-up has been conducted in the last 10 years by his Department as to the long-term health effects arising from experiments conducted on service men from RAF Kinloss in the 1950s at the Porton Down chemical warfare establishment to establish antidotes to chemical warfare agents.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Llew Smith, 17 March 1994:

Parliamentary Question 29, Order Paper 9 March 1994

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence, asking what follow up has been conducted in the last 10 years by his Department as to the long term health effects arising from studies conducted on servicemen from RAF Kinloss in the 1950s at the Porton Down to develop antidotes to chemical warfare agents has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use service volunteers to:

(a) assess the ability of service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,
(b) develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and
(c) evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. The procedure in respect of Service volunteers is that on arrival at CBDE each volunteer is given a medical examination to see if they are fit for the proposed study. The nature of the study is explained to them and they are told that they may withdraw from the study without any explanation at any stage. At the end of the study they are given a second medical examination and the fact that they have participated at CBDE in a volunteer study is recorded on their medical records.

4. From time to time, Service volunteers have been recalled so that checks on their medical health can be made. There is no particular frequency or pattern to such recalls. In addition some volunteers return voluntarily to CBDE to take part in subsequent unrelated studies. There is no evidence that Service volunteers have had any deterioration in their health as a result of their participation as a volunteer in a human study.

5. Our records are not collated in such a way as to allow us to readily identify volunteers from RAF Kinloss in the 1950s. There has been no particular reason to carry out a follow up in respect of these volunteers and none has been carried out.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies and tests have been done by the chemical warfare establishment at Porton Down to assess a nerve agent which penetrates skin and clothes quicker than the G agents and VX; when these experiments were done; and what was the conclusion of the assessment.

Mr. Hanley [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1994, c. 305]: I have asked the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment to write a further letter to the hon. Member.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 17 March 1994:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION 22, ORDER PAPER 18 JANUARY 1994

1. Further to my answer (Official Record, 26 January 1994, Column 305) to your question about agents which penetrate skin and clothing quicker than the G-agents and VX, my attention has been drawn to a report available in the Public Records Office about work carried out at this Establishment in the early 1960s. This work was to seek organophosphorus anticholinesterases which have the chemical and physical properties likely to make them more effective agents than GB and VX eg compounds which may penetrate human skin more rapidly. The information provided in the report does not provide the additional information that you sought on when these experiments were done and what was the conclusion of the assessment; it would require a disproportionate amount of effort and cost to see if this information is available elsewhere.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used by an aggressor against them. This work necessitates the study of potential chemical and biological agents that might be used by an aggressor so that the effectiveness of the available protective measures can be evaluated against potential agents and, where appropriate, the protective measures improved.

3. Work is currently being carried out, and has been for many years, to examine the potential hazard from chemical compounds that might be used as a chemical warfare agent by an aggressor; such compounds may be identified through intelligence or as a result of advances in chemistry.

4. In my answer of 26 January 1994, I said that our records did not indicate that any tests or studies had been carried out to assess a nerve agent which penetrates skin and clothing quicker than the G-agents and VX. When a parliamentary question concerning work on a particular subject is asked, information is sought from all readily available sources which include the library at CBDE to see if there are any reports on the subject, and the Superintendents of the Divisions at CBDE in which such work is being or may have been carried out, who in turn make enquiries of their senior staff. If these searches reveal no information I then reply stating that our records do not indicate any work into this subject.

5. It would require a disproportionate amount of effort and cost, every time a Parliamentary Question is asked, to initiate a search into the past records at the Public Record Office or elsewhere to see if there was information on a particular subject. We need to concentrate on providing the UK Armed Forces with effective protective measures against the current hazards should chemical or biological weapons be used against them wherever they may serve worldwide.

6. The report from the Public Record Office also refers to other materials that have been the subject of parliamentary questions. I will write further letters as soon as the newly available information has been considered.

"Green Forces"

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of his departmental video "Green Forces" have been produced; at what cost; to whom they have been distributed; and what arrangements exist to obtain a copy of the video for hon. Members.

Mr. Hanley: Some 2,750 copies of the video "Green Forces" have been produced for free distribution, on request, to schools, colleges, libraries, other national and international organisations with an interest in environmental issues, and members of the public. To date, production, copying, marketing and distribution costs amount to some £94,000, excluding VAT. Two copies of "Green Forces" are being placed in the Library of the House. Hon. Members can also obtain a copy of the video by writing to the head of publicity, room 0384, Main building, Whitehall, London SW1A 2HB.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those facilities where his Department has invoked Crown immunity or defence exception for (a) national security or (b) operational effectiveness to override routine compliance with United Kingdom environmental legislation, as mentioned in general terms at paragraph 79 of his departmental annual report and expenditure plans for 1994-95 to 1996-97.

Mr. Hanley: Following the enactment of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, there have been no instances where MOD has formally invoked Crown immunity or defence exemptions to justify non-compliance with the requirements of the Act or other United Kingdom environmental legislation to regulatory authorities. A statement of MOD policy in respect of its exemptions from the health and statutory nuisance provisions of part III of the Act has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

RAF Machrihanish

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year for the last four years, and this year to date (a) the number of times RAF Machrihanish was used by the United States navy maritime patrol aircraft assigned to Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic; and what were the type and make of aircraft.

Mr. Hanley: The total number of times RAF Machrihanish was used by the United States maritime patrol aircraft since 1 July 1990 is as follows:

	Number
From 1 July to 31 December 1991[1]	31
1991	80
1992	103
1993	103
1 January to 28 February 1994	0

[1] Detailed records before 1 July 1990 no longer available.

The type and make of aircraft involved were the Lockheed P3 Orion and the Lockheed S3 Viking.

Large Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which is the largest (a) military and (b) civilian aircraft to have landed, or taken off, from each of the airports or aerodromes that his Department owns or controls in Yorkshire and Humberside, other than RAF Finningley.

Mr. Hanley: No records are available for Church Fenton, Dishforth or Topcliffe. The largest military aircraft to have landed at, or taken off from, RAF Leeming is a Lockheed C141 Starlifter; the largest civilian aircraft to have done so is a Boeing 737. No records are available for civilian aircraft landing at, or taking off from, RAF Linton-on-Ouse; the largest military aircraft to have done so is a Nimrod MR2.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which is the largest civilian aircraft that could be landed in normal operating conditions from each of the airports or aerodromes that his Department owns or controls in Yorkshire and Humberside, other than RAF Finningley.

Mr. Hanley: Adequate performance data for civilian aircraft is not available in respect of RAF Linton-on-Ouse. The relief landing grounds at Church Fenton, Dishforth and Topcliffe are now suitable only for light aircraft. The largest civilian aircraft that could be landed at RAF Finningley in normal operating conditions is a Boeing 707.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent on improving accommodation assigned to (a) commanding officers, (b) other officers and (c) other ranks in each of the last four years at RAF Finningley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Figures are not available prior to 1991 when works management was untied from the Property Services Agency and delegated to local budget areas. Figures from financial year 1991-92, which include both single and married accommodation, is as follows:

Year	Commanding Officer £	Other Officers £	Other Ranks £
1991-92	Nil	4,800,000	759,000
1992-93	Nil		483,000
1993-94	2,725	160,000	135,000

The £4,800,000 was spent over financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93 on a single project for a major refurbishment of officers' married quarters. The other expenditure largely relates to: Food Act improvements and health and safety fire measures in the officers', sergeants' and airmen's messes; the refurbishment of two barrack blocks for airmen in 1991 and 1992; and double-glazing for the commanding officer's residence.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review there has been into the requirements of (a) RAF Finningley and (b) each other airport or aerodrome in Yorkshire and Humberside for military purposes (i) before and (ii) since the publication of "Options for Change".

Mr. Hanley: No formal review was conducted into the requirements for military purposes of either RAF Finningley or any other RAF airport or aerodrome in Yorkshire and Humberside prior to "Options for Change". Following "Options for Change", the RAF airfield at Church Fenton was declared surplus to requirements and the station was closed in April 1992, although the airfield remains in use as a relief landing ground for RAF Linton-on-Ouse. Currently, the complete RAF flying training requirement is the subject of a review which will include consideration of the use of all flying training airfields within the United Kingdom. More generally, the requirement for all RAF airfields is currently under review as part of the defence costs study "Front Line First".

Accommodation Improvement

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent on improving accommodation assigned to (a) commanding officers, (b) other officers and (c) other ranks in each of the last four years at airports and aerodromes owned or under his Department's control in Yorkshire and Humberside, other than RAF Finningley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There is no RAF-maintained accommodation at Church Fenton, Dishforth or Topcliffe. For RAF Linton-on-Ouse, figures are only available for the last two years, as follows:

Year	Commanding Officer £	Other Officers £	Other Ranks £
1992-93	Nil	Nil	62,727
1993-94	Nil	105,686	43,760

For RAF Leeming, figures are available for all four years, as follows:

Year	Commanding Officer £	Other Officers £	Other Ranks £
1990-91	2,000	58,700	[1]2,033,000
1991-92	1,700	122,700	457,200
1992-93	2,000	229,700	403,800
1993-94	16,500	180,200	281,000

[1] This expenditure includes the completion of new housing.

Runway Capacity

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the airports or aerodromes that his Department owns or controls in Yorkshire and Humberside other than RAF Finningley; if he will list the length of each airport or aerodrome runway; and if he will list the annual volume of flights in and out of each location for each of the last four years and the current year to date.

Mr. Hanley: The only airports or aerodromes other than RAF Finningley owned or controlled by the Ministry of Defence in Yorkshire and Humberside are RAF Leeming and RAF Linton-on-Ouse; RAF Linton-on-Ouse also has the use of the airfield facilities at the former RAF stations of Church Fenton, Dishforth and Topcliffe, which are used as relief landing grounds. Runway lengths are as follows:

Airfield	Length metres
RAF Leeming
Only one operational runway	2,292
RAF Linton-on-Ouse
Runway 04/22	1,835
Runway 10/28	1,339
Church Fenton
Runway 06/24	1,759
Runway 16/34	1,666
Dishforth
Runway 16/34	1,858
Runway 10/28	1,362
Topcliffe
Runway 03/21	1,837
Runway 13/31	1,262

The number of movements at each airfield, since 1990, is as follows:

Airfield	Movements by Year 1990	1991	1992	1993	[1]1994
RAF Leeming	—[2]	36,674	41,221	33,793	6,510
RAF Linton-on-Ouse	71,531	76,549	66,382	56,485	8,937

World War Two Munitions

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what areas in the Irish sea, northern channel and off the coast of Northern Ireland have been used in the disposal of world war two munitions since 1964; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many discarded world war two munition devices have come ashore on the British mainland over the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on sea disposal of surplus world war two munitions since 1964; if the disposal included chemical weapons and gas canisters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are no records of world war two vintage munitions having been disposed of by sea dumping after 1964. In the last five years Royal Navy clearance diving units have conducted 3,268 munitions clearance tasks below the highwater mark on the British mainland. Available records do not identify the type, origin or number of devices dealt with.

Low Flying

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table giving the number of low-flying sorties conducted over Wales in every year since 1978 (a) in total, (b) below 250 ft and (c) at 100 ft.

Mr. Hanley: Records are not held of low-flying sorties conducted over specific locations or the number of low-flying sorties flown below 250 ft. However, the number of low-flying movements below 250 ft authorised into the central Wales tactical training area in each year since 1979, the earliest year for which figures are available, are set out in the table. Operational low flying may be authorised down to a minimum level of 100 ft, but records do not distinguish between movements flown below 250 ft and at 100 ft.

Number of movements carried out below 250 ft down to a minimum height of 100 ft in the Central Wales Tactical Training Area

Light Dragoons Reconnaissance Squadron

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the commanding officer of the Light Dragoons Reconnaissance Squadron, Major Oliver Ellwood, did not accompany his troops when they left base in Germany for Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Major Ellwood departed Germany for Bosnia on the first flight and with the first group of his squadron on the evening of Saturday 12 March 1994.

Overseas Contracts

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates on which memoranda of understanding have been drawn up with overseas Governments on matters relating to defence contracts in each year since 1986.

Mr. Aitken: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 9 February, Official Report, column 254.

Arms Sales

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each year since 1979, and in total at constant 1993 prices, the total value of arms sales to (a) Indonesia and (b) Tanzania.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our policy to reveal details of arms sales to individual countries.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 29 November 1993, Official Report, columns 371-76.

Yugoslavia

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is (a) the total number of United Kingdom service personnel currently serving in the former Yugoslavia and on sanctions activities in the Adriatic and on the Danube and (b) his estimate of the comparable figures for other Western European Union and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently some 3,300 United Kingdom service personnel deployed on the ground in the former Yugoslavia. Around 600 Royal Navy personnel are serving in the Adriatic in support of NATO-WEU sanctions monitoring and enforcement operations. The military contribution of other nations to these operations is a matter for their national Governments and for the United Nations. Due to fluctuations in the actual level of troop contribution from a wide range of countries, it is not possible at this time to estimate comparable figures for other NATO and WEU countries.

Married Quarters

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on plans for the new management arrangements for the Ministry of Defence's married quarters estate.

Mr. Hanley: Following an open competition, Mr. James Michael Robinson, presently co-ordinator and chief executive of Bristol city council, has been selected for the post of chief executive designate of the new housing organisation. Mr. Robinson will take up his appointment shortly.

Following a separate competition, Price Waterhouse has been appointed as the lead consultant to assist Mr. Robinson in developing the operational and business plans for the new organisation.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Barristers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to limit unnecessary multiple representation by barristers of participants in court cases; and what response he has made to the comments made by Mr. Justice Ward on this matter following a High Court case in Nottingham in 1992.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the light of remarks made about recent cases, the Legal Aid Board has been asked to consider what action might be taken to ensure that applications for separate representation for parties with the same interest can be identified at an early stage in the proceedings with a view to avoiding duplicating costs.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what plans he has to bring forward legislation to end the use of public interest immunity certificates.

(2) what plans he has to introduce legislation governing the issue of public interest immunity certificates.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Public interest immunity certificates are one of the subjects under investigation by Lord Justice Scott. The Government will take careful note of any conclusions and recommendations in his report.

EMPLOYMENT

Pathfinder Initiatives

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the activities and performance of the careers service pathfinder areas will be assessed; what are the terms of reference of the pathfinders evaluation exercise commissioned by his Department; who is conducting the evaluation of the pathfinder process; what information will be made available about the activities and performance in each of the pathfinder areas; what restrictions the new pathfinder contract places on the ability of those organisations running the Careers Service to make public comments on the performance of the Careers Service; if a copy of the contract will be placed in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Performance will be assessed against the standards specified in the requirements and guidance for providers, which is a public document. I am placing a copy in the Library.

The Department is commissioning an independent evaluation of the pathfinder arrangements. This will be carried out in two phases. The terms of reference for the first phase, which is largely complete, are to provide a comprehensive picture of the performance of a sample of careers services prior to the start of the new arrangements. This will provide a baseline against which the subsequent performance of pathfinder careers services can be compared. This initial study has been carried out by the National Foundation for Educational Research, which won the research contract through competitive tender. The second phase of the study will be commissioned during 1995-96 to allow the pathfinders to make progress. This phase of the evaluation will also be competitively tendered.

Much of the information collected by the Department during normal contract management and by researchers in the evaluation will be commercially sensitive. The Department will not publish such information in a way which allows an individual contractor to be identified or which hampers subsequent contract negotiations.

Careers Service providers will produce client entitlement statements setting out the careers guidance and other key services to be provided. The main conclusions about the delivery of the Careers Service under contract will be presented in the Careers Service annual report.

Under the Careers Service contract, providers are free to make factual statements about the performance of the service, but will require agreement from the Department to any proposed public statement about Government policy which is intended to be made by or on behalf of the provider.

I shall place a copy of the standard contract in the Library.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil servants are currently employed at his Department's offices at Caxton house; and how many were women (a) in 1990 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 17 March 1994]: The figures are not available for Caxton house. The following figures are for staff in all the Department's London headquarters buildings: 1,313 at 1 January 1994, of whom 662 were women. The comparable figures for 1 January 1990 were 1,337 and 667 respectively.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Courts (Closed Session)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General what are the precedents for courts going into closed session where disclosure of evidence would be detrimental to the public interest; and what sanctions are available to the courts to ensure that no disclosure is then made of matters which the court finds should not be disclosed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

As a matter of general principle in civil and criminal proceedings, the public interest lies in open justice. Section 8(4) of the Official Secrets Act 1920 and section 11(4) of the Official Secrets Act 1989 give courts the power to allow evidence to be heard in camera if disclosure to the public would be prejudicial to national security. In addition, the courts have a discretion at common law to rule that evidence may be heard in camera where a public hearing would defeat the interests of justice. Such a discretion is only exercised exceptionally and the courts will consider first whether any action short of excluding the public, such as communicating certain information confidentially to the court, would be appropriate. Unauthorised disclosure of evidence given in camera may be punished as a contempt of court which carries a maximum of two years imprisonment.

TRANSPORT

Single Regeneration Budgets

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contribution his Department makes to single regeneration budgets; and what percentage of his Department's previous budgets will pass the single regeneration budgets.

Mr. MacGregor: I am not contributing specific transport resources to the single regeneration budgets, but I shall be taking into account the views of senior regional directors in allocating resources within national transport programmes to the areas concerned.

Major Road Starts

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the environmental assessment carried out in respect of each of the major national road starts in 1994-95 announced on 28 February.

Mr. Key: No. Details of the environmental assessment for each of these schemes was made available to the public before a decision was taken to proceed. Copies of all the documents relevant to these assessments are not readily available and could not be obtained at reasonable cost.

Highways Agency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff will transfer to the Highways Agency; and to what locations.

Mr. Key: Some 2,416; initially the Highways Agency will have its headquarters in London and regional offices in Bedford, Birmingham, Bristol, Dorking, Exeter, Leeds, London, Manchester, Newcastle and Nottingham.

Railway Station Closures

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement in respect of the railway stations to be withdrawn from service during 1994.

Mr. Freeman: Currently, British Rail has proposed the closure of 14 stations under the Transport Act 1962. The proposals are at various stages in the statutory procedure. British Rail is considering proposing a further two stations for closure under the 1962 Act.

From 1 April, responsibility for bringing forward closure proposals will rest with the operator or the Franchising Director. The rail regulator will be responsible for deciding whether or not the closure should be permitted. Appeals against the regulator's decision can be made to the Secretary of State I am not aware of any plans at present to propose the closure, under the Railways Act 1993, of any station used for passenger services.

Greater Manchester Buses North Ltd.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy regarding intervention in the bidding process for Greater Manchester Buses North Ltd.; what action his Department has taken since preferred bidder status was won by the bid from Greater Manchester North's employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The responsibility for the actual sale process lies with the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority, the owner of Greater Manchester Buses North Ltd.

The Department is keeping closely in touch with what is happening with regard to the sale of both the GMB North and GMB South bus companies. The Secretary of State's consent to both the sales will eventually be required. As in the sales of all the public transport companies, his role is to give or to withhold consent.

In view of the Secretary of State's quasi-judicial function in these sales it would not be appropriate for me to comment further or make a statement.

Rail Fares (London-Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the cost of a return journey by rail from Doncaster to London King's Cross at the (a) first-class and (b) standard class rate for each year since 1975;

(2) what was the cost of a return journey by rail from Doncaster to London King's Cross at (a) the off-peak rates and (b) the standard rate for each year since 1975.

Mr. Freeman: The costs of first-class ordinary and standard-class ordinary return journeys in January of each year since 1975 are set out in the table. The fare structure for off-peak rates has changed significantly over the same period and makes comparison less straightforward.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide details of the statements made by each Minister in his Department during November 1989 which referred to a completion date for the channel tunnel rail link; and what completion date was announced in each case.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1994]: Following a further search, I can provide the following additional information:

Question by Kenneth Warren MP, 6 November 1989:

"To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what assurance has been received from British Rail regarding availability for use when the tunnel opens of a high-speed rail link to London from the Channel Tunnel for passengers and freight."

Michael Portillo: "In the early years of the tunnel's operation, BR plan to use existing lines, upgraded as necessary, for international passenger and freight services. British Rail and their joint venture partners, Eurorail, are planning to build a new passenger rail link between the Channel Tunnel and London to overcome capacity constraints on the existing network. This new line, which is expected to be operational in 1998, will release additional capacity on existing lines for the growth of international freight traffic."—[Official Report, 6 November 1989; Vol. 159, c. 417.]

NORTHERN IRELAND

Compensation

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Seccretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claims against the Northern Ireland Office in respect of criminal injury or criminal damage were disposed of by way of settlement or adjudication in the period (i) 1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992 and (ii) 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993; in how many of such cases within each period junior counsel was instructed giving (a) the number of junior counsel with the number of cases in which each was briefed and (b) the perceived religious affiliation of the number of counsel instructed and the number of cases in which each was briefed.

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive Mr. John Robinson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Robinson to Mr. David Trimble, dated 16 March 1994:

Your parliamentary Question to Sir John Wheeler MP concerning the number of settled claims for compensation in respect of criminal injuries and criminal damage in 1991-92 and 1992-93 in which junior counsel were instructed has been passed to me as Chief Executive of the Compensation Agency.

The figures are as follows:

	1 July 1991 to 30 June 1992	1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993
Total number of settlements and court awards	9,330	10,174
Number involving junior counsel	2,582	2,217

Total	2,582	2,217

The Agency has no information on the religious affiliation of counsel instructed.

I hope this is helpful.

Abortions

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many abortions were performed by each health and social services board in Northern Ireland for each year from 1990 to 1993; and what was the total number of women aged 15 to 44 years who were resident in each board area in 1991.

Mr. Ancram: While the Abortion Act 1967 does not extend to Northern Ireland, therapeutic terminations of pregnancy may be carried out in Northern Ireland hospitals on strictly medical grounds. The number of such terminations cannot be identified separately in the statistical information collected centrally on obstetric and gynaecological procedures.

The total number of females aged 15 to 44 resident in each board area on 30 June 1991 was as follows:

	Number
Eastern	140,600
Northern	86,700
Southern	61,700
Western	56,700

Figures are rounded to the nearest 100.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spends on child care provision for the under-fives and out-of-school provision for children aged over five either directly, excluding provision for departmental staff, or indirectly through resources made available to local authorities or other organisations; what form of provision is thereby provided; how many places are thereby provided; and if he will make a statement on child care.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The Department of Health and Social Services directly assists the development of child care for pre-school and school age children by grant aiding regional voluntary child care organisations in Northern Ireland working in this field. In the current financial year over £235,000 has been provided in this way.

In 1991-92, the latest year for which the information is available, health and social services boards in Northern Ireland spent £1,598,000 on support for local day care projects, either through direct provision or in support of voluntary and community facilities. In that year, boards also spent £148,000 on family day centres, but these do not cater exclusively for parents with young children.

Details of the forms of provision and number of places available, as at 31 March 1993, are as follows:

Type	Places available
Pre-school playgroups	16,063
Day nurseries	2,036
Childminders	14,045
Total	32,144

Note: These figures are provisional.

The provision of day care services forms an integral part of the Department of Health and Social Service's preventive strategy in child care. Their development is a key part of the health and social services boards responsibilities under the current regional strategy 1992-97, in particular the identification of areas and groups with particular health and social needs and targeting services accordingly.

Hospital Beds

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many beds per 1,000 people are available in (a) Northern Ireland hospitals and (b) Belfast hospitals.

Mr. Ancram: The available information is as follows:

	Available beds	Population	Available beds per 1,000 population
Northern Ireland	11,712	1,610,268	7·3
Greater Belfast area	3,721	[1]n/a	[1]n/a

Note:

Hospitals in the Greater Belfast area have been taken as those in Greenspark Healthcare Trust (Musgrave Park, Belvoir and Forster Green), Royal Group of Hospitals Trust (Royal Victoria, Royal Maternity and Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children), Belfast City Hospital Trust, the Ulster North Down and Ards Trust (The Ulster) and the Mater Iafirmorum Hospital and Purdysburn Hospital.

[1]Hospitals in the Greater Belfast area cater for people from all over Northern Ireland. It is therefore not appropriate to directly calculate available beds per 1,000 population in relation to the Greater Belfast population.

Dental Services

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what is the average cost per child under 18 of general dental services in Northern Ireland for (a) children registered with a general dental practitioner and (b) all other children.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms Lynne) on 11 March 1994, Official Report, c. 436-37.

TREASURY

Customs and Excise

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received in support of postponing the closure of the Customs and Excise group's Blyth office, on 31 March, pending a further independent review; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of job losses which will occur as a result of the proposal to close the Customs and Excise group's Blyth office on 31 March.

Sir John Cope: I have received representations from the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) against the closure of Customs' Blyth office on 31 March. The closure will result in the loss of one and a half jobs.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Property

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what property, leased or owned by his Department, is not in current use.

Mr. Baldry: Property Holdings is responsible for the Government's reusable office estate—the common user estate. There are currently over 3,200 properties on the common user estate. Of these, 165 or 5 per cent. are not in current use. Some 128 are surplus to operational requirements and are either being actively marketed by external consultants or being prepared for disposal action; nine have been allocated for re-use; and six are held for redevelopment-refurbishment.

Decisions on the future of the remaining properties, which are ever changing, are under constant review in the context of normal portfolio management activity.

Taxation, Ealing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the change in the average payment per head in cental and local taxation in the London borough of Ealing between (a) 1986 and 1990 and (b) 1990 and 1994 in real and percentage terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Both the rating system which operated in 1986-87 and the council tax are property-based taxes. This, and the extensive changes which have occurred in the local government finance system since the 1980s, mean that it is extremely difficult to make the comparison suggested.

It is not our practice to produce estimates of central taxation at the sub-regional level as they are not, in general, reliable.

Landfill Sites

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the measures that he is taking to ensure that operators who use landfill are held to account for any subsequent pollution of domestic and other water.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1976 active landfill sites have required licences under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. The purpose of these licences includes ensuring that the activities to which the licence relates do not cause pollution of water. Licences are granted by the waste regulation authority for the area, which is required by statute to consult the National Rivers Authority or, in Scotland, the river purification authority. As the then Minister for the Environment and Countryside announced on 29 November, Official Report, column 384, we intend to bring new waste management licensing regulations into force in May 1994. These regulations will strengthen the powers of waste regulation authorities to protect the environment. The Government is currently reviewing the arrangements for dealing with contaminated land and the related liabilities. As I announced on 8 March, Official Report, column 110, we have published a consultation paper, "Paying for our Past", as part of that review.

Agencies

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the number of appointments he makes to, and the budgets of, the non-departmental agencies he has responsibility for.

Mr. Baldry: Information about the non-departmental public bodies for which the Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible is contained in "Public Bodies 1993". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library and shows the number of bodies, their gross expenditure and the number of appointments to each body.

"Public Bodies" includes the Commons Commissioners and valuation tribunals for which the Secretary of State is responsible but to which appointments are made by the Lord Chancellor and local authorities, respectively.

Taxation, Lewisham

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the change in the average payment per head in central and local taxation in the London borough of Lewisham between (a) 1986 and 1990 and (b) 1990 and 1994, in real and percentage terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) today.

Open Government

Ms Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the implications for the operation of his Department of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Baldry: A code of practice will reinforce and build on my Department's existing arrangements for the provision of information, which are already particularly extensive in relation to the release of environmental information. Operational details will be announced at the time of the launch.

Black People (Training and Enterprise)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's response to the key recommendations of the Black Training and Enterprise Group on the draft bidding guidance for the single regeneration budget; and what actions are planned by the Government to ensure that the integrated regional offices (a) establish clear requirements for race equality for TECs and local authorities, (b) employ staff at a senior level to formally liaise with the black voluntary sector to ensure they are given the necessary support to put funding bids together, (c) employ staff to assist black businesses and enterprise agencies in accessing contracts funded by the SRB and ensuring that TECs and local authorities have clear guidelines as to how they should assist black enterprise and (d) have a specific budget allocation targeted at the black voluntary sector.

Mr. Baldry: We have received a large number of responses following the extensive consultation on the proposed bidding guidance for the new single regeneration budget. We are now considering the comments that have been received, including the recommendations contained in the response from the Black Training and Enterprise Group, and this will inform the revision of the bidding guidance. The revised bidding guidance will be issued by the new regional offices in early April.

The Home Office will be posting an officer to each of the new regional offices, who will monitor objectives for supporting the ethnic minorities, and will provide advice to the senior regional directors.

Waste Shipment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he published his most recent departmental circular on the transfrontier shipment of waste regulations; how many copies have been printed; and to whom they have been circulated.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the Department of the Environment circular 16/89, published on 2 June 1989, relating to the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988, Statutory Instrument No. 1562. The printing and distribution of this circular are matters for HMSO. As part of the initial, official distribution, copies were sent to all local authorities and waste authorities in England and Wales.

Acid Rain

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department will be taking to cut emissions of sulphur dioxide and to rectify damage already caused to buildings and wildlife from acid rain.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Minister of State for the Environment and Countryside to his question of 25 November 1993, Official Report, column 189, and to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's reply to the question from the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) of 9 December 1993, Official Report, columns 366-67.

John Archer School Site

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department is having on the proposed sale by Wandsworth council of land of the former John Archer school site.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Tiger Bone

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what products claimed to contain tiger bone have been imported into the United Kingdom during each of the last three years.

Mr. Atkins: No permits have been issued by my Department in the last three years to authorise the importation of products claimed to contain tiger bone.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the Environment Commissioner of the European Communities in relation to the impact of the 1979 wild birds directive and the habitats directive on the consents required for the construction of the Cardiff bay barrage.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 1 March, Official Report, column 643.

Domestic Fuel

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls exist in England, Wales and Scotland over the sale of unauthorised fuels in smoke control areas and the sale of high sulphur solid fuels for domestic use; and what proposals he has to introduce further regulations.

Mr. Atkins: The Clean Air Act 1993 contains provisions to control the sale and acquisition of unauthorised fuels in smoke control areas. Solid fuels with a sulphur content greater than 2 per cent. are not authorised for use in smoke control areas. In view of the decline in annual average concentrations and emissions of smoke and sulphur dioxide from domestic sources, we have re-examined our proposals for further regulations and do not propose any additional controls at present. The need for such controls will be reviewed if any significant risk emerges to the maintenance of air quality.

Planning

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make the amendments to the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 announced on 16 December 1992 by the Minister for Local Government and Planning.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales have today laid amendments to the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988. These add privately financed toll roads to schedule 1 of the regulations, thus requiring environmental assessment in every case; and wind generators, motorway service areas and coast protection works to schedule 2 of the regulations, the effect of which will be to allow local planning authorities to require EA where a particular development proposal would be likely to have significant effects on the environment. The amendments will come into effect on 8 April.

The amendments will bring privately financed toll roads promoted by local authorities in line with similar toll roads promoted by the Department of Transport. The addition of motorway service areas reflects the fact that EA has been undertaken for motorway service areas proposed in the past by the Department of Transport. Future motorway service areas will be provided instead by private developers, but the measures announced today will ensure that they continue to be subject to EA. Coast protection works, which are carried out by maritime district councils, have been added to bring them in line with new flood relief works, including sea defence works, which are already included in schedule 2 of the regulations and subject to EA where appropriate. Wind generators have been added because they can often have a significant visual impact on the local environment, particularly in sensitive areas.

The amendments to the regulations also include the technical changes referred to in the reply which my right hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) gave on 16 December 1992, Official Report, columns 320-21.

Since my right hon. Friend's reply, the Government have reviewed earlier proposals for the addition of further categories of project to the regulations. We have concluded that any extension of the regulations beyond those set out above would be inconsistent with the aim of limiting unnecessary regulation. However, the environmental effects of any project will continue to be among the material considerations which a planning authority must take into account when deciding whether or not to grant planning permission.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will be making similar amendments to the equivalent EA regulations for Scotland.

Rent Arrears (London)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the rent arrears, in cash and percentage terms, for each of the London boroughs as at the date for which figures are kept.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Air Miles

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, c. 645, (1) how many free air miles were accrued by civil servants on official business prior to new guidance being issued;

(2) when it was decided that the benefits of frequent flyer schemes should be used only for official travel or forgone;

(3) how many civil servants accrued free air miles in each Government Department on official business prior to new guidance being issued.

Mr. David Davis: Departments were asked on 24 February to issue guidance to their staff. The other information sought is not available.

Civil Service (Disabled Employees)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the employment of disabled people in the civil service.

Mr. David Davis: The annual report on the progress in the employment of disabled people in the civil service is presented in the magazine "Independent" published today.

The report shows that during 1993 8,384—1·5 per cent.—registered disabled people were employed in the civil service departments and agencies, a small increase over 1992. In addition to this, the civil service employs many more disabled people who choose not to register as disabled.

I am arranging for copies of "Independent" to be placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Unemployment Benefit

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state in pounds sterling what is the total annual payment in unemployment benefit and related measures in (a) the European Union and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Burt: Details of the total benefit expenditure on benefits paid to unemployed people is given in table 5, page 81, of the 1994 "Social Security Departmental Report", a copy of which is in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has responsibility for expenditure in respect of Northern Ireland.

There are also payments of training allowances under several schemes including: youth training bridging allowance, training for work, learning for work and TEC challenge. For 1993-94 the total for Great Britain is estimated to be in the region of £525 million.

In addition to these amounts there are a number of miscellaneous payments made to unemployed people by the Employment Department. Many of these are payments for travel or subsistence when attending interview or certain training courses, but there are also other payments such as those made under the visually impaired, personal reader services. These payments are estimated to total approximately £20 million for the year April 1993-94.

Comparable information for the European Union is not available in the form requested. The Eurostat publication "Social Protection Expenditure and Receipts 1980-1991" gives the latest information available about expenditure on unemployment for EC member states. A copy of this publication is also in the Library.

Child Support Agency

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 214, what factors are taken into account by the Child Support Agency when deciding not to implement a reduced benefit deduction to protect single mothers who have disabilities or children with disabilities; how many decisions of this kind have been made; and how many cases of this kind have been considered.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Jean Corston, dated 17 March:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the imposition of reduced benefit directions in cases where the parent with care or a child had disabilities.

As I explained in my reply to Ms Gordon, the Child Support Manual contains no specific instructions on this matter, although child support officers will consider the impact of such a deduction on the welfare of the children.

No information is collected on whether the parent with care or any children are disabled. National figures show, however, that from 5 April 1993 to 31 January 1994, 44,600 parents with care were considered in relation to the requirement to cooperate. Of the cases so far completed, good cause was accepted in nearly 25,000; the absent parent was named in 8,900; and 330 were referred to the Benefits Agency to consider the implementation of a Reduced Benefit Direction.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for crisis loans made in the Doncaster area, have been refused in each of the last 24 months.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 17 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of Crisis Loan (CL) applications which have been refused in the Doncaster area in each of the last 24 months.

(2) how many staff, and at what grade, are employed and deal with inquiries in his Department's Stoke on Trent, North office in respect of the Child Suport Agency; and how many posts are vacant.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Joan Walley, dated 17 March 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of enquiries outstanding and the number of staff at the Child Support Agency's Stoke on Trent North office.

At 10 March 1994, there were no outstanding written enquiries from members of the public, but nine telephone enquiries required further information before replies could be given.

Current staffing levels at the office are:

1 full-time Local Officer Grade I (LOI)—Executive Officer equivalent
2 part-time LOIs
2 full-time Local Officers Grade II (LOII)—Administrative Officer equivalent
3 part-time LOIIs

There are no current vacancies.

I hope this information is helpful.

Social Fund

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many Benefits Agency managers have requested a supplementary allocation to their social fund budget; what is his Department's response; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what percentage of applicants were turned down for a grant from the social fund on a monthly basis, campaign commencing April 1992 and concluding in March 1993 both for the west midlands and nationally; what reasons were given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 17 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about whether Benefit Agency (BA) District Managers have asked for additional funds for their Social Fund (SF) budget, and the number of Social Fund grant refusals and the reasons for refusal in the West Midlands and nationally.

I can confirm that one request was made in 1993-94 for additional funds for the SF discretionary budget. As a result of severe flooding in the Llandudno area during June 1993, an additional allocation of £155,000 for grants and £10,000 for loans was made to the North Wales Coast District.

You also asked for the percentage of applicants refused a grant in 1992-93 in the West Midlands and nationally. I am unable to supply details specifically for the West Midlands area. Statistics are available by BA Territory, Area and District. I have, therefore, provided information for the BA's Area of Midlands South West which consists of the Districts of Birmingham Chamberlain, Birmingham Heartlands, Birmingham North West, Birmingham South East, Birmingham South West, Coventry, Hereford and Worcester and finally Warwickshire.

Information on the SF is not kept by applicant but by application. The percentage of grant applications refused monthly for Midlands South West and nationally for the period 1 April 1922 to 31 March 1993 is given at Annex A. I must point out that the majority of Community Care Grant applications are refused because the basic eligibility criteria are not met. The reasons for refusal for Midlands South West and Nationally for the same period are given at Annex B and Annex C respectively.

Open Government

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the implications for the operation of his Department of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Hague: The code of practice will reinforce and build on this Department's existing arrangements for the provision of information. Requests will be handled as part of the normal business process, keeping procedures as simple as possible. Decisions on the release of information will be taken by the unit with primary responsibility for the policy, action or decision. Internal reviews where an applicant complains that information has been unreasonably withheld will be carried out by someone of senior rank within the same area but who had no involvement in the original decision.

In recent months the Department has published a number of papers including "The growth of social security"—July 1993; "Containing the cost of social security"—October 1993—and "Equality in State Pension Age"—December 1993. Customer charters have been published by the Benefits Agency—December 1993; the Contributions Agency—January 1994—and the Child Support Agency—April 1993. Statements on standards of service are displayed in local offices and each agency reports publicly on performance against targets. A customer charter will be published by the War Pensions Agency after its launch in April 1994.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants living in (a) local authority and (b) private sector rented accommodation were found to have made fraudulent claims for housing benefit in each year since 1989; and what was the total amount paid out by local authorities to claimants later found to have made fraudulent claims for housing benefit in each year recovered by local authorities from claimants in each year.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available.

Family Benefit

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his current estimate of eligible households in the Huddersfield and Dewsbury areas who do not claim family benefit.

Mr. Burt: Take-up figures for family credit are not available on a regional basis. The latest estimates for take-up of family credit for Great Britain for 1991 are that 64 per cent. of eligible families were claiming it, and that 71 per cent. of available benefit was being claimed[1].

As at 18 February 1994, 2,283 families in Huddersfield, and 2,868 families in Dewsbury were receiving family credit.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the last 12 months how many parliamentary questions he has referred to one of his Department's agencies for answer; and what percentage of parliamentary questions to his Department this represents.

Mr. Hague: In the period 1 March 1993 to 28 February 1994, 2,775 parliamentary questions were received by the Department. Of these, 463, which is 17 per cent. of the total, were referred to and answered by the chief executive of one of the Department's agencies.

DEFENCE

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many registered disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage this is of the total.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested can be found in the 18 March 1994 issue of the magazine "Independent", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the board of the Royal Naval museum, Portsmouth.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

Admiral Morton (Chair)
Dr. Knight, NMM
Captain Pack, SOF
Rear Admiral Morris, SNR
Councillor Emery-Wallis
S. Thomas, PCC
O. Aisher
M. Drummond
T. Ferrers-Walker
Lord Strathcona
A. Jaffray
P. Trumper
Mr. and Mrs. J. McCarthy

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mine Clearance Equipment

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the export of mine clearance equipment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mine clearance equipment is covered by the Export of Goods (Control) Order of 1992 and as such requires a licence before export. All applications for such exports are considered on a case by case basis.

Multilateral Trade Organisation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to the effect on sovereignty of article 16, paragraph 4, of the agreement establishing the multilateral trade organisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Article XVI, paragraph 4 of the agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation, as it is now to be known, has no effect on national sovereignty. Under this paragraph, the parties to the agreement undertake to ensure the conformity of their laws and regulations with the obligations under the WTO agreement and its annexed agreements. The purpose of this is to ensure full implementation of the GATT agreement by the parties to it. Parties to a treaty always need to ensure the conformity of their domestic legislation with their obligations under the treaty in order to avoid any breach of those obligations.

Middle East

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge upon the European Union and United Nations the need for an international observer force to be established in the occupied territories.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: European Foreign Ministers issued a statement on 7 March supporting the establishment in the occupied territories of an international presence and declaring the willingnes of their states to participate. With our support, the United Nations is considering a resolution which would call for an international presence.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches he has had about his willingness for the United Kingdom to play a role in an international observer force in the occupied territories; by whom; and what was his response.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs told Nabil Sha'ath, political adviser to Chairman Arafat, when he called on him on 3 March, that if an international civilian observer presence is agreed upon for the occupied territories, Britain will not be absent.

Indonesia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Indonesian Government on their human rights record.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised this issue with the Indonesian Government when he visited Indonesia in April 1993. We regularly discuss human rights issues with Indonesia in other bilateral contacts and in international bodies.

Intelligence Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the official functions of the Secret Intelligence Service and GCHQ.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to clauses 1 and 3 of the Intelligence Services Bill, which is before Parliament.

Public Interest Immunity

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 828, if the documents which were the subject of claims by his Department for non-disclosure on public interest immunity grounds were disclosed to Lord Justice Woolf and Mr. Justice Pill in the High Court during proceedings concerning Mr. Lorrain Osman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 15 March 1994]: Nine documents, for which public interest immunity had been asserted and upheld in earlier proceedings, were examined by Lord Justice Woolf and Mr. Justice Pill in the course of Mr. Lorrain Osman's seventh application for habeas corpus.

North-West Kurdistan

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the proposals for a ceasefire in north-west Kurdistan, south-east Turkey, put forward by Abdullah Ocalan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 17 March 1994]: The resolution of their Kurdish problem is a matter for the Turkish Government, provided it encompasses full respect for human rights. We understand their reluctance to enter into negotiations with terrorists.

General Pinochet

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who authorised an entry visa to the United Kingdom for General Augusto Pinochet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 17 March 1994]: Chilean nationals do not require visas to visit the United Kingdom. General Pinochet did not apply for prior entry clearance at the British embassy in Santiago before making his recent private visit.

EDUCATION

Secondary Schools

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will name four or more secondary schools within the residential sector occupied new, extended, or modified buildings for which he has recently approved significant capital expenditure and which are over 90 per cent. full.

Mr. Forth: Such information on LEA-maintained boarding schools is not centrally available.

Since the financial year 1989-90 the Secretary of State has made capital grants to the following non-maintained special schools which meet the criteria in question:

The Mary Hare Grammar School for the Deaf—age range 11-19—Newbury	400,000
Royal School for Deaf Children—age range 4-19—Margate	237,000
The West of England School—age range 3-19—Exeter	460,000
St. John's Residential School—age range 7-19—Brighton	469,000

Open Government

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what will be the implications for the operation of his Department of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Boswell: The code of practice will reinforce and build on the Department's existing arrangements for the provision of information. A considerable amount of information is already provided on request to the public through routine correspondence. In addition, the annual publication of performance tables is increasing the amount of information available to parents and others on the achievements of schools and colleges; while the parents, further education and higher education charters also emphasise the importance of information for all those involved.

Amyl Nitrate

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is taking to stop the use of amyl nitrate in schools.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 1 March, Official Report, column 774-75.

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what analysis he has made of the effect of the system of categories of quality assessment currently used by the Higher Education Funding Council for England on the recruitment of overseas students;

(2) what consideration he has given to abolishing the categories of quality assessment currently used by the Higher Education Funding Council for England in favour of a single quality threshold.

Mr. Boswell: Under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, responsibility for all aspects of the system of quality assessment rests with the funding council. It is currently considering recommendations arising from an evaluation of the quality assessment process in its first full year of operation. My right hon. Friend will look to the council to take decisions on those recommendations, having regard to the need for helpful information for students and others, and for the council itself in respect of its funding decisions; and to the desirability of encouraging improvements in the quality of teaching and learning as well as assuring that it meets minimum requirements.

Technology Colleges

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 131, if he will place in the Library information extracted from the management plans of the 12 schools listed in his announcement of 28 February that identifies and quantifies their key targets, including in particular targets for the achievements of pupils.

Mr. Robin Squire: No, for the reason given in my earlier answer. Schools did not necessarily prepare their management plans with any expectation that they would become public documents.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will describe the arrangements he has made, or intends to make, in order to monitor progress by each of the 12 schools listed in the announcement of 28 February towards the key targets of their management plans; what reports he expects to receive; and by whom such progress will be audited or independently reviewed.

Mr. Robin Squire: All of the schools approved to start as technology colleges on 1 September 1994 will be required to submit to the Department a report on progress towards their targets in December 1995, and annually thereafter.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the areas in which the management plans of each of the 12 schools listed in his announcement of 28 February identified key targets for achievement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Each of the schools' plans includes one or more targets relating to increased curriculum provision in the specialist subjects of technology, science and mathematics; one or more targets relating to increased take-up of such provision by pupils; and one or more targets relating to improved test and examination attainment in these subjects.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 131, whether parents of registered pupils at the 12 schools listed in his announcement of 28 February have a right to inspect the school's management plan; and whether the governing body will be expected to provide a factual summary of the management plan in the next annual report to parents, including in particular targets for the achievements of pupils.

Mr. Robin Squire: These are matters for the governing bodies of the schools.

Student Unions

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number and costs of his Department's inquiries into student union funding since 1979.

Mr. Boswell: Since 1979, the Department's inquiries into the funding of student unions have included work preparatory to the introduction of new arrangements for the funding of student unions from the academic year 1981-82, following criticism of the previous arrangements by the Committee of Public Accounts in 1978; and work related to the Government's current proposals for student union reform which followed the survey of student unions published by the Department in 1989. It is not possible to disaggregate the costs of these activities from other work of the officials involved.

Disabled People

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many registered disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage this is of the total.

Mr. Forth: This information is contained in the magazine "Independent" which has been published today and placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Car Allowances

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Lord President of the Council on what basis hon. Members' car allowance is calculated; when this was last reviewed; and what plans he has for review in the near future.

Mr. Newton: Since 1984 hon. Members' car allowance has been calculated on the basis of the "Peyton formula". The rates were last revised with effect from 1 April 1991. As the information hitherto used for such revision is no longer available in the form required by the relevant resolution, I am currently considering how best to establish a secure basis for future updating.

HEALTH

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of receptions held by Ministers in her Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: The cost of such receptions is included in the expenditure for the Department which is published in the annual report. Copies of the latest edition which covers this period was published on 7 March and have been placed in the Library.

Continuing Care Beds

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS continuing care beds there were in each year since 1979.

Mr. Bowis: Information collected by the Department on numbers of beds does not separately identify those used for continuing care. It is a matter for district health authorities to determine the level and type of care required taking into account the needs of the local population.

Limb Defects

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many (a) upper limb and (b) lower limb defects occurred in children born within each district health authority in the Trent regional health authority by year for the last four years;

(2) if she will make a statement on the incidence of upper limb defects in Trent regional health authority and Doncaster health authority areas.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the tables.

Passive Smoking and Asthma

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the link between passive smoking and asthma.

Mr. Sackville: Reports published in 1992 by the Royal College of Physicians and the United States Environmental Protection agency found that passive smoking is causally associated with additional episodes and increased severity of asthma in children who already have the disease. With regard to the induction of asthma in previously asymptomatic children, the EPA concluded that there is insufficient evidence of a causal link. The agency also reported that passive smoking had subtle but significant effects on the respiratory health of adults.

The Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health will be reviewing the available research findings on this issue at the earliest opportunity. The asthma working group of the Committee on the Effects of Air Pollutants is also examining data in this sector.

NHS Regulatory Body

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce a regulatory body for the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has statutory responsibility for the functions delegated to national health service authorities and trusts. Furthermore, the chief executive of the NHS Management Executive, as accounting officer for the national health service, is accountable to Parliament through the Public Accounts Committee. There is no justification for introducing a further regulatory body for the National Health Service.

Hospital Treatment

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the average length of stay in hospital for patients (a) in London and (b) outside London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr Sackville: Comparable figures giving the average length of stay in hospital for patients in London and outside London are not available. The available figures in 1989-90 for the four Thames regional health authorities, plus the special health authorities, which include London and the rest of England are shown in the table.

Average length of stay in days

	All specialities	Acute sector
Thames regional health authorities	20·39	6·30
Rest of England	17·74	6·18

Suicide

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to ensure that "The Health of the Nation" targets on reducing suicide rates are reached.

Mr. Bowis: We are taking action to improve our understanding of suicide, to develop comprehensive local services for mentally ill people and to enhance good practice in the management of psychiatric conditions. Specific action already taken includes the funding of the confidential inquiry into homicides and suicides by mentally ill people, issue of the "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook" to national health service and local authority managers of mental health services and a series of initiatives under the 10-point plan to reinforce community care for mentally ill people we announced on 12 August 1993. Full details of action taken at national level during the first 16 months of "The Health of the Nation" initiative are given in "The Health of the Nation: One Year On", a copy of which is available in the Library.

London Initiative Zone

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money allocated to the London initiative zone has been re-allocated to projects outside the London initiative zone area.

Dr. Mawhinney: Resources made available for the London initiative zone are allocated exclusively for use on projects within the zone area.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was allocated in revenue and capital, for the current financial year to the London initiative zone; and how much remained uncommitted on 1 March.

Dr. Mawhinney: The total resources of £40 million identified for the London initiative zone in 1993-94 was initially split between £20 million capital and £20 million revenue. The resources are a combination of central funds and local contributions. The total central resources have been fully allocated to the Thames regional health authorities which have flexibility within LIZ to transfer resources between revenue and capital as necessary and have responsibility for allocations within their region.

Medium Secure Beds

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what date the planned 1,000 medium secure beds will be available.

Mr. Bowis: There are currently over 600 medium secure unit beds available. A further 580 additional beds are planned nationally and we expect these to be open by 1996, taking the total to over 1,200.

Ritchie Report

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consult the Secretary of State for the Home Department and police representatives following the recommendation in the Ritchie report that procedures and documentation relating to section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983 should be standardised.

Mr. Bowis: We are considering this and other relevant recommendations of the report in consultation with the Home Department.

Mental Illness

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to achieve significant improvement in the social functioning of mentally ill people.

Mr. Bowis: We plan to secure signficant improvements in the social functioning of mentally ill people by improving information and understanding of mental illness, developing comprehensive local services for mentally ill people, and continuing the development of good practice in the management of mental illness. The mental illness specific grant introduced in 1991 and increased to £36 million for 1994-95 is designed to help local authorities develop services to improve the social functioning of people with a mental illness. It has already supported over 800 projects, helping 64,000 people. Overall spending on mental health is over £2 billion per year.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will inquire into the care and treatment of psychiatric patients attending accident and emergency units at general hospitals.

Mr. Bowis: A number of initiatives are taking place which are examining the range of service provision available for the mentally ill including the provision of emergency care in accident and emergency departments.

Salmonella

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of salmonella enteritidis food poisoning were recorded monthly in each year since 1988 (a) in total and (b) by health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library.

Although there was a 1 per cent. increase in the number of salmonella enteritidis reports between 1992 and 1993, during the same period the number of cases of human illness from all salmonellas dropped by 2 per cent.

Guy's Hospital

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the evidence on which the decision to close Guy's hospital was based.

Dr. Mawhinney: No decision has been made to close Guy's hospital.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what implications the proposed changes at Guy's hospital, south London, will have on the meeting of targets set by her patients charter initiative.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the responsibility of local health authorities working with the trust to ensure that patients charter standards are met. Local health authorities and clinicians at the trust have argued strongly that patient care would be improved by concentrating clinical services on one site.

Blood

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent England has been self-sufficient in blood supplies in each of the past five years; and how any surplus has been used or any deficit met.

Mr. Sackville: In general, England has been self-sufficient in blood. Blood has a limited shelf life. Collections by the National Blood Transfusion Service are geared to maintaining that sufficiency and not to providing blood surplus to our requirements. Short-term deficits in supply have occasionally been met by obtaining blood from other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what quantity of blood donated through the Blood Transfusion Service has gone to the private health sector in each of the last five years; and what proportion this forms of total donations.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available. Much of the donated blood is processed and supplied to various users in a range of different forms.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 15 March, Official Report, c. 567, for information about the percentage of whole blood supplied to the private sector.

Mersey Regional Health Authority

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current age and salary of the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority; and how many days, or part days absence from work he has taken in the last 12 months for (a) holiday, (b) sickness, (c) business and (d) other reasons.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Donald Wilson is 71 and as chairman of Mersey regional health authority receives an annual remuneration of £20,925.

Information concerning Sir Donald's attendance is not available centrally.

Private Patients' Fees

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total of private patients' fees outstanding at the end of each financial year since 1979 for each regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available in the form requested. This is a matter for the individual health authorities and trusts.

Private Practice Earnings Limits

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received advocating reappraisal of the private practice earnings limits of consultants employed in the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: There have been discussions with the medical profession about the application of the 10 per cent. limit on private practice earnings.

Equipment (NHS Hospitals)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of theft and unauthorised borrowing of equipment from NHS hospitals by private medical service providers and those engaged in private medical practice for each of the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally; however, national health service trusts are expected to maintain procedures which take account of all possible losses and safeguard public assets.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will list those concessions and rebates applicable to owners of private residential homes available under the Disabled Persons Act 1978.

Mr. Bowis: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible, if he will clarify which Act he has in mind, there being no Disabled Persons Act 1978.

Gender Selection

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to extending the power of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Agency to cover clinics which offer gender selection for social reasons.

Mr. Sackville: Sperm separation techniques used at clinics offering sex selection, for social reasons are considered to have no scientific basis. There are no plans for legislation to extend the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's powers in this area.

Child Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide, for the United Kingdom and each local authority in the United Kingdom, latest estimates of (a) the number of full-time child care places, including nursery school places, for children under five, (b) the number of part-time child care places, including nursery school places, for children under five, (c) the total number of full-time and part-time child care places, including nursery school places, for children under five, (d the number of children under five and (e) the percentage of children under five who have a full-time or part-time child care place.

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 11 March 1994]: Information on places and percentages of children is not availble in the form requested, as figures on day care and nursery schools are collected on a different basis.

The latest information available centrally about the number of day care places for the under fives is as follows:

— for England, in "Children's day care facilities at 31 March 1992, England". This includes information about the number of places in relation to the population under five expressed as a rate per 1,000 children for each local authority; — for Scotland, in "Statistical Bulletin Services for Children 1991 and 1992" (but exclude an estimated 6,500 places in day nurseries, children's centres and family centres in the registered sector).

— for Wales, in "Activities of Social Services Departments: Year ended 31/3/92"; and,

— for Northern Ireland, copies of this information will be placed in the Library.

Information collected centrally does not separately identify full-time and part-time places. Information about nursery school provision is collected in England by the Department for Education whose statistical bulletin 11/93 "Pupils under five years of age in schools in England—January 1992", shows the information available for January 1992 about participation rates of children under five being taught in maintained nursery schools and classes, independent schools and special schools. For figures about the provision of nursery education in maintained nursery and primary schools January 1993 in England I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Education gave to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 21 January, Official Report, columns 857-59.

Figures for nursery schools in Wales are given in "Statistics of Education and Training in Wales: Schools No. 2 1994", figures for Scotland are given in "Statistical Bulletin Provision for Preschool Children No. Edn/A/1992/11" and for Northern Ireland will be placed in the Library.

Copies of all the relevant publications are in the Library.

Population figures at 30 June 1991 and 30 June 1992 by local authority, which are appropriate to the different types of day care and nursery school provision described in these publications, will be placed in the Library.

NHS Employees

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will seek to amend the wording of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to clarify the position with regard to the continuity of redundancy and unfair dismissal rights of NHS employees whose employer is transferring to trust status and whose contract contains a mobility clause, permitting or requiring them to work at more than one site;

(2) what assessment has been made by her Department of the implications of the Employment Appeals Tribunal verdict in the case of Northern general hospital NHS trust v. Gale for the continuity of redundancy and unfair dismissal rights of NHS employees whose employer is transferring to trust status and whose contract contains a mobility clause, permitting or requiring them to work at more than one site.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 March 1994]: The National Health Service Management Executive has considered the employment appeal tribunal judgment and concluded that consequential amendments to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 are not required.

Section 6(1)(b) of this Act provides for the employment rights of any person employed by a health authority who is working at more than one unit to be protected on transfer to a trust if that person is designated under a "scheme" made by the health authority specified in the establishment order of a trust.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fines (Non-Payment)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of people imprisoned for non-payment of fines or other debts due to magistrates courts during the most recent year for which records are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 18 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question asking what was the total number of people imprisoned for non-payment of fines or other debts due to magistrates courts during the most recent year for which records are available.

The latest available provisional information is for 1993. During that year 22,754 persons were received into Prison service establishments in England and Wales from Magistrates courts for non-payment of fines and non-criminal offences involving non-payment of debt: (these include non-payment of wife maintenance, child maintenance, arrears under an affiliation order, rates/community charge or "other" debts).

Receptions[2] into Prison Service establishments, England and Wales by type of custody, 1992-93[1]

Type of custody	Year 1992	1993
Males
Untried[2]	47,593	51,047
Convicted unsentenced[2]	19,099	30,038

[1] Provisional figures.

[2] A person initially received as untried and subsequently received as convicted unsentenced is counted in both sets of figures. A person subsequently received as a sentenced prisoner is counted separately in those figures.

Open Government

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the implications for the operation of his Department of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Howard: The code of practice will reinforce and build on my Department's existing arrangements for the provision of information. Arrangements are being made to implement the code in the Home Office and a copy of the guidance notes on these arrangements will be placed in the Library of the House following publication of the code of practice.

Equal Opportunities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the key recommendations of the Black Training and Enterprise Group in the Department of Environment's draft bidding guidance for the single regeneration budget; if he will make it his policy that projects in disadvantaged black communities currently funded under section 11 or via the ethnic minority grant will be protected; and if he will reconsider his decision to abolish the ethnic minority grant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be taking into account all responses received in relation to the draft bidding guidance document circulated by his Department, including that of the Black Training and Enterprise Group. We have been pleased to note the group's positive comments about the ethnic minority grant which we introduced. We consider that it is entirely right that the funding of such activities should be embraced by the single regeneration budget in future.

Mrs. Sandra Howard

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department was informed of the reasons why Mrs. Sandra Howard was recently rejected as a magistrate by the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee; how such information was communicated; by whom; to whom; and under what authority.

Mr. Howard: The Lord Chancellor's advisory committee has not yet reached a final decision on the application by Mrs. Sandra Howard to become a magistrate.

Refusal of Entry

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it remains the practice for Ministers to accept written representation from hon. Members in cases where refusal of entry has occurred; what change there has been in this practice; and why hon. Members are advised to telephone the chief immigration officer when letters have been written in such cases to Ministers in his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As the power to admit or refuse entry to the United Kingdom is vested in the immigration officer, not Ministers, hon. Members are encouraged to contact the Immigration Service direct to make representations. Written representations submitted to Ministers which the Immigration Service has not had the opportunity to consider are sent to the port concerned for consideration. Ministers will become involved only if the hon. Member has new and compelling information which the Immigration Service believes is not strong enough to overturn a decision to refuse entry. The practice has existed since 1989.

Manslaughter

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were (a) charged, (b) prosecuted and (c) convicted of manslaughter in each of the last three years in cases which involved the suspects driving a motor vehicle.

Mr. Maclean: The following table gives the information requested:

Persons dealt with for offences of manslaughter where the driving of a motor vehicle was involved—England and Wales

	Charged	Prosecuted	Convicted
1990	10	10	8
1991	12	10	3

In addition, a further two persons in 1990, two in 1991 and four in 1992 were convicted of manslaughter where the suspect was driving a motor vehicle, but where the charges and prosecutions had been for offences of murder.

Figures are as at 27 August 1993; they are subject to revision as cases are dealt with by the police and the courts, or as further information becomes available.

Information for 1993 is not yet available.

Campsfield House Detention Centre

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many detainees of Campsfield House detention centre are (a) asylum seekers, (b) appellants against refusal and (c) awaiting deportation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance has been issued to staff at Campsfield House detention centre where detainees refuse food.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Guidance based on Prison Service procedures has been issued to staff at the Campsfield House detention centre responsible for the care of those detainees refusing food. An immigration detainee refusing food for more than three days is offered advice and treatment by the Campsfield House medical team and this is repeated on a daily basis as part of the detailed monitoring of the individual's medical condition. Treatment would be administered only with the individual's consent.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of detainees held at Campsfield House detention centre by (a) country of origin, (b) those held for less than one month, (c) one to six months and (d) more than six months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in respect of detainees held at Campsfield House on 15 March 1994.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he first received reports of hunger strikes at Campsfield House detention centre.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 18 February 1994.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 28 February, Official Report, column 580, what estimates he has made of the cost of criminal injuries compensation in 1995-96 and 1996-97.

Mr. Maclean: The latest estimates of spend on criminal injuries compensation in 1995-96 and 1996-97, in cash terms, are £209 million and £152 million respectively.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of claimants who will receive (a) between one half and two thirds and (b) less than half the amount of compensation under his proposed scheme for compensation than under the current scheme.

Mr. Maclean: Based on the data acquired from the case sampling survey undertaken to establish the tariff scheme it has been estimated that about 8 per cent. of beneficiaries under the tariff scheme could receive between half and less than two thirds of what they might have expected under the current scheme, and about 11 per cent. could receive less than half.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions he has made for training the employees of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board before the new compensation scheme is applied on 1 April.

Mr. Maclean: Many of the staff of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, who will in future serve the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority, are already familiar with the provisions of the tariff scheme because of their involvement in the preparation of the detailed rules and guidance for it, much of which reflects the provisions of the current scheme. A training programme, which is currently running, is intended to ensure that sufficient numbers are equipped to deal expeditiously with the first cases received on or after 1 April.

Security Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the functions of the Security Service relate to the official functions of the Secret Intelligence Service and GCHQ.

Mr. Howard: The functions of the Security Service are set out in the Security Service Act 1989 and those of the Secret Intelligence Service and GCHQ in the Intelligence Services Bill, which is currently before Parliament. Further details of the agencies' functions are set out in the "Central Intelligence Machinery" booklet which is available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

National Anti-vivisection Society

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent investigation by the National Anti-vivisection Society into St. Mary's hospital medical school and Toxicol Laboratories Ltd.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have asked the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate for a report on the allegations made.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 481, what is the range of all actual rents paid at each of the royal palaces for all accommodation; how many heads of department in the royal household have furnishing costs paid by his Department; and how much has been spent in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sproat: I will reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 611, what in money terms is the range of all those actual rental payments for grace and favour accommodation in the occupied royal palaces; how many rents make up the £69,000; how much relates to each palace; how much of the rent is received by the royal household and how much by his Department; and by what criteria it is determined which rentals are paid to the royal household and which to the Department.

Mr. Sproat: I will reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Libraries (Donations)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what restrictions currently exist to prevent libraries from accepting donations from members of the public to support book-buying; and in what ways donations from the public can be made to public libraries.

Mr. Sproat: Public libraries are free to accept donations from members of the public and it is common for libraries to receive donations of books and other materials as well as bequests. In seeking to encourage donations, however, a public library authority would have to bear in mind its statutory obligation under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 not to charge for its book lending and reference service.

Playing Fields

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many London playing fields are listed in the register of playing fields.

Mr. Brooke: The register of recreational land lists 5,191 pitches on 1,288 sites in Greater London.

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many playing fields are listed in the London borough of Lambeth.

Mr. Brooke: The register of recreational land lists 69 playing pitches on 10 sites in the London borough of Lambeth.

National Lottery

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list, for each of the five bodies chosen by him as channels of distribution for the proceeds of the national lottery (a) the number of staff who will be employed in the lottery unit, (b) the estimated annual salaries bill for these staff and (c) the estimated annual overheads for each lottery unit.

Mr. Brooke: The distributing bodies named in section 23 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 are currently developing their administrative arrangements for handling applications for lottery funds. It is too early to make estimates of the total number of staff that will be required or the total costs involved.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure that are women.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 17 March 1994]: The total number of staff by grade and the percentage of women in each grade within the Department of National Heritage excluding its two executive agencies, the Historic Royal Palaces and the Royal Parks, are listed in the following table:

SCOTLAND

Scottish Homes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by Scottish Homes in each of the last five financial years on the purchase and distribution of (a) golf balls, (b) umbrellas, (c) sweat shirts, (d) scarves and (e) ties marked with a Scottish Homes imprint or logo.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Forestry Review Group

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland further to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 376, if he will say which Ministers were represented on the forestry review group.

Sir Hector Monro: The forestry review group comprised officials from the Scottish Office, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Welsh Office, the Forestry Commission, the Department of the Environment, HM Treasury, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Prime Minister's policy unit.

Public Bodies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each organisation, agency and body for which he has responsibility for the appointment of members; if he will list the number of appointments he makes to each body; if he will list other organisations which have the right of appointment to any of these bodies; if he will publish a table showing the (a) name of, (b) occupation or former occupation of, (c) salary, honorarium or annual payment made to and (d) date of appointment of each member; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 February 1994]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Details of membership of those bodies listed in the publication "Public Bodies" are normally available in their annual reports, as indicated in the publication. The latest edition of "Public Bodies" is available in the Library of the House. Public bodies should always be ready to provide a list of their membership and the organisation's postal address at which members may be contacted.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 471, when he expects to be able to announce publication of a document for Scotland similar to that published by the Secretary of State for Wales entitled, "Public Bodies: Appointments made by the Secretary of State for Wales" which would list detailed information concerning appointments made to public bodies in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1994]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Details of membership of those bodies listed in the publication "Public Bodies" are normally available in their annual reports, as indicated in the publication. The latest edition of "Public Bodies" is available in the Library of the House. Public bodies should always be ready to provide a list of their membership and the organisation's postal address at which members may be contacted.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of three and four-year-old children in the Borders and Lothian regions are in maintained sector education.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 March 1994]: The latest available information for September 1993, shows, provisionally, that the percentages of the three and four-year-old population attending education authority nursery, primary and special schools in Borders and Lothian regions are 27·8 per cent. and 56·9 per cent. respectively. Because many nursery schools admit pupils during the school year, final figures for session 1993-94 are expected to be higher.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Imports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live sheep have been imported from (a) Poland and (b) Spain during (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994; how many of the animals from each country have been condemned as unfit for human consumption; how many suffered from caseous lymphadenitis; what assessment he has made of the risk of that condition being spread to United Kingdom sheep; if it is a contagious diseases; and how many died in transit.

Mr. Soames: In 1993 one consignment, consisting of 201 sheep, was imported from Spain. There were no imports from Poland. To date in 1994 three consignments, comprising a total of 722 sheep, have been imported from Spain and three consignments, totalling 917 sheep, have been imported from Poland.

Information on the numbers of carcases from each consignment which were condemned as unfit for human consumption is not available centrally.

Information available to date indicates that evidence of caseous lymphadenitis was found at post-mortem inspection in a small number of animals in one of the consignments from Spain and in two of the consignments from Poland. Caseous lymphadenitis is a contagious disease which is common throughout the world wherever sheep are raised. Caseous lymphadenitis does occur in sheep in this country but it is not a notifiable disease. As all the sheep imported so far into Great Britain from Spain and Poland were sheep for immediate slaughter, there is no risk of their spreading caseous lymphadenitis to United Kingdom sheep.

One sheep from Spain and two from Poland—in one consignment—were found to be dead on arrival.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks were made in the case of each consignment of live sheep imported from Poland and Spain in 1993 and 1994 that a route plan had been drawn up and that the animals had been fed and watered as required by directive 91/628/EEC; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Checks are carried out at the place of destination to ensure that Community health and welfare requirements have been met in accordance with the EC veterinary checks directives 90/425 and 91/496 and the protection of animals during transport directive 91/628. An inspection must also be carried out at the place of departure, or place of entry into the Community.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the transmission of bovine spongiform encephalopathy from cows to their offspring and the evidence for the possibility of this.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Minister gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Dr. Strang) on 21 February, Official Report, column 72.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for Humberside and the three Yorkshire counties how many cows in herds tested proved bovine immunodeficiency virus positive in the latest convenient period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: During limited work on the development of a serological test for bovine immunodeficiency virus carried out by the Department's Central Veterinary Laboratory in 1990, blood samples from 31 cattle in Humberside and the counties of Yorkshire were tested and one was found to be seropositive to the test which was used. These results have not been validated. Clinical disease caused by infection with BIV has never been identified in Great Britain.

Agricultural Imports

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what would be the annual cost to the United Kingdom producers of removing quantitative restrictions, customs duties and import levies on the agricultural products listed in annex to article 21 and protocol 3 of the European agreements with the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Bulgaria and Romania.

Mr. Soames: The provisions of Article 21 and protocol No. 3 of each of these agreements are already in place, along with all other trade arrangements set out in the Europe agreements. There is no evidence that those have had a direct impact on the costs of United Kingdom producers of the commodities concerned. If markets for any of the products covered by the agreements were to be seriously undermined as a result of the concessionary import terms, the possibility exists of taking safeguard action.

Poultry Slaughtering

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many poultry (a) flocks and (b) birds were slaughtered in each year since 1988 and in 1994 to date.

Mr. Soames: The numbers of poultry flocks and birds compulsorily slaughtered in Great Britain because of salmonella infection each year since the introduction of the policy in March 1989 are set out in the following table.

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	Total
Flocks slaughtered
Layers	81	68	62	53	8	0	272

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been paid since 31 March 1993, as compensation to farmers for slaughtered poultry; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Since 31 March 1993, £436,431 has been paid in compensation for poultry flocks compulsorily slaughtered because of confirmed salmonella infection.

In July 1993, the Government announced that they had reviewed the existing legislative provisions for compensation in respect of slaughtered poultry and concluded that they found an unsatisfactory basis for dealing with poultry slaughtered because of salmonella infection. They therefore proposed to amend the Animal Health Act 1981, following consultation with industry, so as to provide a clear statutory basis for the payment of compensation for salmonella infected birds. In the meantime, the Government would pay full compensation for all birds compulsorily slaughtered because of salmonella. Payments made to all owners of flocks slaughtered since the policy began in March 1989 were adjusted in August 1993 at a cost of £1,048,768.

Animal Transportation

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animals imported from (a) Poland and (b) Spain were inspected at British ports in the last year; what involvement the staff had in these inspections; and what action is being taken to protect the welfare of any future animals imported from Poland and Spain.

Mr. Soames: In the last year there have been no inspections at British ports of animals imported from Poland or Spain. Inspections are carried out at the place of destination to ensure that welfare and health requirements have been met. An inspection must also be carried out at the place of departure, or place of entry to the EC. We have asked the German authorities to ensure that all consignments of sheep entering the Community from Poland are subject to rigorous checks.

Open Government

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the implications for the operation of her Department of the code of practice on open government.

Mr. Jack: The application of the code will involve the allocation of some extra resources to this task, but this will be limited since in general it is consistent with the Ministry's existing arrangements for the provision of information.

Eggs

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what were the figures for egg consumption in each county of the United Kingdom for each year since 1988;

(2) what were the annual figures for egg consumption in (a) the north, (b) the south, (c) the east and (d) the west of England for each year since 1988;

(3) what were the figures for egg consumption in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) England for each year since 1988.

Mr. Jack: Estimates of household consumption of eggs are provided by the Ministry's national food survey, which covers households in Great Britain, but not Northern Ireland. This survey provides estimates for each country within Great Britain and for each standard region within England, but not for each county. The estimates, which are expressed in terms of average numbers of eggs per person per week, exclude eggs used in manufacturing or catering and institutions.

North-east Drift Net Fishery

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer to the right hon. Member for Woking (Sir C. Onslow) on 1 March, Official Report, column 645, what arrangements she has made to consult representatives of north-east drift net fishermen about proposals to extend the close season for the fishery.

Mr. Jack: As I previously indicated, we are currently considering a request that the opening date for the north-east coast salmon drift net fishery be postponed. If we conclude that there is a case for a change in the current arrangements, we will ensure that those affected are consulted before any decisions are taken. They would, in addition, have the opportunity to object formally to the proposed byelaw when it was published, and any such objections would be taken into account by the Minister when deciding whether or not it should be confirmed.

Less-favoured Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 592, if she will provide the same information from the annual farm census for farms within an area coterminous with each of the local surveys conducted by the universities and colleges in connection with the annual farm business survey.

Mrs. Shephard [holding answer 10 March 1994]: The information requested is shown in the following tables for those farms covered by the Farm Business Survey, that is, larger than eight ESU classified in the June 1992 agricultural census as cattle and sheep farms in the less-favoured areas as a whole or in the severely disadvantaged areas. Unweighted farm business survey results do not provide valid estimates for comparison with census results.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Metric Weights

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the amendment to the Price Marking Order 1991 in respect of shops switching from imperial to metric weights for certain categories of foods.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is my intention that legislation amending the Price Marking Order 1991 should be laid in Parliament before the summer recess as part of a set of measures implementing the units of measurement directive.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to ask the EC for a further derogation to avoid the final stage, on 1 January 2000, of switching to metric weight for goods sold loose.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no plans at present to seek a further derogation.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide an early public information programme to help consumers understand the switch to metric weights on 1 January 1995.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are considering what, if any, public information programme should be provided to supplement any action taken by retailers.

Biotechnology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the expenditure on, and the results of, the "biotechnology means business" programme; and what future proposals he has for technology transfer in biotechnology.

Mr. Sainsbury: The DTI's expenditure on the "biotechnology means business" awareness-raising programme amounted to £420,000. The pilot campaign reached an audience of some 30,000 companies, nine regional seminars were held and 557 expressions of interest from companies resulted. The pilot has confirmed the value of promoting awareness of commercial opportunities of biotechnology and a successor initiative is under consideration.

The Independent

Mr. Moss: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a further statement on the proposed transfer of The Independent.

Mr. Heseltine: Pursuant to the reply given on 24 February, Official Report, column 317. Following a period of consultation in which interested parties had the opportunity to submit comments, I can now announce my decisions.

The first application related to an offer made for all of the shares in Newspaper Publishing, owner of The Independent and The Independent on Sunday, by a consortium comprising Promotora de Informaciones, Espresso International Holding and Mirror Group Newspapers. My consent was sought without an inquiry by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under section 58(3)(a) of the Fair Trading Act 1973.

In the light of the inquiries which my Department has conducted into the financial position of Newspaper Publishing, and of representations received by my Department during the consultation phase, I am satisfied that The Independent and The Independent on Sunday titles are not economic as going concerns and as separate newspapers and that, if the papers are to continue, the case is one of urgency. I have in addition decided to exercise the discretion given to me under section 58(3)(a) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 to give consent to the consortium's offer for Newspaper Publishing without a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

The second application, from Independent Newspapers plc of Ireland was similarly based on section 58(3)(a) but related to an increase in the level of its shareholding above the level which triggers the need for my consent.

Having regard to the financial analysis to which I have referred, and to representations on this application received during the consultation phase, I am satisfied that the criteria set out in section 58(3)(a) are met in relation to this application also. I accordingly give my consent to the increased shareholding in Newspaper Publishing by Independent Newspapers plc without a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

I have considered whether my consent in relation to either or both of these applications should be qualified by conditions, including in relation to editorial independence. Usually the relationship between publisher and editor is defined contractually in the light of the publisher's appraisal of the market opportunity. I have concluded that, in this case, the public interest does not require me to take a different view or to stipulate conditions in relation to either application.

The consortium's offer for Newspaper Publishing has also been cleared by the EC Commission under the European Community merger regulation.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Martlew: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects for which he gave approval under the non-fossil fuel obligation in (a) the first tranche and (b) the second tranche giving (i) the type of project and (ii) the country in which it is located; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 17 March 1994]: Full lists of all projects which gained contracts under the first two renewables orders are given in the press releases issued by the Office of Electricity Regulation on 3 October 1990 and 6 November 1991 respectively, copies of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

British Coal Privatisation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what budget provision he has made in 1993-94 for consultations in connection with the restructuring and privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: There is no separately identifiable budget for consultations in connection with the restructuring and privatisation of British Coal. However, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 19 January 1994, Official Report, column 649, which gave the 1993-94 provision for consultancies.

WALES

NHS Management Vacancies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from (a) the Institute of Health Services Management and (b) others in relation to the approval of systems set up to approve the advertising and filling of clerical and management vacancies in the NHS in Wales; how many clerical staff are required within his Department to operate this approved system; and what reporting system to Ministers has been set up to monitor the success of his system.

Mr. Redwood: I have not received direct representations from the Institute of Health Service Management but I have discussed the matter with chairmen of health authorities. The amount of clerical staff time involved is minimal and NHS management staff numbers are routinely collected on a quarterly basis which will enable monitoring to take place.

Health Policy Division Merger

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 634, what consequential amendments in the accounting and audit trail within his Department will arise from the merging of the health policy division previously accountable via the permanent secretary with the NHS directorate in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Accountability for the Welsh Office's votes will be set out in the supply estimates to be published on 24 March.

Groundwater Notices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the Ordnance Survey maps used in issuing the groundwater notices and covering letters, both as to dates of survey maps used, breaches of copyright and the compensation fee paid to the Ordnance Survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the percentage of this figure who are women.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 March 1994]: The position at 1 January 1994 is given in the following table:

Grade	Total in Grade	Female Percentage of Total
Grade 1	1	0
Grade 2 and equivalent	2	0
Grade 3 and equivalent	13	8
Grade 4 and equivalent	6	33
Grade 5 and equivalent	60	15
Grade 6 and equivalent	76	18
Grade 7 and equivalent	195	27
SBO and equivalent	146	18
HBO and equivalent	307	36
AT/HBO'Ds and equivalent	23	52
EO and equivalent	496	58
AO and equivalent	662	72
AA and equivalent	491	63
Total	2,479	53

Footnote:
(i) Part-time staff are counted as one.
(ii) Figures exclude casual staff.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what indemnities have been sought by the Balfour Beatty-Costain consortium in relation to the construction contract for the Cardiff bay barrage.

Mr. Redwood: Balfour Beatty and Costain sought clarification from the corporation of the funding arrangements which would apply if Cardiff Bay development corporation were to be dissolved before the construction contract ended. Their attention has now been drawn to the legislation relating to the dissolution of urban development corporations. No indemnity has been given.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 239

SESSION 1993–94

7th March, 1994—18th March, 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
